SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS
NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM,
AUTHOR OF
"Christ our Light," "The Highway of Holiness," etc., etc.

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural."
The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel, and will do anyone good who reads it."
Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny book."—Penuel.

THE "PRINCE" HERESY.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS of the HERESY of Rev. H. J. PRINCE.

By ARTHUR AUGUSTUS REES, Brother-in-law to Rev. H. J. PRINCE, and late Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland. Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

"As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the Blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

"Thus fell that dear child of God, HENRY JAMES PRINCE; and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him."—Extract.

WORDS OF WARNING in reference to the TEACHING OF THE "AGAPEMONE."

By Rev. D. B. HANKIN, Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. Price 1s. per 100; 7s. 6d. per 1000.

"I desire to lift up my voice against his [Mr. Prince's] teaching, and I declare that the 'Agapemone' heresy is one of the vilest that has ever been foisted upon the Church of Christ. Mr. Prince claims to be the Holy Ghost personified, the introducer of a new dispensation; and assures his followers that whosoever believeth in him shall not die, but henceforth be without sickness or pain."—Extract.

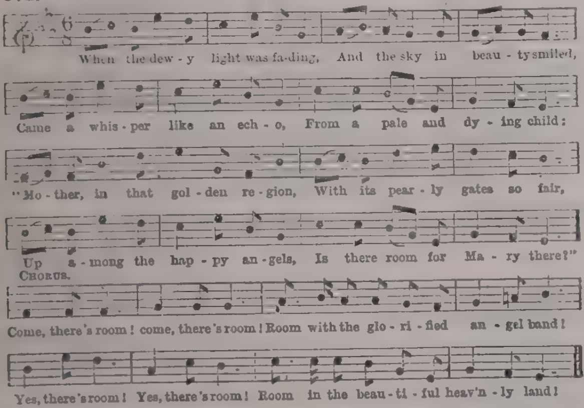
371. Little Mary.



When the dew - y light was fa-ding, And the sky in beau - ty smiled,
Came a whis - per like an ech - o, From a pale and dy - ing child:
"Mo - ther, in that gol - den re - gion, With its pear - ly gates so fair,
Up a - mong the hap - py an - gels, Is there room for Ma - ry there?"
Chorus.
Come, there's room! come, there's room! Room with the glo - ri - fied an - gel band!
Yes, there's room! Yes, there's room! Room in the beau - ti - ful heav'n - ly land!

"Mother, raise me just a moment;
You 'll forgive me when I say,
You were angry when you told me
I was always in your way.
You were sorry in a moment,
I could read it on your brow;
But you'll not recall it, mother,
You must never mind it now.

"When my baby sister calls me,
And you hear my voice no more,
When she plays among the roses
By our little cottage door,

Never chide her when you're angry,—
Do it kindly and in love,
That you both may dwell with Mary

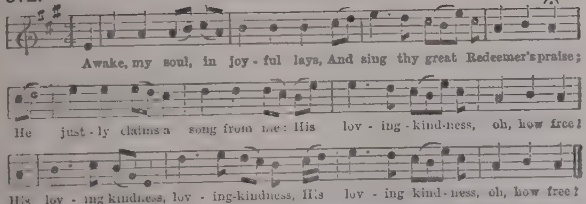
Then she plumed her snowy pinions,
Till she folded them to rest,
'Mid the welcome song of rapture,
On her loving Saviour's breast.
In the bright and golden region,
With its pearly gates so fair,
She is singing with the angels:
There is room for Mary there.

372. Loving-Kindness.



Awake, my soul, in joy - ful lays, And sing thy great Redeemer's praise;
He just - ly claims a song from me: His lov - ing - kind-ness, oh, how free!
His lov - ing kindness, lov - ing-kindness, His lov - ing kind - ness, oh, how free!

He saw me ruined by the Fall,
Yet loved me, notwithstanding all;
He saved me from my lost estate:
His loving-kindness, oh, how great!

Though numerous hosts of mighty foes,
Though earth and hell my way oppose,
He safely leads my soul along:
His loving-kindness, oh, how strong!

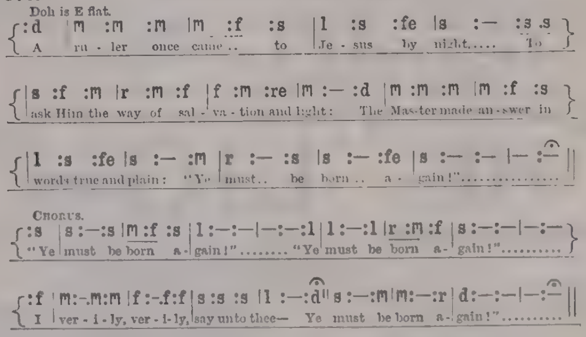
379. "Ye Must be Born Again."

Doh is E flat.



A ru - ler once came .. to Je - sus by night..... To ask Him the way of sal - va - tion and light: The Mas-ter made an - swer in words true and plain: "Ye must.. be born .. a - gain!"..............
Chorus.
"Ye must be born a - gain!"........ "Ye must be born a - gain!"..........
I ver - i - ly, ver - i - ly, say unto thee— Ye must be born a - gain!"..........

Ye children of men, attend to the word,
So solemnly uttered by Jesus the Lord:
And let not this message to you be in vain:
"Ye must be born again!" . . .

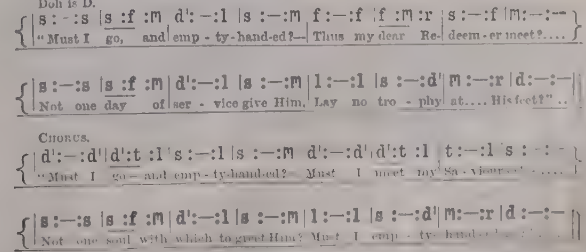
O ye who would enter this glorious rest,
And sing with the ransomed the songs of the blest;

The life everlasting if ye would obtain,
"Ye must be born again!" . . .

A dear one in heaven thy heart yearns to see,
At the beautiful gate may be watching for thee;
Then list to the note of this solemn refrain:
"Ye must be born again!" . . .

380. Must I Go—and Empty-Handed?

Doh is D.



"Must I go, and emp - ty-hand-ed?— Thus my dear Re - deem - er meet?....
Not one day of ser - vice give Him, Lay no tro - phy at.... His feet?"..
Chorus.
"Must I go—and emp - ty-hand-ed?— Must I meet my Sa - viour....
Not one soul with which to greet Him? Must I emp - ty - hand-ed .....

"Not at death I shrink or falter,
For my Saviour saves me now;
But to meet Him empty-handed!—
Thought of that now clouds my brow!

"Oh, the years of sinning wasted!—
Could I but recall them now,

I would give them to my Saviour:
To His will I'd gladly bow.

Oh, ye saints! arouse; be [illegible]!
Up and work while yet 'tis day,
Ere the night of death o'ertake you!
Strive for souls while yet you may.

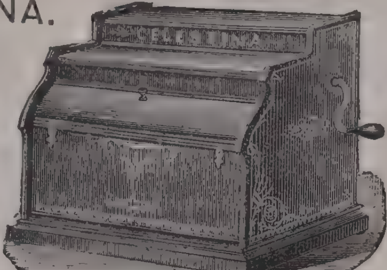
A REAL MUSICAL TREASURE.
THE CELESTINA.



Very suitable for Mission Halls, or Small Churches, or for Musical Drill.

This Charming Instrument performs every description of Music for Psalm, Song, March, or Dance, rivalling the most skilled musician. It plays thousands of tunes—there is no limit to the number.

It requires no knowledge of music on the part of the player, but can be played by anyone, even a child. The tone is rich, round, mellow, and very pleasing, blending beautifully with the human voice when singing. The tunes can be repeated as often as required; and the music is very cheap.

The Celestina is adapted to enliven the Home, and will be found extremely useful in conducting religious services, or for instructing Psalmody classes.

PRICE, packed in strong deal box, including One Roll of Tunes, £6 6s. 0d.
May be had on Easy Terms, or Discount for Cash. Smaller Instruments from £1 1s. 0d.

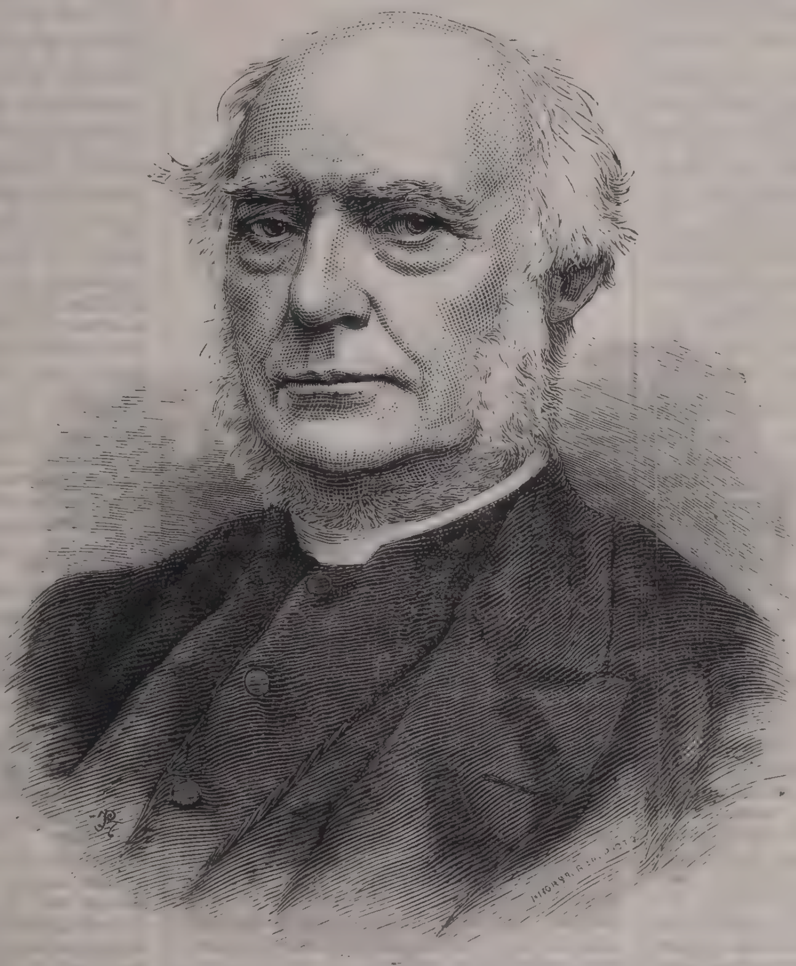
THE LATE

REV. DR. LINDSAY ALEXANDER.

IT is now more than two years since Dr. Lindsay Alexander passed to his rest and reward. He had been for nearly half a century a prominent figure in Edinburgh ecclesiastical life, and an unwearied worker for the promotion of Christ's kingdom on earth. The memory of what he was and did was beginning to fade in the memory of the public, but the appearance of his biography * has revived interest in him. The story of his life may be briefly told.

His father was a disciple of the Haldanes, pious in heart, and honourable in all his business transactions. The son received the benefits of a liberal education. The thirst for knowledge was strong in him, and wells to satisfy it were not wanting. In the preliminary schools of Leith and East Linton, and in the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrew's, he distinguished himself by his industry and facility in study. He was specially fond of Greek, and won from his professor the high praise of having been the best pupil he ever had. The crisis in his moral and intellectual progress was reached when he came under the influence of Chalmers, who at that time filled the Chair of Moral Philosophy at St. Andrew's. The fervour, eloquence, and intensely ethical glow of the renowned teacher were irresistible; he carried everything before him, and could move his students as none of his colleagues could. Devoted to those evangelical beliefs which afterwards made him the founder of a new denomination, he sought to stimulate the spiritual side of the nature of his scholars as well as the intellectual. This he did by interesting them in home mission work. He got them to go down to the poorer quarters of the town, visiting old people, and instructing the boys and girls in Bible truths, of which they were ignorant. Young Lindsay Alexander frequently accompanied him in his errands of mercy, and caught a spark of enthusiasm from the fire which burned in his breast. The lessons he learned thus were very helpful in quickening and strengthening his highest aspirations. They gave him an education he could not find in any classroom.



(From Photograph by Mr. J. Horsburgh, Edinburgh.)

One incident in these early experiences was never forgotten by him. It was lovingly told at many a fireside in later years, and served to point more than one Gospel appeal in the pulpit. Chalmers and he had gone to visit a poor, ignorant, old woman, who lay dying. She was hopeless about the future, and trembled at the prospect of meeting an unreconciled God. The Professor exhorted her to trust her soul to Christ, but she could not understand what he meant. In simple language he strove to make plain the way of salvation, but all was dark to her. Illustration after illustration, text after text, were quoted—in vain. She sorrowfully shook her head, and said she could not see it. At last, a happy thought struck the earnest missionary. Laying aside the use of English words, he addressed her in the Scottish dialect, with which she was more familiar. In homely terms, borrowed from the every-day vernacular of the peasantry, he explained the nature of faith in Christ. "Canna ye lippen to Him — canna ye lippen to Jesus Christ?" The Spirit of God used that simple expression for the conversion of the dying sinner. Light flashed in on her darkness, and the joy of the peace of God made her face shine. She "lippened" her soul to the Redeemer, and fell asleep trusting in his grace.

On completing his studies, Mr. Lindsay Alexander did not choose the ministry at once. For a time he was in doubt as to what profession he should select. He thought of the bar; he went so far in gaining the qualifications necessary for a doctor; and for some years he discharged the duties of classical tutor in the Lancashire College, Blackburn. While in the last office, he occasionally preached, but he had no intention of giving his life to the pulpit. A long and serious illness led him to change his mind. Eternity came very near to him. In its searching light the littleness of earthly ambition and the greatness of serving God dawned on him. He rose from the bed of sickness, resolved to obey the inner voice, which told him to take up his cross and follow Christ.

In 1835 he was called to the pastoral charge of a congregation in Edinburgh. The varied experiences of the past fitted him for the important work which now lay before him. He, like many others, could trace in the struggles and tasks of the past the hand of God fitting him for future service. He had been at school in the larger college of life, where the Divine Teacher trains his pupils. He found that, at the right time, and in the right way, he was led to the pulpit. There he was speedily at home. His chapel was a humble and moderately sized building, nestling under the western walls of the college. It was not prominently before the eye of the public, yet its pews soon got to be too crowded to be comfortable. Men came from other churches, and those who went to no church flocked to hear the preacher in whose sermons fidelity to Gospel truth was united to a rare breadth of culture. The old chapel was twice enlarged; but even that did not suffice. The crowds which gathered Sabbath by Sabbath steadily increased. A new church was felt to be a necessity, and steps were taken to build it. The end of these negotiations was the erection of the large and handsome Augustine Church in George IV. Bridge. In it Dr. Lindsay Alexander and his flock found a home.

It must be remembered that in these days the Independents were a small and unpopular sect in Scotland. The striking success of one of its ministers would be counted a marvel, were not its secret open to all. The light of the preacher was too brilliant to be clouded by prejudice. His gifts and graces won the admiring homage of the whole city. He was not one of those pulpit meteors which flash across the firmament, shine with dazzling radiance for a few months, and then vanish into darkness. He was rather a star which shone with steady brilliancy. He adopted no sensational methods, neither was he intoxicated by his popularity. Humbly and faithfully he strove to fulfil the duties of his high calling, as ever "in the great Taskmaster's eye." His sermons were mainly expository. They did not seek to tickle the ear, but to enlighten the understanding and feed the soul. He began by carefully explaining the meaning of the text chosen. His extensive and minute scholarship enabled him to interpret Scripture accurately. He was neither foolish nor pedantic enough to drag to the pulpit the processes by which he reached his conclusions; he gave his people only the results of his laborious investigations in the study. In calm and forceful language he discussed what he thought the proper exegesis of his subject; then, in earnest, and often impassioned eloquence, he applied its practical lessons. His elocutionary talents proved of great use to him. They won a careful hearing from those who otherwise would have been listless, and they emphasised his brilliant oratory. His very appearance in the pulpit singled him out from his brethren. Tall in figure, majestic in mien, with bright eyes and clear ringing voice, he looked a king of men. And kingly he was as he fearlessly proclaimed the eternal laws of righteousness, or told, in sweetly persuasive tones, the story of the love which stooped to the Cross to raise and save the fallen.

The long years passed swiftly and smoothly by. They were packed full of hard and self-denying work. Dr. Lindsay Alexander did not believe in laziness; activity was his life and pleasure. Happy in a service which taxed every power of body and mind, he was willing to spend and be spent in devotion to the pulpit. He was not a pastor in the ordinary acceptation of the word; he did not run about from house to house, calling on his people. To the sick and sorrowful he was always attentive; but he thought visiting those who were well and prosperous, a dawdling away of time which might be better employed. He was emphatically a man with one aim in life, and that the interpretation of Scripture. The resources of his culture and the strength of his intellect were devoted to patient, unwearying study of the Bible. The power of his ministry lay, in large measure, in his intimate acquaintance with the Book he loved to read, and to the illumination of which he gave himself so assiduously.

This aim made him a great preacher as well as a great expositor. His people were edified as much as they were delighted by his sermons. The Bible became a new book to them. Passages familiar to them from early infancy were invested with freshness and beauty. They went home filled with the desire to know more, and Sabbath evening was often spent in following out the suggestive thoughts about some chapter spoken in the morning's discourse. Thus the Augustine congregation grew to be a company of Bible-loving and Bible-reading men and women. Dr. Lindsay Alexander did more than expound; he also exhorted. His appeals to the undecided were powerful and moving. The writer has the privilege of knowing a member of the church which was the scene of this inspiring ministry. His recollections of the sainted divine are both interesting and instructive. Did our space permit it, we should record some of them; but this may not be. We must, however, state the fact that his most vivid memories are of sermons on simple Gospel texts, in which the grace of God and the love of the Saviour were set forth with a melting tenderness which softened hard hearts, and called tears to eyes not used to weeping. Knowing this, we cannot wonder that the preacher who excelled as an evangelist—in the broadest sense of the term—and as a teacher of the deeper truths of the Word of God, was for nearly fifty years a burning and a shining light in a city of great preachers.

Dr. Lindsay Alexander carried out the great task to which he had devoted his life by the pen as well as by the voice. He wrote much and well. His contributions to Biblical literature are of lasting value. Every theological student knows something about them, and many who have never set foot in a divinity hall are indebted to them for truer conceptions of the meaning and purpose of the Bible. Special praise ought to be given to his able defence of the historical value of the Pentateuch, when Bishop Colenso attacked it. Competent authorities did not hesitate to say that the orthodox minister was more than a match for the heterodox prelate, and hundreds of grateful readers felt thankful to God that He had raised up so bold a champion for the truth. It is worthy of notice that learned as Dr. Lindsay Alexander was, he disdained the use of scientific terms, which would be unintelligible to common readers. He wrote for the many, not for the few, so his words were simple. Their simplicity made them the more effectual in spreading a wider knowledge of the Scriptures throughout the homes of Scotland.

We cannot dwell on the public services Dr. Lindsay Alexander rendered, or the academic distinctions heaped on him in recognition of what he had done for theological teaching. We have called special attention to what we think the chief feature in his work—his passion for the interpretation of Scripture. On the death of Dr. Wardlaw in 1854 he was appointed to the vacant Chair of Theology in the hall where Congregational students were trained for the ministry. He was a most successful teacher, and his influence was most healthy. Active and useful pastors look back to days spent at his feet for the stimulus which has strengthened them to bear the heat and burden of pastoral duties. For years he continued to lecture as a professor in addition to his ordinary pulpit and literary labours; but some time before his death he was set free to give himself wholly to the loved task of teaching those who were themselves to be teachers. In 1870 he was invited to join the company of eminent scholars to whom the revision of the Old Testament was intrusted. This responsible honour was a fitting crown to a life spent in the elucidation of Scripture.

The end came quietly and happily on a December morning in 1884. He was not afraid to die. Trust in the Saviour robbed death of its sting, and transformed it into the messenger of release. The servant, wearied, not of, but in the Master's work, went from earth's imperfect service to that service beyond, which is perfect rest in perfect work.

Dr. Lindsay Alexander was a thoroughly loyal Independent, but he was no bigoted sectarian. He loved all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. His catholicity was a characteristic feature in his character. Though dignified and stately in manner, he was not pompous. In heart he was humble as a child. Reserved and almost cold to strangers, he was genial in private intercourse. He did not care much about society; the absorbing claims of his work led him to spend the greater part of his life in the study. But when he did mingle with his fellows he charmed them with the brilliancy of his talk and the easy grace with which he discussed the topics of the day. It is as an expositor he will be best remembered. He was without a peer in opening up new veins of thought in the Bible. This capacity was sanctified and strengthened by his unswerving trust in God. It made him a blessing to thousands while he was alive, and it will perpetuate his memory through years in which more showy rhetoricians of the pulpit will be forgotten.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS.

We live in times of immense conflict on this vital theme; and far be it from us to touch a subject so sacred with any rough or adventurous hand. What we propose in this article is to mirror such teaching on the theme of holiness, as the Word of God appears to us explicitly to yield.

The first thing to be noted is the Divine conception on this subject. Our God is holy; He is perfect; and if Kepler, when the maze of the planetary movements was being explicated into clearness before his gaze, fell down before Him with the cry, "O my God! my thoughts are with Thee," still more so may the Bible student, to whom it has been given in any measure to see the beauty of the holiness of the Most High in the firmament of Revelation, lie low at his feet. On no matter has Jehovah laid Himself out to make us the confidants of his thoughts so plainly as on the question of holiness.

An early deliverance may be cited; one which receives far-reaching and manifold Scriptural unfolding. We refer to the command: "And if thou make Me an altar of stone, thou shalt not make it of hewn stone; for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it (Exod. xx. 25). The meaning here is obviously this: that as the altar was a sacred thing, and stood for the acceptable in God's sight, so the only holiness in the sight of God is the holiness of the whole. Less than the whole means pollution in the sight of God. Hence the strict word of command in regard to the altar of stone. The Apostle James strikes the same key-note in the words, "He that offends in one point is guilty of all."

It is the most natural thing in the world for us to regard a person's good points as a balancing or overbalancing of his bad ones, and to draw our conclusions accordingly. But morality as outlined in Scripture is very incisive, and knows not how to spell the word accommodation. The moral law knows no reservation, because God is holy.

Our Lord's words on the occasion of his baptism are a further corroboration of this view of the question: "Suffer now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." Here the meaning is that as Christ was made under the law, He could not afford to let any point of duty slip; and, as the baptism of water was in the line of obedience, the whole result of righteousness would have been negatived had He neglected it. The Nazarite's vow is a further illustration of the same truth. It was because the holy is the whole that the Nazarite must not shave, or have his hair cut, or be deficient in any of his limbs, or marred by any blemish.

Furthermore, consecration yields the same results, being the call to give unto God our all: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies"—not your hands or feet merely, but your entire person—"a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. xii. 1).

> Take my life, and let it be > Consecrated, Lord, to Thee:
> Take my moments and my days,
> Let them flow in ceaseless praise.

But it may be asked, Is the holiness of the whole possible to man? We answer: To none, as the award of the law; and to anyone only in terms of grace. "By the works of the law no flesh living shall be justified." The law as it placards to view the holiness of God brings condemnation everywhere in its train. Yet every true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ is judicially holy, even unto perfection. It is impossible to have all one's sins judged in Christ, and an entire acquittal from the bar of God in consequence, without being, in the forensic sense of the term, perfectly holy. Whatever hard and bitter things the believer may write against himself, the blood of Christ sanctifies him; the Altar, Christ Jesus, maketh him whole. For it must not be forgotten that the altar of unhewn stone not only monumented the truth that in God's sight the holy is the whole; it also illustrated God's dealings in grace in making things that are not, as though they were. The altar was designed to communicate of its own perfectness to that which it received. Hence our Lord speaks of the altar as that which "sanctifies (or maketh whole) the gift."

And is not this a type of the believer's acceptance by God the Father in virtue of Christ the Son? Some in the present day dissever the question of holiness totally from standing in Christ. We dare not do so. He is our sanctification as well as justification. We are accepted, and altogether acceptable in God's sight, for his sake.

And what is the pledge of this? We answer, The permanent indwelling of the Holy Spirit. It is because the altar continually sanctifies, because the blood of the Great High Priest is ever effectual in its pleadings, that believers are temples, inhabitations, of God by his Spirit.

And to what does this point? We reply, Ultimate and entire perfection. That the believer has the earnest and guarantee, but not the consummated harvest, of this great blessing in this life, is, we cannot but believe, the distinct teaching of God's Word. Why should the believer's experience be described in terms of inner conflict, if no such experience is normal? We find that the inspired writer to the Hebrews, embracing all, not even excepting himself, says, "Laying aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us." But if the normal state be that of such entire inner emancipation as is described in many quarters, how are such words at all pertinent? Why say, "so easily beset us"? We cannot understand a man in whom the flesh or carnal nature is utterly extinct, so speaking of sin, and of his own relation to it.

In like manner, why should the Apostle Paul (Gal. v. 17) speak of the energetic operation of the Holy Ghost in the believer's soul, as the only and sole efficient cause of his resistance to the flesh, or carnal nature that is still in him, if that nature be in very deed annihilated? The true rendering of the passage is, "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other, in order that ye may not do the things that ye would." It is the same view of the situation which led David to pray, "Withdraw not thy Spirit from me, else I shall be like to those that go down to the pit." The idea is that holiness is due altogether to God working in us; that our flesh, or carnal nature, is ever active for evil, but the Holy Spirit is operative in the soul for Jesus' sake, to the intent that we may not do the things we otherwise would.

It is sometimes asked, Is not Christ a complete Redeemer? Why, then, may not the flesh be now annihilated, and the believer be perfectly holy in himself? The answer is, The day of complete redemption has not yet dawned. "We wait for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Meanwhile, if we walk in the Spirit, we shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh. And, what is more, we know that perfection is assured us in the covenant of grace. For, "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Jesus from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Y.W.C.A. WORK IN LONDON.

Wandering alone one Sunday afternoon, a girl from W—— is met by one of the members. Obliged to be out all day from the situation into which her country parents have ignorantly placed her, with no friends to whom she can go, her custom is to walk about. After a week's toil in a house where there is no one to help her, she finds her recreation in parading a London street. On the very spot where she stands many have been led away by fair promises, and she herself is on the point of making some dangerous acquaintance to avoid the ennui and loneliness of her Sundays in London. A Y.W.C.A. member hands her an invitation to the class and the cheerful tea provided for all who miss the comforts of home, but she can scarcely believe there are any who wish her well in this great city. Home Sunday occupations are well nigh forgotten, and it is some time before she can bew on to enter the Institute door! But when at last she does, ask her if her Sundays are lonely and dull. Ask her if she would again exchange a Sunday in the Institute for a Sunday on the street. She will tell you that now, at last, she can look forward to the Sunday and to the future with no fear, and look backward to her happy Christian home with fewer regrets.

Let us follow another member on this same Sunday afternoon. She, too, is after one of the stray lambs who may be found by thousands on a Sunday afternoon, crowding our thoroughfares, using language and seeing sights not befitting any young woman. She sees a pretty girl wandering alone; in a moment she follows and speaks to her, before one of those harpies who infest our streets can lead her away. She finds she has been brought up in —— School, but is now living in a Jewish family, with no help or sympathy of any kind. It is the work of a very few moments to lead her to the Institute, introduce her to its loving superintendent, and take her to the class of which she now is a bright and happy member.

In one of our London slums a poor widow is left destitute, with nine children. One of these, a girl of fifteen, is rescued from the lowest degradation of poverty by two Y.W.C.A. members working in an hotel, clothed at their expense, trained for service, and is now earning a respectable living.

The second sister, also exposed to danger, is next rescued by the same helping hands, and such is the high character borne by the members in the hotel, that she, too, is taken into service there. Thus both are saved from the almost certain ruin which threatens hundreds of girls, from the ages of twelve to fifteen, in the overcrowded dwellings of this city. But for the prompt exertions of these young women, both the poor children would by now be walking the streets—lost!

Such work is done in London day after day; in it we meet the most heart-rending cases of innocent, helpless girls, who have been drawn into the net of evil. Many have been providentially saved, many more we hope will be; but, alas! hundreds are lost, and, after a short, sad life, they die a terrible death. As one thinks of it, the heart does ache, and the eyes are often blinded with tears while the cry goes up, "God bless the work of the Y.W.C.A. more and more!"

The London Y.W.C.A. numbers 125 branches for girls at home, girls in business, girls in bars and restaurants, girls in service, and factory girls, so as to suit the varied needs of each

It takes a large originality to gain the public ear nowadays, especially in the direction of poetry, and most of all in that of religious poetry. So much of the latter is weak and commonplace; so much, in fact, merely respectable prose destroyed for want of a proper mould or sadder still, the afflatus which assists a race, but cannot sustain a flight. It is because it is thought that the little unpretentious book which is now brought before the reader is an exceedingly uncommon one that this paper—a mere post, with finger-marks to point the way—finds a place in these pages.

The short preface is not one that can be skipped without loss.

There is great spontaneity and gaiety in most of the poems; and while there is also "a linked sweetness," which makes separation for the sake of quotation a difficult and dangerous thing, as usual, yet many of the lines can very well afford to stand alone. To give, however, a few of the more striking passages—where so many are striking—is all that can be attempted.

It is astonishing how fine some of the lines are even in the swiftest part of our poet's work. Take for example—which brings heaven near us at once. He speaks, too, of "the hills' eternal leisure," an expression which would surely have caused Wordsworth's grave and majestic head to nod approval. "A Summer Benedicite" is rich in descriptive power, and easy expressiveness. How quickly and choicely come the similes towards the close of the stanza :—

> Behind the lattice work of time,

> Ye mountain streams that long unheard
> On mighty uplands slept unstirred,
> Now plunging past like shyest bird,
> Or shy souls known,
> Alas, when flown,
> Or poets buried to be heard!
> Ye too sing Benedicite.

Where shall we find as lovely a picture of true humility, and such love for "all creatures great and small," as in this :—

> Ye startled creatures of the wood,
> Fur faces that with timorous brood
> Start back!—we're all one brotherhood—
> Own one great Lord:
> Sit at one board,
> Guests too dependent to be rude!

Who would not like to see socialism of this sort increase and abound?

All life seems to interest the poet. There is no break in his sympathy. How felicitous the description of the furze seed-case breaking when over-ripe, in the same poem :—

> And ripe gorse seed
> Now snaps its fingers in the sun!

The lines on "The Skylark" are almost worthy of Henry Vaughan. It is difficult to say new things about the flight of the skylark, but the doctrine of compensation has never been preached in this connection ("the paragon of animals," as Hamlet calls man,—yet without wings!) with gladder, and yet more restful, heart-satisfaction than when it is said :—

> But though I may not climb the air,
> Behind the light's a secret stair
> Worn by the noiseless feet of prayer.

George Herbert might have written the opening of the lines to "The Rainbow:"—

> My God, is this thy bow,
> What must thine arrows be!

And what a fresh significance is given to the old promise in Gen. ix. 16 at their close :—

> Yea, most of all I love to see
> What God is gazing on with me!

If there is one of the shorter poems pre-eminent for delicate handling and tender tints—simple in the depths of its love-laden words—it is the "Child's Epitaph:"—

> When from the ark the timid dove
> Stepped softly forth with beaming eye,
> The patriarch watched with longing love,
> Until it melted in the sky—
> And it returned no more; ah, sweet "no more!"
> For then he knew that it had gained the shore.
> So my wee dove stole softly from my breast,
> And comes no more; she too hath found her rest!

Of a very different nature, yet charming in their abandonment to what is often called (not always correctly) a "happy thought," are such touches as that we get, for instance, in "The First Poppy:"—

> Yon barren bank's her chosen bed,
> Careless if sun or wind beat on it;
> Her loose red hood thrown o'er her head,
> My Gipsy in her scarlet bonnet!

Or again, look at the nimble and abundant power of the fancy, not spending itself in one well-born conceit, but in prodigality of light-hearted, child-like love of the thing depicted, finding its own easy expression, so to speak, in "The Mountain Harebell:"—

> Here below 'mid bramble thickets,
> Where white-morning mist still breathes,
> Large blue, dewy crowns entangled,
> Meekly gleam through armèd wreaths.
> There 'mid showers of mountain grasses,
> On yon ragged boundary wall,
> Like a wave of faint blue laughter,
> Bells and breezes rise and fall.
> Further still, 'mid those same grasses,
> Tip-toe on this self-same wall,
> Skyey groups are deftly playing
> Daintiest blue cup and ball!
> Higher yet, betwixt dark boulders,
> Where the torrent makes a gap,
> One alone has climbed in sunshine,
> Tossing high one faint blue cap!

Of graver beauty are such richly rounded truths as we have in "The Glow-worm:"—

> Day, searching for a worm, found what it sought,
> At best a beetle, as it blindly thought;
> But Night, which sees beyond this cloudy bar,
> Stooped fondly o'er thee, and beheld a star!

And in "The Tiger Moth:"—

> Darkness is God stooping o'er thee!

What a careless ease there is in "Wild Primroses in December:"—

> Faint hearts to slender hopes must cling,
> In hope is present strength:
> To catch the first faint gleam of spring
> Makes winter half its length.
> Seek the first gleam, so speed the spring,
> Not only wait but watch!
> Pray at the door of hope, and sing—
> Faith's finger on the latch!

Most travellers will admit the truth of the picture in "Tourists Classified;" and how smartly done it all is, as with a few well-designed strokes of the brush!—

> There are four sorts of tourists. The first "do" and dine,
> Tear and stare, chew and chatter,—active class this in fine.
> The second's the passive class—tourists on tail,
> Who sit through all beauty, by rail, mail, or sail!
> The third class, alas! is the worst of the lot—
> All labels, time-tables, note nothings! yet blot
> Reams of foolscap with jottings—all not worth a jot!
> The fourth class afresh from its Author receives
> Nature's book unadorned, letting God turn the leaves.

It would be a difficult thing indeed to find (out of Herbert) a better setting forth of the high seeming paradoxes of our religion than Mr. Fox gives us in "The Thistle:"—

> God's curse, how beautiful!
> Right regal this pink purple boss,
> Though set in thorns, yet soft as moss—
> A crown and cushion cool,
> Where clings the wild bee, probing far,
> All velvet black with honey-bar,—
> God's curse, how bountiful!
> O bee, suck honey from the curse!
> O cross, thou ladder to the crown,
> O wound that heals by making worse,
> Death dug the steps that brought Heaven down!
> O curse, O cure; O cross, sweet load!
> To live is Christ, to die is—God!
> Hail, blessed curse of sweat, thou costly oil,
> Crowning with consecration every toil!

To gather the very original, sometimes extremely subtle, and always helpful Christian philosophy which underlies many of Mr. Fox's musical messages to the men and women of his day must be left to the purchaser of the book itself. It is impossible to do anything further here than point out a few of the rare beauties in what seems to the writer to be the freshest, daintiest, and truthfulest Christian lyrics that have appeared these score of years or more.

GERMAN BAPTIST MISSION.

The Quarterly Reporter of this Mission gives some interesting accounts of work in various parts of Germany. The colporteurs are doing much, and in most places are well received. In one house in Bavaria, the books being spread out on the table, everyone present began to examine them. "I have chosen mine," said the eight-year-old daughter, holding up a New Testament. "I want this 'Daily Light,'" said the boy, who was older. "Look at this, 'Come to Jesus,' that is worth having," said the mother. "This little book, 'The Heart of Man,' I must read again," added the grandmother. In another house a woman who had lost her Bible, welcomed the colporteur as "an angel sent from God." Another colporteur writes: "The experience I had in this wonderful and mighty work was more sorrowful than joyous. For the most part I remarked a terrible ignorance and carelessness with regard to the way of salvation." He, however, sold eighty-four Bibles and one hundred and twenty-two Testaments in three months.

At Zelow, in Russian Poland, a church has now been formed, as the result of a revival sixteen years ago, when there arose, through the contact of the Bohemians with the German Baptists, a desire for the old truths which their fathers had sealed with their blood. Those who were then awakened have kept together, and after long sowing with tears, their prayers and faith have been rewarded by the addition of sixty souls during the last three years. And in August last the church was regularly constituted, with M. J. Hart as its pastor. The mission field occupied by this Society is very extensive, including the Russian provinces of Courland, Livonia, Esthonia and St. Petersburg, the South of Russia, Odessa, and other important places. At Cologne the services on Sundays are well attended, and on the week-day on an average twenty persons are present. At Mühlheim-on-the-Rhine a church is being built for the congregation.

CHRIST THE FULFILLER.[*]

In common with the other works of the learned Dr. Westcott, the present one exhibits upon every page—indeed, on every sentence—the finish of high culture. Our own impression is that in Dr. Westcott's case this difficult art is unduly elaborated. The delicacy of touch is often so delicate as to be really shadowy, and the expression of the thought so refined that we seem to be gazing more on a visionary haze than on the substantive being of aught that is. While readily granting that our judgment may be at fault, we cannot resist the impression that the influence by which Dr. Westcott's life is coloured and determined is mainly bookish. So far as books and the ideals embodied therein are concerned, Dr. Westcott is certainly abreast of the times, taking that phrase in its ordinary acceptation. But this kind of world is not the real world in which most men live; nor is any amount of acquaintance with it sufficient to enable the scholar to deal effectively with the problems of the age, or with Scriptural applications to the same. Apart, then, from the matter of this book, we feel that there is a lack in it which only a living and immediate knowledge of men and things could supply. "Christus Consummator" is emphatically a book for the scholastic world; for students whose study is their mart; for men of leisure, who can wrap themselves around with their own ideal creations, and those of men like-minded. For all others there will be a far-off-ness about it, a thinness amounting to vagueness, which will make it seem more like a distant echo than a living and present voice.

"Christus Consummator" is, however, a book with an aim, and that aim is instinct with the movement of nineteenth century thought. If Dr. Westcott is not a leader in the sense that Archdeacon Farrar is, he can certainly champion the cause of modern tendency in the scholastic world with a depth and subtlety that leave the brilliant Archdeacon nowhere. The design of this book is deeply laid, and the plot is skilfully wrought out. Briefly put, it is an attempt to make creation excel redemption; and the doctrine of the Incarnation eclipse that of the Cross. Undeterred by the absence of all Scriptural warrant, our author fashions such phrases as the "Gospel of Creation;" and to these, idola, as Bacon would say, of his own understanding, he mainly pays the homage of his soul. Dr. Westcott is too finished to hold controversy, and so all things take form in his hands by a soft movement. But the drift is unmistakable. The propitiatory character of the sufferings of Christ must give place, and another aspect of those sufferings, their value as a discipline for Christ's own humanity and through Him for humanity at large, must take the foreground.

Then follow developments of modern tendency scarcely less serious and mistaken. Howbeit, it is well our author should himself speak. Page 24: "The currents of theological speculation have led us to consider the sufferings of Christ in relation to God as a propitiation for sin rather than in relation to man as a discipline, a consummation of humanity." We should have liked this impeachment to have rested on some further ground than the author's own assertion. For our own part, we are not aware that "currents of theological speculation" have had anything to do with the matter. In so far as these are modern they have gone in a clean contrary direction. The true reason why God's children view the sufferings of Christ in the manner alleged is because they are constantly so placarded by the Holy Ghost in the inspired Word. "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood" (Rom. iii. 25).

Dr. Westcott assumes that we move "on surer ground when we endeavour to regard that perfect sacrifice from the other side, as the hallowing of every power of man under the circumstances of a sin-stained world, as the revelation of the mystery of sorrow and pain" (p. 25). But we fail to see that he supplies any clear Scriptural proof of his position. No doubt the pathway marked out for our Redeemer involved suffering, suffering all the way along, and, therefore, the obedience He learned was through suffering; but that does not justify the dictum that the sufferings of Christ constitute "the revelation of the mystery of sorrow and pain." What they do justify is the certainty that the conditions under which redemption had to be effectuated were bitter to sense—that the body prepared Him must needs be a body of sacrifice.

On page 28 we come to a series of statements presenting a tangled skein of thought not often matched. The question concerns what the Gospel really is:—

> For the most part we are tempted to look to the Gospel for the remission of the punishment of sins, and not for the remission of sins. But such a Gospel would be illusory. If the sin remains, punishment is the one hope of the sinner; if the sin is forgiven, and the light of the Father's love falls upon the penitent, the punishment which is seen as the expression of his righteous wisdom is borne with gladness.

The confusion of thought here is extraordinary. How can the punishment of sins be remitted, and the sins themselves retained? Surely God does not remit the punishment due to guilt, and yet keep on attaching the guilt to the person concerned. The very idea is monstrous. It must needs be that when punishment is remitted, the sin to which it belonged is remitted also. Every pardoned sinner knows that he is set free from punishment, and that he is set free also from the guilt that called for punishment. The illusory Gospel of which Dr. Westcott speaks is a mere cobweb of subtle fancy.

But what are we to think of the further allegation which represents punishment, if the sin remains, as "the one hope of the sinner?" We have been wont to think that punishment in the case of any sinner is the one thing which effectually shuts out hope. When God's time for punishment is come, then the sinner's cause is hopeless. Nor have we ever known a case where, the sin being forgiven, and the light of the Father's love falling upon the penitent, "the punishment...is borne with gladness." The gladness of the soul forgiven and adopted into the family of God is due to the fact that it can never know what punishment is. The entire judicial penalty Christ has borne. The pardoned one can never even taste the bitterness of wrath. Correction he may have, discipline he must endure, but punishment never.

We extremely regret to find that such an able scholar and influential writer as Dr. Westcott is, should have seen reason to fall in with the senseless theory that pain and sorrow have a purifying mission per se. Our author's treatment of this question reminds us of the late Mr. James Hinton's pamphlet on "The Philosophy of Pain." In the general principle these writers agree, namely, in the conclusion that all pain is remedial and perfecting. Dr. Westcott in "Christus Consummator," p. 30, states this doctrine in unqualified terms. "When we wake up," he says, "we may be allowed to see that not one pang in the innumerable woes of men has been fruitless in purifying energy." What is this but the doctrine of purgatory brought into touch with earth and time, and applied to all and sundry? And if pain have necessarily this function here, then the natural inference is that it will, as Dr. Cox and some others maintain, fulfil the like function hereafter. Anything more contrary than this doctrine of Pain, alike to observation and Scripture, could not be conceived. It is not pain or sorrow per se that sanctifies, but Divine grace alone, which so often finds in them a means of more resplendent manifestation.

The space at our command will not allow us to enter minutely into every point. We cannot but demur, however, to the theory enunciated (page 40) in respect of the kingly and priestly offices. "For indeed at first and at last the kingly and priestly offices cannot be kept apart." Were Dr. Westcott able to demonstrate this point, he would be able not only to verify his "Gospel of Creation," but to establish the whole scheme of Universalism. If the kingly in God is necessarily associated with the priestly, then redemption for all men, and not only for all men but for all devils, is as certain as the throne of God. But this necessity does not exist. Kingship in God is not in every instance accompanied by a Divine display of the priestly in atonement and mediation. Consequently, the angels themselves were not prepared for the unique manifestation of God which supervened upon the fall of man.

And this brings us to what we cannot but regard as the assumption, the FALLACY in the book. It does not follow that the revelation of God in man's creation implicitly contained the Gospel, and that the Incarnation finds in God's creative work its necessary pivot. Redemption is not necessarily wrapped up in God's creative power, when that concerns the creation of such spiritual beings as men and angels. The priestly, therefore, must ever remain the central in redemption, nor can we substitute for the Gospel of the Cross any other device. Redemption through sacrificial atonement is the Bible's first and last word, and of this the Apostolic watchword, "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," is the forthsetting. Dr. Westcott's aim we deem a missing of the mark. D.

MR. CHARLES JAMES, of the Gospel Purity Association, now on a visit to the United States and Canada, has addressed some meetings at Bangor, Maine, in connection with the Association. The local friends gave him and his companion, Mr. Cookson, a warm reception, and speak well of his work.

DUBLIN VISITING MISSION.—At the annual meeting held last week, Rev. H. Fishe said the great necessity of the work was proved by the fact that in the year 20,000 women and children were convicted in the metropolitan district of Dublin. As in England, so there, a great majority of the people attend no place of worship, and these are the people the Mission seek to reach. 2289 children passed through the schools last year and these, he believed, obtained a great blessing being taught the Word of God, as well as prepared to become useful and respectable citizens. Rev. H. W. Townsend remarked that in many instances the Word of God taught to the children in the schools was the one thing which sinks deep into their hearts, and when parents heard their children repeating at home the texts of Scripture they had learnt at school they sometimes came to the meetings themselves.

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

II. JOHN'S FOREVIEW.

MR. GUINNESS ON PERSECUTING ROME.

The Horrors of the Inquisition depicted.

THE second lecture on Romanism, at Exeter Hall, by Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, was a memorable deliverance. As he traced out, point by point, the wonderful correspondence between the symbolisms of Daniel and of John; and the equally remarkable application of both to the actual facts of the history of Papal Rome, any doubts that may have existed as to the true interpretation of the prophecies must have melted away before the overwhelming force of evidence. It has never been our lot to hear from any platform such a scathing and impassioned description and denunciation of Rome's fiendish cruelties as was embodied in the closing paragraphs of this extraordinary address. The rising generation seems to know little about the awful doings of the Inquisition, and, therefore, we have been constrained to give some passages with reference to this part of the subject in the exact and uncondensed words of the speaker.

In recapitulating the outline of the previous week's address, Mr. Guinness enlarged somewhat on the blasphemous pretensions and hellish deeds of the Romish See; he said:—

> As to the deeds of Rome, these are written large in history. There you can see this so-called Vicar of Jesus Christ misrepresenting Him before the world and the wondering universe! There you can see him trampling under foot all laws, human and Divine; reigning for ages in insufferable tyranny over the persons and the consciences of myriads of mankind; quenching the light of truth; crushing the Church of God. There you can see him making war with the saints, and prevailing against them; wading up to his hips and arm-pits through seas of blood, and plunging himself in the blackest depths of pollution and profanity. The Vicar of Jesus Christ! Do you understand what it means? There is the "mystery of godliness," and by its side the "mystery of iniquity." God humbling Himself to be as man, and to die for the world upon the Cross, and alongside of this, fallible, polluted man exalting himself to be as God, and to reign supreme in the universal realm of things human and Divine. God, as it were, making Himself man, and man—fearful contrast and climax—making himself God! This is the ne plus ultra of iniquity. This is no vulgar lie of an infidel Antichrist, saying there is no God. It is infinitely worse. It is the verbal acknowledgment of the true God in Jesus Christ, coupled with the blasphemous claim to be his sole representative—what even no angel is, or could be; and this, by a mortal, fallible, sinful man, engaged all the while in warring against the truth of God, and warring against the saints of God, and misrepresenting the character and Gospel of God from century to century, to the eternal destruction of millions of mankind. This is Satanic; it is the work of Satan. It is his mighty work; his matchless work. It is the ruin and destruction, as far as he could accomplish it, of the religion and Church of Jesus Christ. It is Satan's kingdom and reign. He reigned in the old Cæsars for centuries. Since they fell he has reigned for centuries in the Popes. The so-called Vicar of Christ is the real Vicar of Satan. I repeat it: the centre of the Latin Apostasy is the Papacy; the central principle of the Papacy is the Vicariate; the central power in the Vicariate is Satanic. The god and governor of the fallen world and fallen Church is not Jesus Christ, but his great enemy. This is the finding of history, and this is the teaching of the sure word of prophecy.

The main portion of the lecture was a comparison of the Daniel visions and the visions of the Apocalypse, relating to the Romish power, Pagan and Papal. It was so closely and clearly worked out, and was so instructive withal, that we regret being obliged to summarise severely. Daniel, he said, revealed the four Empires; John the fourth only, for the first three had passed away. In both prophecies the striking symbol used is that of a ten-horned wild beast. This is the first important link between the two revelations. We are not left in doubt as to the interpretation of the symbols. The explanations of the angel to John (Rev. xvii.) unmistakably fix the sixth head of the seven-headed beast, as being the then reigning Roman Empire. Here we have the key to the Apocalypse. Chaps. xvii.—xix. contain the two-fold prediction of the rise and reign, and of the fall and destruction of the Romish power. Mr. Guinness proceeded to examine the passages relating to the little horn of Daniel, and the revived beast of the Apocalypse, as showing beyond doubt their identity. The following points were advanced:—The persecuting horn of Daniel is Roman; the persecuting head of John is Roman; both grow up in the later or divided state of the Roman Empire; each has a mouth speaking great things; both exercise great dominion, and both make war with the saints; the duration of the reign of each is the same, though expressed by varied symbols; they end in the same manner, and at the same time: the persecuting horn is slain by the Ancient of Days revealed in judgment, and the persecuting head is slain by the King of kings and Lord of lords, revealed in judgment. There cannot be two such powers absolutely alike in all respects; they are, therefore, one and the same. Even the Church of Rome admits their identity.

Passing from the marvellous correspondence between the descriptions of the "horn" of Daniel and the "head" of John, the lecturer unfolded the evidence on each point sustaining the interpretation which applies them to Papal Rome. Referring to the feature in both of having "a mouth speaking great things," he said:—

> This feature is marvellously fulfilled in the Papacy. What a mouth has that Latin ruler! What a talker; what a teacher; what a thunderer. How has he boasted himself, and magnified himself, and excommunicated, and anathematised all who have resisted him. Has the world ever seen his equal in this respect? All the Gothic kings were his humble servants. He was by his own account, and is, the representative of Christ, of God; ruler of the world, armed with all the powers of Christ in heaven, earth, and hell. He is infallible; his decrees are irreformable. A mouth, indeed, is his; a mouth speaking great things.

As to warring with the saints, Mr. Guinness had ample material from which to frame an indictment, and, as will be seen from a later extract, he turned it to good account. On the point of duration of time he showed how the year-day scale is the one that must necessarily be accepted in dealing with these symbolic figures, and how the prophetic dates synchronise with crises in the actual history of the Papacy.

> Rome has fulfilled the prophecy, not only in its geographical and historical position, its moral character, its political power, its blasphemous pretensions, its tyrannical career, but in its very chronology in the point of its rise, the period of its duration, the era of its decline, and the crisis of its overthrow.

Glancing at the predictions of John, describing the fall and overthrow of the Papal power, it was stated that Romish authorities admit "Babylon the Great," of Rev. xviii. to be Rome; but they assert it to be heathen, and not Christian Rome. This view was controverted on various grounds. Babylon the harlot is called "mystery;" there was no mystery about Rome Pagan, but Rome Papal is the personification of it. Babylon as the harlot, and Jerusalem as the pure bride, are contrasted; Jerusalem in this aspect is not a city, but a Church, and therefore Babylon cannot be a mere heathen capital, but an apostate Church. Then the destruction of Babylon is to be total and final, which could not be said of the burning of Pagan Rome. Again, the destruction of Babylon is immediately to be followed by the "marriage of the Lamb" (Rev. ii. 19); this event is still to come. Mr. Guinness's last point was the one that he most strikingly developed; viz., the cruel doings of Papal Rome in persecuting and destroying the saints of God. He made a passing allusion to the Albigensian and Waldensian persecutions; the French persecutions, lasting for more than three hundred years; the fires of Smithfield; and, worst of all, the tortures of the Inquisition. Omitting references to passages in Limborch's History of the Inquisition, describing the almost unimaginable refinements and ingenuities of cruelty practised by the Holy (!) Inquisitors, we give his most thrilling closing passages. Amid the breathless interest and painfully sustained mental tension of his hearers, Mr. Guinness poured out this flood of burning speech, accentuated ever and anon by emphatic gesture, and tones of voice in accord with the strong feeling that such a recital called forth:—

> I will take you to the Inquisition. What agonies have been suffered in these sombre vaults, unseen by any human eyes, save those of fiendish inquisitors! What cries have been uttered in this dismal place, which have never reached the open world in which we live; locked doors shut them in; stone walls stifled them. No sound escaped, not even that of a faint and distant moan. But now and then a victim found release; one and another have come forth from the torture-chamber pale and trembling, maimed and mutilated, to tell the things they experienced when in the hands of the "Holy Inquisitors." . . . .
> What a world of tyranny and intolerable anguish is compressed into that word—the Inquisition! Tyranny over the conscience; men in the name of Jesus Christ stretching and straining, maiming and mangling their fellow-men to compel them to call light darkness, and darkness light; to call the Gospel of Christ a lie, and the lie of Satan truth; to confess that wrong is right, and to acknowledge right is wrong; to bow down to man and worship him as God; to call the teachings of Christ heresy and the teachings of Antichrist divine! Tremendous was the power of that dread tribunal. In Spain and Portugal it completely crushed the Reformation. No secrets could be withheld from the Inquisitors; hundreds of persons were often apprehended in one day, and, in consequence of information resulting from their examinations under torture, thousands more were apprehended. Prisons, convents, even private houses, were crowded with victims; the cells of the Inquisition were filled and emptied again and again; the torture chamber was a hell. The most excruciating engines were employed to dislocate the limbs of even tender women. Thousands were burned at the stake. The Gospel was gagged and crushed, and Christ Himself, in the persons of his members, subjected to the anguish of a second Golgotha.

After furnishing many painful details, horrible enough to chill the heart's blood of the most callous and inhuman, Mr. Guinness proceeded:—

> Before we let fall the curtain upon this awful subject, let us listen for a moment to some of the words of William Lithgow, a Scotchman, who suffered the tortures of the Inquisition in the time of James I. After telling of the diabolical treatment he received, he says:—"Now mine eyes did begin to startle, my mouth to foam and froth, and my teeth to chatter like the dobbling of drumsticks. Oh! strange, inhuman, monster man-manglers. . . . And notwithstanding of my shivering lips in this fiery passion, my vehement groaning, and blood springing from my arms, my broken sinews, yea, and my depending weight on flesh-cutting cords, yet they struck me on the face with cudgels to abate and cease the thundering noise of my wrestling voice. At last being released from these pinnacles of pain, I was hand fast set on the floor with this their ceaseless imploration, 'Confess, confess, confess in time, or thine inevitable torments ensue.' 'Oh!

mercy on me, and strengthen me with patience to undergo this barbarous murder!"

Enough! Here let the curtain drop; I should sicken you were I to pursue the subject further; it is too horrible, too damnable.

Hear me! though in truth I scarcely know how to speak upon this subject. I am almost dumb with horror when I think of it. I have visited the places in Spain, in France, in Italy, most deeply stained and dyed with martyr blood. I have visited the valleys of Piedmont. I have stood in the shadow of the great Cathedral of Seville, on the spot where they burned the martyrs, or tore them limb from limb. I have read the story of Rome's deeds. I have waded through many volumes of history and of martyrology. I have visited either in travel or in thought scenes too numerous for me to name, where the saints of God have been slaughtered by Papal Rome, that great butcher of bodies and of souls.

I cannot tell you what I have seen, what I have read, what I have thought. I cannot tell you what I feel. Oh, it is a bloody tale! I have stood in that valley of Angrona, where dwelt the faithful Waldenses, those ancient Protestants who held to the pure Gospel all through the dark ages; that lovely valley with its pine-clad slopes, which Rome converted into a slaughter-house. Oh, horrible massacres of gentle, unoffending, noble-minded men! Oh, horrible massacres of tender women and helpless children! Yes, ye hated them, ye hunted them, ye trapped them, ye tortured them, ye stabbed them, ye stuck them on spits; ye impaled them, ye hanged them, ye roasted them, ye flayed them, ye cut them in pieces, ye violated them, ye violated the women, ye violated the children, ye forced flints into them, and stakes, and stuffed them with gunpowder, and blew them up; and tore them asunder, limb from limb; and tossed them over precipices, and dashed them against the rocks; ye cut them up alive, ye dismembered them; ye racked, mutilated, burned, tortured, mangled, massacred holy men, sainted women, mothers, daughters, tender children, harmless babes, hundreds, thousands, thousands upon thousands; ye sacrificed them in heaps, in hecatombs, turning all Spain, Italy, France, Europe—Christian Europe—into a slaughter-house, a charnel-house, an aceldama!

Oh, horrible; too horrible to think of! The sight dims, the heart sickens, the soul is stunned in the presence of the awful spectacle. Oh harlot, gilded harlot, with brazen brow, and brazen heart, red are thy garments, red thine hands. Thy name is written in this book. God has written it. The world has read it. Thou art a murderess, O Rome. Thou art the murderess Babylon—"Babylon the Great," drunken, foully drunken; yea, drunken with the sacred blood which thou hast shed in streams and torrents, the blood of saints, the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. Were there naught else by which to recognise thee, O persecuting Church of Rome, this dreadful mark would identify thee. This is thy brand; by this we know thee. Thou art that foretold Babylon. We know thee by thy proud assumptions, by the throne on which thou sittest, by those seven hills; by the beast thou ridest; by the garments thou wearest; by the cup thou bearest; by the name blazoned on thy forehead; by thy kingly paramours; by thy shameless looks; by thy polluted deeds; but, oh, chiefly by this, by thy prolonged and dreadful persecution of the saints; by those massacres, by that Inquisition, by the fires of that burning stake. Mark how its ruddy flames ascend; see how its accusing smoke goes up to heaven!

In this sacred prophecy behold thy picture, read thy name; read, ay, read thy written doom. The French Revolution broke upon thee; it was a stage in thy judgment, and no more. The beast who carried thee for centuries in abject submission, turned against thee, cast thee off, stripped thy garments from the, rent thee with its horns. It was foretold it would be so. It is fulfilled, but that fulfilment is not the end. It is but the beginning of the end. Tremble, for thy doom is written from of old. The hand upon the wall has written it; the finger of Almighty God has engraved it. Dreadful have been thy sins; dreadful shall be thy punishment. Thou hast burned over and over the members of Christ, thou hast burned them to cinders and to ashes; thy doom is to be burned; thy doom is the appalling flame whose smoke ascends for ever.

I have done. Prophecy has spoken; history has fulfilled its utterance. Rome Pagan ran its course; Rome Papal took its place. "Babylon the Great" has risen, has reigned, has fallen; her end is nigh. "Come out of her, my people," come out of her before the final judgment act in the great drama of the Apostasy: "Come out of her," saith your God, "that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." For, as a millstone cast by a mighty angel into the sounding deep, she shall with violence be thrown down, and shall be found no more for ever.

THE QUEMADERO;

OR, "PLACE OF BURNING," IN MADRID.

(Reprinted from The Christian, Feb. 3, 1870.)

Most have heard of the discovery made close to Madrid, in the commencement of the present revolution, of the "Quemadero," where, three hundred years ago, the Inquisition burned so-called "heretics." Some workmen came upon it in the process of cutting a new road. The amount of human remains subsequently excavated is appalling. Among the other horrors were found two bony hands, transfixed by a large nail, and clasped in the attitude of prayer, and the ribs of some victim with the spear still protruding by which they had been pierced. On the attempt being made to separate them from the surrounding substances, they crumbled into dust. The effect of the discovery was immense. Rome was revealed more clearly than ever before the eyes of Spain. A speaker in the Cortes said that while there were strange geological sections and strata, there were also strange theological sections and theological strata, declaring the history of the past. There was a public meeting held on the site, attended by multitudes: some of our brethren sold Bibles amid the crowd, advertising them as copies of the book forbidden by the Inquisition.

The impulse thus given to religious liberty is still profoundly felt. I have just visited the spot. The workmen have not yet finished making the road alluded to. On one side there is a high bank, half way down which these long black strata are exposed to the full light of day. Their contents crumble beneath the touch, and are found on examination to consist principally of the débris of fuel and human bodies burned and buried together.

"The earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."

Ye layers of ashes black, and half-burnt bones,
Ye monuments of martyrs' stifled moans,
Of human agony and dying groans,
Cry out till every ear has heard your tones!
Cry till the murderess trembles, though her brain
Is drunken with the blood of millions slain:
She did not mean to show you; 'twas the spade
Of simple workmen which your horrors laid
Unearthed and bare before the light of day;
They only dug to open a new way.
As they advanced, the ground before them grew
In patches softer, changed its wonted hue,
And with the smell of death defiled the air.
They dug, and they discovered layer on layer,
Black bones, and rusted chains, and human hair,
And iron nails, and bits of melted lead,
And the burnt fuel of unnumbered dead.
They cut the heap across—it crowns a hill;
Its length is shown—its breadth lies buried still.
Doubtest thou, reader? I was there to-day;
I saw them at their work; I brought away
Some horrible remains which, while I write
These very words, are lying in my sight.
A piece of paper on this table holds
Some of this martyr-dust within its folds.
I pause and gently touch it with my hand:
It is not common earth; it is not sand;
I look at it; the tears have filled my eyes;
My God, what is it that before me lies?
The ground beneath was gravel and was red,
But this is dark and formed a separate bed.
How soft it is and light; it feels like soil
That has been saturated once with oil:
'Tis full of small black cinders; most is grey
And ashen; here is something burnt away
Black as the blackest coal; this was the meat
Of some relentless and devouring heat.
A little box beside the paper stands:
Its relics I collected with these hands;
I take a something from it, like a stone;
'Tis grey and light; ah! 'tis a piece of bone;
This was the side on which the muscles grew;
The other side its chambers are burnt blue.
These four are lumps of iron; they are red,
Like fetters that have rusted off the dead.
This was an iron bolt, 'tis long and curved,
To hold a chain or cord it doubtless served;
This is a hollow bone burnt through and through,
It leaves upon my hand a dusky blue;
That was a bar of iron, now mere rust;
And this is indistinguishable dust.

O Rome! thou mother of a cherished race;
Blush not to show the world thy kindly face!
Thy bosom—hide its demons—hush—thy breast,
'Tis there alone that suffering men find rest.
How mild the chastisements thy love hath used
Whene'er thy children have thy laws refused!
Gentle coercion! Pity's tender tones! [bones?
Tell me, thou murderess black, what mean these
These bones before me; those upon that hill,
Who, what were these thus slaughtered by thy will?
What did these helpless women? these poor men?
Why didst thou shut them up in thy dark den?
Why didst thou pinch their flesh, and starve their frames,
And cast them bound into devouring flames?
True, they reproached thee for thy crimes and lies,
And prayed for thee with sin-forgiving sighs;
Thy multiplied idolatries abhorred;
No mediator honoured but their Lord;
Condemned thy priestcraft and thy love of gold;
Clung to God's Word, and for its truths were bold;
Adorned by blamelessness the name they bore;
Loved not their lives to death. What did they more?
Were they adulterers—these prisoned saints?
Or murderers—these who died without complaints?

Hush! for they sleep in Jesus—soft their bed;
His suffering saints their Lord hath comforted!
Hush! for the sevenfold wrath of God grows hot!
Hush! for her deep damnation slumbereth not.

SOWING BESIDE ALL WATERS.

The story of a noble work undertaken by a sailor converted at one of Jerry McAuley's meetings, is given in a recent number of The New York Evangelist. His eyes having been opened to the truth, and to the danger to which sailors are exposed, he resolved to devote himself to their salvation. At first he laboured in the Bay of San Francisco in connection with the Bethel. On reaching Astoria, he purchased a small sloop, in which, with a commission from the American Tract Society, he coasted Shoalwater Bay, an extensive inlet from the Pacific Ocean, on the same errand that drew the disciples to the lake of Gennesaret. The bays and inlets of this grand river are the haunts of salmon, and hither therefore come thousands of fishermen, who, with landsmen engaged in the canneries, spend many months in the hamlets and villages on its shores.

Amongst these people, scattered along the shores, and in the woods, Harry Vander Veen, the man already referred to, has been long working, taking the Gospel to their rude homes, and leavening their rough associations with its refining and hallowed influences. One night, when the river was swollen to unusual dimensions, he cast anchor, as he believed, near the shore, and remote from the usual channel of traffic. But he was awakened from sleep to find that his little craft had been run down by a passenger steamer, and himself adrift on the waste of waters. Being an expert swimmer his life was saved, but everything else was, of course, lost. An effort is being made for the purchase of another boat, with a good supply of books and tracts, in which this good work can be continued with more facilities than in that in which he has already sailed on so many voyages of mercy, amongst a population that can be reached only by such a man and in such a way.

SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY AND CURE OF INEBRIETY.—The facts put before us in a paper read by Mr. Tudor Trevor at a recent meeting of this Society should do much to cure the prevailing indifference to inebriety of which he so strongly complains. The facts comprise statistical evidence such as we are familiar with, but the importance of which is not lessened by reiteration, and the results of observations by Sir Andrew Clark and Dr. Richardson. The former says, for instance, that seventy out of every 100 patients in the London Hospital owe their ill-health to alcohol. "Alcohol," he also says, "even in small doses, will take the bloom off, will injure the perfection and loveliness of health, both mental and moral." The secretary is Mr. C. H. Bishop 42, Grove-road, Regents-park, N.W.

THE WAY of the COMMANDMENTS.*

By Dr. ALEXANDER WHYTE, Edinburgh.

There are two ways to heaven: the way leading by Mount Sinai, and the way by the hill Calvary. Over the one is written, "Do and live;" over the other, "Believe and live." The young man (Matt. xix. 16—22, which was the lesson read) tried to go by the former; the Philippian jailor entered by the latter. It is a strange thing that everyone who thinks of going to heaven begins by the way of Sinai, the way of commandments and obedience. Paul began that way. It was an adventurous thing for him to do. How he fared, you may read in his biographical epistles. "Beware of going to heaven by the commandments," wrote Bunyan in another of his books; "they are ten great guns; keep out of their range." He was speaking from bitter experience. Let us to night smell the powder, and look at the guns.

The way of the commandments is guarded by the highest and straitest gate in the world: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." You cannot enter the gate in act, but you may in imagination. In it there are wicket gates, and such lesser gates as, "Put no other gods before Me," "Reverence my name," and "Reverence my day." Try them, and find out your inability. The harder we try the more we find out our inability. There is no foothold for the sinner there.

Another door is like unto the first, "Love thy neighbour as thyself." My neighbour, my dear familiar friend, is planted at the door, as I knock. Surely he will let me pass! Can I look into his eyes, and he into my heart, and God looking on us both, and say, "I love him as myself?" Can I pass beside my neighbour, and you beside yours? Etymology tells us who our neighbour is. He is the man who works in the next field to us, ploughing, sowing, and reaping in it. Surely these are easy terms for a man to be justified on! My neighbour is the minister, whose piety, talents, labours, and grace draw from me my best people. Am I happy in his advancement? Do I rejoice in his honour as if it were honour done to me? Can I pass through that scorching fire? Merchant! that man over the street, whose counter is crowded by customers while thy door is empty, is your neighbour. Young woman! who seest another led to the table before thee, lovest thou thy neighbour as thyself? Keep out of the way of the commandments; they rake your heart with their deadly fire. An old Rabbi said, "Love thy neighbour as thyself is the great commandment; all the others are but interpretations of it."

What did Christ mean when He told the young man, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments?" Paul would smile with a deep, sweet, solemn smile, as he heard the disciples in Christ before him tell this story. During his fifteen days with Peter in Jerusalem, I am sure, he would often ask Peter to repeat the words Jesus spoke, "Are you sure, Peter, you heard Him say that?" Peter would reply, "If you don't believe me, ask James and John; they too heard it." "Peter, didst thou watch the Master's look as He said it? Was He not mocking thee and him with holy mockery? Was He not teaching thee thy first lesson in evangelical grace?"

Keep out of the range of the ten great guns. Give up trying the way of the commandments. Go to heaven by Calvary. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

APPEAL to the PEOPLES of EUROPE.

[The subjoined Address is issued by the Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, London, E.C., which has been in existence for more than seventy years, and which was established for the sole purpose of promoting International Peace on the broad principles of religion and humanity]:—

All the nations of Europe are, at this moment, groaning under an intolerable burden, brought about by an extravagant rivalry in naval and military preparations, by which the Governments are exhausting their recources and oppressing their subjects by the constantly increasing weight of taxation and military service. Is it not possible to make the voice of the peoples heard in protest against this ruinous folly? In every country in Europe there is dire destitution and distress; thousands of honest and industrious men, who only ask leave to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, are pining in misery and famine, because the means by which they may gain work and wages are squandered, with unmeasured profusion, on warlike armaments.

The great body of the people in all these lands are content to dwell in quiet and confidence, side by side, trying to promote the welfare of themselves and their country, by friendly competition and exchange, with other countries, in the pursuits of industry and commerce. But they are not allowed to do this in peace, for they are constantly disturbed by loud voices assiduously fomenting mutual suspicion between the nations, and perpetually demanding additions to their forces on a principle of emulation to which there seems no limit, until all the men and all the money of all the nations are absorbed in their armaments.

And what is the pretext for this unwise policy? To preserve peace. To guarantee security.

Do they, by these means, obtain peace, or security, at home, or abroad? At home the people, crushed beneath the burdens which this system imposes upon them, are driven to sullen discontent, and sometimes to secret conspiracies, which menace the stability of all Government, and endanger the very foundations of society. Abroad, the ostentatious and threatening display of their armed forces, so far from being, as is pretended, a protection against war, renders war, even by the confession of the military leaders themselves, all but inevitable.

What, then, is to be done? Is it not possible to enlist the influence and authority of the ministers of Christianity throughout Europe against this calamitous system? Surely we have special ground for invoking their aid. The Master whom they serve is emphatically the Prince of Peace; the religion they preach is one of gentleness, benignity, and universal brotherhood. There are tens of thousands of them set apart expressly for the purpose of proclaiming its doctrines, and enforcing its precepts, as the rule of life, for communities as well as individuals. If they were earnestly and unanimously to lift their voice in rebuke of an evil, which is as great a hindrance to the Gospel as it is a scourge to humanity, they might do much, at least to arrest and mitigate some of its excesses, and thereby vindicate the character of the religion they represent, and win back the allegiance of many who are now alienated from it?

Above all, the people themselves should take the matter in hand, and set themselves resolutely to oppose a course which, if persisted in, must lead, and is leading, the great nations of Europe into the abyss of bankruptcy, revolution, and anarchy.

And how can the people interpose? Not by would only aggravate the mischief, by affording fresh pretexts for adding still more to the murderous equipments which are thinly disguised under the plausible name of precaution.

There is a better and far more effectual way. Let the people decline to be misled by those who have an interest in the present system, and who, by playing on their passions, too often try to make them the instruments of their own designs. Let them stedfastly refuse to believe that all other civilised and Christian nations are filled with envy, jealousy, and hatred toward them, and always on the watch for opportunities to attack them with fire and sword. Where any standing difference exists, let the people of the countries concerned remember that there is a better way of settling these differences than by the brutal arbitrament of the sword, which can settle nothing on any principle of equity and right—that is, by an appeal to reason and justice, in the form of peaceful arbitration, by which, in many, even recent cases, disputes have been satisfactorily adjusted.

In most of the countries of Europe the power of the people has, of late years, enormously increased, and they have the means by which they can effectually influence the policy of their Governments. Let them support the men who are pledged to economy and peace, and resolutely withold their suffrages from those who, in the nineteenth century of what is called Christian civilisation, know no other way of conducting the affairs of nations than by such a gross display of sheer brute force as was never equalled in the darkest days of Paganism.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

The past year has been one of more than average blessing upon the spread of the Gospel in Spain. From Madrid, the north-western province of Galicia, and the southerly province of Jaen, cheering testimony has been received to the work of the Holy Spirit. The reduction, by the British and Foreign Bible Society, of the price of Gospels to one penny, and the printing of an edition of Spanish hymns, have been very helpful in the furtherance of the work.

Extracts from reports by Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong speak of great willingness on the part of the people in various parts of the country to hear the Gospel, and at Madrid there were nearly 500 children in the schools. At Izantoraf (province of Jaen), "I asked," says Mr. Armstrong, "those who had come expecting blessing to say 'I have.' A few voices answering, 'Let us pray, then,' I said, and we knelt down. Then the Spirit fell on the people. In a few moments strong men and women and young people were sobbing and crying and praying; some eight or ten remaided so, more or less, during the service. At night we had a large meeting, when those who had been touched by the hand of God in the morning gave thanks publicly. There are many villages," he adds, "in this province where, if the Gospel were preached with the living voice, what has taken place here would be repeated, and because it does not, many waiting souls die in darkness."

In some places the local authorities are favourable to the Gospel. The people buy the Scriptures freely, and evidently the Spirit of God is moving upon this long time desert land. Communications relating to the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain should be addressed to Mr. J. B. Hunter (of J. Rew & Co.), Brown's Buildings, Liverpool.

HOME MISSION, ST. JAMES'S, BRISTOL.—Good work is being done at this Mission. There is a short service in the morning on Sundays, over a hundred children are gathered in the afternoon school, and in the evening two Gospel services, one for adults, the other for children, are held, with attendances of between sixty and ninety. Services are also held in the week, and the missionary (Mr. Sidney Wagg) is constantly visiting amongst the people. His address is 22, Mary-le-port-street,

For the Young.

A STORY OF THE BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Sukia (which means in English "peaceful") is a little girl about eight years of age; her father and mother died when she was quite small; her grandmother took the little orphan to her home and heart, and very peaceful were a few years that flitted by. The orphan child became the joy and sunshine of the widow's cottage, and well repaid any kindness shown to her. Alas! it did not last long; her grandmother was called away by death, and the little girl stood all alone in the wide, wide world. Many a time she cried, and did not know what to do. However, God, the Father of the orphan, knew all about her, and impressed her aunt to receive Sukia into her family; but there was no love lost in that house, and poor Sukia felt sometimes very bad. But what could she do? She had to stay and be thankful, and have her cry when she was alone.

During 1884 famine visited this country (Santhalistan), and many were the pinched faces; a few died of starvation, and many others lived for months on what they could find in the jungle. Food was scarce in the house, and poor Sukia often got no dinner; her aunt having hardly enough for her own children, grudged the little that was given (with a scowl) to Sukia. She got many a scolding, and sometimes a thrashing, and finally was driven out of the house, and told never to return, as her aunt had plenty of children of her own, and little or no food for them.

Crying, poor Sukia left the house that had sheltered her for a few years; thick and fast fell the tears. She did not know where to go to; very thin were the few rags that covered her. Was there not one house to open to the little maid? Father and mother were dead, the neighbours all struggling along, hardly knowing how to provide food for their own children. Poverty and starvation were everywhere. All doors were shut to the orphan; none wanted her.

Poor Sukia was ashamed to cry on the road any longer, and hid in a field where she could not be seen by anyone, but did not our heavenly Father notice her tears? Were they not more eloquent than a long petition? Her very helplessness cried aloud heavenward for help.

Night came on, and the child was afraid to stay any longer in the field, as the leopards and tigers prowl about the villages seeking their supper; so she quickly went up to the village, and seeing that all had retired, she laid down on the hard floor of a verandah to sleep. During the night something touched her, whether it was a snake or a jackal I do not know, but the child was frightened and loudly and wildly she screamed for help. The men of the village were aroused by her screams, and soon surrounded her with clubs; they thought she had been dreaming, and drove her out of the village, and forbade her to return to it. She hid under a shed till the day dawned, and then turned her back upon Budhia village.

The next day she walked here and there in the jungle, and hid in some one's verandah during the night. The second day she had to beg the women for a little rice, being very hungry. One kind-hearted woman pitied the little stranger and cooked all she had for her. This was the first meal she had had since she left her aunt's, and it was eagerly devoured.

The third day she came to Dom Kata. The blacksmith's wife was in our village school and urged her to go to us, so in the afternoon she arrived at our house, asking if Jesus lived there? She had probably heard of Jesus from the blacksmith's wife.

Seeing that the child was hungry Mrs. Haegert (the missionary's wife) gave her at once some daker and dal to eat, and spoke kindly to her. Our school girls took her to the tank, and away, and she got a clean cloth and some oil for her hair.

It was a great change for Sukia to come to kind people and bright girls. When the girls carried her off after her first meal with Mrs. Haegert she asked them: "Is this lady God?" and "Is her little boy Jesus?" The girls had a good laugh at her, and told her that God was in heaven, and could not be seen by mortal eye, but that He loved us all, and cared for us all, and wished to do us good, and that He had sent Jesus to tell us of his love, and how much Jesus had suffered to save us, and that God pardons and blesses all who believe in his Son.

Since then Sukia has learned many things, to sing beautiful hymns of praise to God. She prays so nicely and intelligently, and we sincerely trust she is one of Jesu's lambs. She is very old-fashioned in all her ways, and is so fond of us all. Sukia has asked for baptism, but this has been postponed for the present. The Lord be praised for the kindness shown to this and other other orphans, and may they always be mindful of his gracious dealings with them! Anyone wishing to have the likeness of little Sukia can obtain it by writing to Miss M. C. Gurney, hon. sec., The Belvedere, Wimbledon, for the fourth half-yearly paper of the Bethel Santhal Mission, in which the portrait is given.

WHAT THE CHILDREN CAN DO.

The last meeting of the Marchmont Home Sewing Circle, says the Belleville, Ontario, Intelligencer, was a specially interesting one. A number of letters were read from boys and girls all over the province, who had sent money to help to buy a horse for a young missionary in Southern India. This young man was at one time a Marchmont boy, and since his conversion has, by patient industry, perseverance, and the blessing of God, worked himself up, until today he is an honoured member of the noble band who, forsaking all for Christ's sake, have gone forth to carry the light of the Gospel to those who sit in darkness. Writing to Mr. Wallace lately, he gives a most interesting account of his work, and sends a specimen of the written Telugu language.

He says:—"My work thus far has been hard study, and one needs to keep at it pretty close to get anything done. I expect to be able to speak in Telugu after nine month's study. I can talk a little now. Besides my study, I have charge of the English-speaking church at Juggernaukpurum. It is a long walk from our Mission House, and the heat completely uses me up. I should have a horse, but being a poor man I cannot afford to buy one. The Lord blessed me to one soul lately; continue to pray that many may be led into the light."

In a Christmas letter to the children, Miss Bilbrough suggested that each one should send a little to purchase a horse for their brother, to be called the "Marchmont horse." The idea has been taken up most enthusiastically, and we have had responses from children of all ages, some sending a few stamps, others sending as much as three dollars. The result so far was sent him last week in the shape of a P.O. order for sixty-six dollars, and we hope soon to be able to send a sufficient balance to buy a thoroughly good horse. Among the old boys who sent, one is in the ministry, and several are studying with that aim, and one says, "I, too, would like to be a missionary." One little fellow of six sends fifty cents; his papa was going to buy him oranges at Christmas, and he begged him to send the money for the Marchmont horse instead.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Feb. 27, Luke xi. 1—13; Monday, Feb. 28, Luke xi. 14—28; Tuesday, March 1, Luke xi. 29—44; Wednesday, March 2, Luke xi. 45—54; Thursday, March 3, Luke xii. 1—15; Friday, March 4, Luke xii. 16—34; Saturday, March 5,

TEMPERANCE CONFERENCE.

The large number of delegates from various Temperance organisations that met at Exeter Hall on Tuesday and Wednesday last week, had before them the important question of how a Local Option Bill could best be passed through Parliament. Sir Wilfrid Lawson laid it down as a principle that it is the duty of the State, instead of placing temptation in the way of the people, to remove it. They were met to try and make the laws under which we live—laws which should do more for the happiness, the freedom, and the prosperity of our country than they do at present. The Government say they are going to bring in a Local Government Bill, in which the licensing question is dealt wlth. The resolution he intended to propose in the House would be a stronger one than before, declaring that the direct veto must be given to the people. The Duke of Westminster had properly closed all the beershops on his estates. Why should not the poorer classes have the same power in regard to the temptations that beset them at every street corner, and especially in the most degraded streets?

Mr. P. M'Lagan, M.P., referred to two Bills in the present session—one by Dr. Cameron for shortening the hours still more during which public-houses might be open, and the other, which he himself had introduced, the Local Veto Bill, to take away the licenses altogether if the population in the locality so desired. He felt convinced that if the Scotch Local Option Bill were once passed they would have no fear of carrying it into operation. In Scotland they were as one man in the temperance movement. With the churches on their side, it would be nothing but a crying shame if the Legislature did not give them the power they asked.

Rev. T. Evans said that in view of the advanced state of opinion in Wales on the temperance question, the Local Option Bill for Wales ought to be at once passed. If they had Home Rule for two months in Wales they would do it.

The public meeting with which the Conference closed was remarkable for the pronounced utterance of the Bishop of London on the subject. He said:—They felt that the moral condition of the people demanded an attention which could not be claimed by any other question. They had waited long for the fulfilment of their hopes, and they had not allowed their work to slacken while they waited. What they really asked for was that the law should cease to undo their work almost as fast as they could do it; that they should be able to have a fair field in which to make progress; and that when they were endeavouring to rescue people from sin and misery, they should not be prevented by a system of law which filled the whole country with temptations.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Canon Wilberforce, Mr. Axel Gustafson, Rev. Newman Hall, and many other prominent men, also took part in the discussions.

SOUP FOR THE POOR.—A correspondent urges us to commend again to workers among the poor the use of Edwards' "Dessicated Soup." It is inexpensive, easily carried about, and easily prepared. Having tried its qualities, we are prepared to endorse the opinion that it is at once toothsome and nutritious. Packets of convenient size, from 1 lb. tin. to 1 oz. packet, can be had from Messrs. F. King & Co., 6, Bishopsgate-avenue, London, E.C. (wholesale), and also of retail grocers.

TRAINING NURSES IN NEW YORK.—In 1885 a Training School for Nurses was established in connection with the Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, 226, East Twentieth-street. A scheme has now been added by which it is intended to provide nurses for the poor, and those who can pay a small sum for such services. A Home in which the pupils, who are young women of education and refinement, can have the benefit of comfortable and cheerful surroundings during their hours off duty has been opened, and is a delightful Lights and Shadows on the Congo.

Last week we briefly announced the death of Rev. S. J. White, one of the missionaries of the Livingstone Inland Congo Mission. Writing from Palabala, on January 12, Mr. H. Probert says:—Mr. White departed this life on December 26, after about four days' illness. Mr. F. C. Darling (B.M.S.), Mr. J. Clark, and myself, were with him at the time of his death, which was calm and peaceful. He was an earnest worker, with a true missionary spirit. We can hardly realise that he will not again cheer us with his presence. He will be sorely missed, not only by his bereaved partner, but by all who knew him. Who will come and fill the gap in our ranks? Who will buckle on the armour that he has laid down?

The state of the work in our own missions and also that of the English Baptist Mission is most encouraging. We have just heard of a blessed work of grace going on at San Salvador (B.M.S.); many conversions are reported. Our own station, Palabala, is being blessed. We have baptized seven converts there on public confession of their faith in Christ. Mr. Clark is most diligent in his labour of love, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, as well as attending to his many other duties. The good work at Banza Manteke is still going on. The Women's Baptist Missionary Society of America have voted sufficient funds to enable Mr. H. Richards to build a chapel and a dispensary. It is hoped that a medical missionary will shortly join him.

Lukungu station is also enjoying a share of the blessing. The preaching of our brethren Harvey and Hoste is being greatly blessed, and many have been brought within the fold. Thus, in the midst of sickness and bereavements, the work of God goes on, and therein we rejoice, yea, and will rejoice, to see Immanuel's kingdom extended.

I regret to say that I myself am compelled to return to England in consequence of illness. I trust I may be speedily restored and enabled to return to this land of my adoption.

Would any kind friends favour me with clothing, books, illustrated papers, or toys, to take back with me on my return, which I trust will be soon. They would gladden the hearts of our children and be of real service to them. Articles may be sent to me at my brother's address—Herbert Probert, care of Rev. E. E. Probert, Abercarn (G. W. Railway), Monmouthshire.

Writing with reference to the lamented death of Mr. White, Miss Lucy Guinness says:—Just eight months ago Mr. White and his wife stood on the College platform at Harley House, in company with a number of other outgoing brethren and sisters, and said a few words to the friends who had gathered for their farewell meeting. I remember, after the company had dispersed, how we all sat at supper together at Harley House, with the outward bound party, talking over the work that lay before them. What a bright picture Brother White drew of the future of the Congo Mission; and how full of heart and courage he and his wife were in returning once more to the field! He had already spent five years in the country—long trying years of acclimatization and gaining experience—had been married out there, had lost there his first-born child, and now was going back. That same night, at midnight, they started from Liverpool-street Station, some of our party seeing them off, little thinking it would be for the last time.

His last words spoken through the medium of these pages to the Christians of England are very striking. "If Christians at home but knew," he says in effect, "things as they really are out here, they would pray and give more liberally to forward the glorious work of Congo for Christ." And now that the higher truth has shined upon him, I think, could he speak again to us, he would say, with another meaning, "If you but knew!"

Mrs. White was herself taken ill of fever, but bravely, for the Lord's sake, seeking to bear her cross. She has felt this bereavement very sorely, but her heart is fully in the Mission, and, it is hoped, the Lord will enable her to continue in his blessed service in this dark, but brightening land.

Dr. Cuyler on the Week of Prayer.

In a recent issue of The New York Evangelist, Rev. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, writes:—

The religious journals seem to be expressing a very general dissent to Dr. Pentecost's proposal to abolish the "Week of Prayer." The best men are not always infallible; and my good brother has been so exercised over the abuses connected with this time-honoured and heaven-honoured observance, that he suggests its utter extinction! This reminds one of the traditional farmer who set fire to his barn in order to clear out the rats. The Week of Prayer was originally established for concerted petition for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the spread of the kingdom of Christ. To these two fundamental purposes it should be held fast, with such local adaptations as circumstances require. No doubt there has been too much cut-and-dried pre-arrangement of topics, &c., by the Evangelical Alliance. Some churches have been tempted to postpone their special efforts for winning souls until that week; others have as unwisely suspended their efforts after it closed. An excellent institution has been abused, but so are pulpits and Sunday-schools, and many other good things.

Brother Pentecost's sharp shots may contribute to the correction of some of the incidental blunders growing out of a false conception and use of this universal concert of prayer. But the institution is too glorious in its core-idea and in its rich results for a quarter of a century, to be thrown aside now. The right time for it also is at the very opening of each new year. Blessed is the church which follows it up with fifty more weeks of prayer and practice!

Among the Manchester Waifs.

The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges was recently held. The report of the sixteenth years' work presented many features of great interest. The Central Refuge, where, besides a school, various industries are carried on, has been again an active and busy hive. The increased facility in carrying on the Cheetham branch has been secured by the gift of a "Cottage," built in the adjoining grounds, where those needing special attention are received. Two Homes for Working Boys, and the Girls' Industrial Home, are doing very useful work in sheltering and training the young. The shelter for wandering children has never been shut during the year, and has afforded shelter to about two hundred and fifty children, of whom nearly one hundred and fifty were restored to their friends, while the remainder were drafted off into various branches, or sent to other institutions.

Another feature of this work is that of which the Emigration Home is the centre, and from which sixty-two children have gone during the last twelve months to happy homes in Canada. Then, in the Boys' "Rest" and lodging-house, on an average, ten boys each night have a good bed for 3d. Fifteen boys have been sent to the training ship. Many children enjoyed a fortnight's change in the sea-side Home at Lytham, while a large contingent of poor boys from all quarters of the city had a week's holiday in the summer camp pitched in Llandudno.

It will be seen from this brief review of the work of the year that great good is being done by this agency, the reflex influence of which must tell not only directly on the young people thus secured, but indirectly also on society, and this in many directions. A full account of the year's work appears in last week's Christian

SNOWDROPS.

The earliest flower of all to me
The sweetest message bears:—
"The pure in heart their God shall see,"
The snowdrop's white declares.

In far-off woods, by rivers clear,
In gardens, grounds, it blooms;
And with the thought of heaven near
It cheers the winter's glooms.

And in the City, as we tread
The murky, bustling street,
The flower-girls fairest snowdrops spread
Our weary eyes to greet.

Yet as we mark its blossoms sweet,
A thought of keen distress
Must come to mar our joy, at sight
Of their pure loveliness.

Our hearts are dark with many stains,
Our minds are dimmed by sin;
E'en while we pray, the world regains
Full oft its sway within.

Thus musing, in a lonely wood,
Where spring's first flowerets grew,
I lingered. Sudden, where I stood,
A sunny gleam came through;

And as I watched the heavenly light,
The thought of comfort came:
"The blood of Jesus washes white
All who its cleansing claim."

The snowdrops shone with fairer grace
To greet the sunbeam's ray;
Again their message I could trace,
And gathered strength to pray:—

"Oh, may we through each passing year
Walk in the light of love,
And through the grace of Jesus here,
See Him at last above!" M. B.

Policemen in the Ratcliff "Fo'c's'le."

Anyone who knew Ratcliff Highway but a few years back must be struck with its improved appearance now. Public-houses and suchlike places, which were reaping a rich harvest, are now nearly empty; several are quite shut up, and our sailors, their wives, children, and friends are enriched thereby.

The work at the "Welcome Home" is not confined to the sailors. Among those whose interests are cared for are the policemen, who have so many temptations and difficulties. For these, Miss Child arranged one of her friendly teas on Tuesday week. The gathering was of a very social character; and to those accustomed to see it filled with the brawny sons of the sea, it was a strange, although deeply interesting sight. Lady Beauchamp and other friends sat down with the guests, apparently much enjoying the conversation at the table.

Tea over, the meeting was presided over by Lord Radstock, and addressed by himself, Lady Beauchamp, Messrs. Paton, Todd, Scott-Moncrieff, &c. The addresses were listened to with marked attention, and when all present were earnestly entreated to come to Christ, several responded, and started, we trust, on a new life in Christ Jesus. The guests seemed very grateful for the kindness shown to them.

DEATH.—On Feb. 15, at 359, Camden-road, Holloway, Henry James Phillips, one of the founders, and for thirty-three years secretary, of the Temperance Building Society, in the sixtieth year of his age, deeply mourned by his sorrowing widow and family.

MARRIAGE.—On January 15 Miss Bilborough, of the Marchmont Home, Canada, so well known in connection with the emigration of children, was married to Mr. Robert Wallace, formerly of Dunedin, N.Z., but for some years associated in the work at Belleville. The work will be carried

SOME NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"In 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' Dr. A. Bonar finds a theme almost as congenial to his pen as Robert Murray McCheyne. Glasgow, the theatre of much evangelistic effort of the best kind, has known no more devoted or successful labourer among her lowliest than the subject of this memoir. A greater testimony to the worth of this ardent young spirit than Mr. Moody's friendship and commendation is the fact that no fewer than 30,000 people lined the streets on the day of his funeral, while the procession alone numbered 6,000. The memoir is in every way an inspiration to the love of man and the service of God."

Nonconformist and Independent, Feb. 3, 1887.

"The book will be read with interest and profit; and its perusal will stimulate others to follow the example of this devoted servant of the Lord."—Methodist Times.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a touching tribute to one who filled up a short life with bright and blessed service. The volume is entitled, 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. A rich encouragement this to the 'elders of the church' to use their office well! Who shall tell how many James Scotts are just ripe for such influence as theirs?"—British Messenger.

"Everyone whose heart is in its right place in regard to Christ's saving work, will find himself stimulated by reading this book: and many will gather from it useful hints in regard to methods of Christian service."

CASE of PHTHISIS (SECOND STAGE), Mr. ALEX. RITCHIE, of FORFAR, N.B.

This patient, residing at 11, Montrose-road, Forfar, applied to me at the end of last May. Consumption had carried off several relatives. His own case commenced with pleurisy, which developed into consumption. Cough, weakness, loss of flesh, palpitation, pains were urgent. "My case (he writes) is well defined in the chapter of your book entitled, 'The sad reality—all doubts confirmed.' The medical report here is that one of my lungs is diseased, and that nothing can be given me to be of any use."

Advice and medicine were sent, and in less than two months the patient was very much improved, and after another few weeks' perseverance with the medicine, he got well.

I have recently received a letter from Mr. James Dick, of 143, East High-street, Forfar, a friend of the patient, who says:—"Your medicine is wonderful. My friend, Mr. Ritchie, was pronounced incurable, and supposed to be dying. All the medicine he had taken had done him no good, until he heard about you. He is now, through your help, so recovered that he can work again."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

RESCUE WORK.

A statement of work in connection with the Rescue Homes established by the Salvation Army in London and the country was presented at a meeting at Congress Hall, on Wednesday evening last week. General Booth said they had been at work two years, and had now, in London, five Homes. In these there are still in training eighty girls. There are also Homes at Plymouth, Cardiff, Wisbeach, Jersey, Glasgow, and Belfast, with about twenty girls in each. Altogether there are at present over 200 in these Refuges. In the two years more than 600 had been dealt with in the London Homes, of whom 485 were satisfactory cases, and are now in situations or married, while the remainder were still on the books, being watched over, looked after, and prayed for. To this total must be added forty more who had been induced to return to their own homes, and 105 who have passed through the country Homes. Thus, the number of satisfactory cases since the commencement of this movement amounted to no less than 630; only seventy of these were in the first year.

There are great difficulties in carrying on this work—first, in obtaining houses, and then in finding officers fitted for it. There are now fifty such officers, all of whom have been trained by the Army. Ladies, domesticated and educated, understanding what has to be done in training these girls as good soldiers of Jesus Christ and to earn their livelihood, are much wanted to give themselves to this work. Surely it was far nobler to be thus employed than to be doing nothing in particular, spending the day in playing the piano, or in thinking of what to wear.

The need of a hospital is also much felt. In the ordinary hospitals, these poor girls are too often looked upon as the scum of the streets, and by association with old companions it is found that the work done in the Homes has been undone, and has to be done over again. A hospital, therefore, is an absolute necessity. From the progress already made it is evident the foundation of a great work has been laid. The French are talking of building a column 1000 feet high. The Salvation Army are going to have one much higher—even of precious souls, picked up from the lowest state of degradation, and raised up to the golden pavement of heaven.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth gave a touching account of some of the cases that had come under her own notice. The majority of the girls had come to the Army as a direct result of the work of their own soldiers. But there were others of great interest. One was brought in by two girls, who, as they were returning from work, saw her in the street drunk and surrounded by a crowd. Another was brought in by a gentleman who, having been accosted in the street by her, was moved to concern himself on her behalf. Having asked his minister for advice in the matter, he said at last, "You had better go to the Salvation Army," and this advice the gentleman followed. This was a sad case. The poor girl had been well brought up in the country, but had fallen lower and lower, until when brought to the Home the doctor said she could not have lived another fortnight going on as she had been. She was greatly distressed at first because of having sinned so grievously against light and knowledge, but before going to the hospital, where that morning she passed happily away, she had learnt to trust fully in Jesus. Others had come through reading the advertisement in The War Cry, "To the distressed."

Mr. Bramwell Booth, in speaking of extension plans, said they had under contemplation a scheme for establishing six places in the City and Strand, at each of which a godly and capable woman should be stationed, so that at any hour of the day or night a girl might have advice and help if needed. A beginning will be at once made at Charing Cross. Workers endowed with patience, love, zeal, self-sacrifice, and above all with the Spirit of God, are greatly great crowd of consecrated women coming forward and undertaking it in the spirit of Christ, that they could ever hope to overtake the frightful condition of things which exists in London and other great cities.

Mrs. Booth, mentioning her experience whilst waiting at Victoria Station late one night, threw out the suggestion that a number of ladies should band themselves together to watch the different railway stations for the purpose not only of rescuing the girls, but of shaming the men, about whom very little is said. If a dozen ladies had been with her on the night referred to, she believed they could have driven off every one of the villains she saw. Speaking with great tenderness of those poor girls, she claimed for them the fullest Christian sympathy. As circumstances had much to do with the character of all, so in very many cases these unfortunate creatures had fallen into a trap, from which they did not know how to escape.

DR. GUINNESS AND YOUNG MEN.

During five evenings last week Dr. H. Grattan Guinness addressed City young men at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. He commenced on Monday evening with a "Medical Talk," in which he set forth, with all faithfulness and plainness of utterance, the results that inevitably flow from the transgression of the moral law. From what he had seen in the colonies, the state of things in the great cities was about as bad, morally speaking, as it could be, and London also was bad enough. It would be an injustice to Sodom and Gomorrah to compare their guilt with ours. They had not the same light or the same teaching of history that we have. If drink has slain its thousands, lust has slain its tens of thousands.

After his outspoken address, with its scathing denunciation of those who lead youth into sin, the Doctor made an earnest appeal to all to decide for Christ then and there, and henceforth to live to Him, an appeal which was responded to by many coming forward in evidence of their resolve to do so.

The addresses on subsequent evenings were of an evangelistic character, marked by all Dr. Guinness's power of expression, vigorous manner, and appropriateness of illustration. On Friday evening he spoke from Job xxxvi. 18: "Because there is wrath, beware lest He take thee away with his stroke; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee." His points were that God never strikes before He warns; the stroke at last is often sudden; and that the Bible promises no alteration of the spiritual condition in eternity. A deep impression was made upon the large number of young men who attended each evening, and many gave in their names as having decided for Christ.

Dr. Guinness is holding similar meetings at Exeter Hall during the present week.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—We are sorry to hear that at Liverpool the representative of this Society has been withdrawn for lack of funds, £84 odd being the total sum raised in that city during the year 1886. It is a great pity that such an effort to combat the encroachments of Rome should meet with so little encouragement, especially in so important a city as Liverpool.

MISSION TO NATIVE CHRISTIANS IN INDIA AND CEYLON.—A mission to the native Christians of India is being arranged by the Church Missionary Society. Ten missioners, five clergymen, and five laymen, one of whom has held high military rank in India, will leave this country in October next, and will spend four months in India, visiting each Mission station in the five districts, into which the area to be covered has been divided, two and two. It is remarkable that of the eight eminent men already secured for this work not one has refused on application being made to him, and that in their selection the providence of God has been manifest in a remarkable way. The idea originated with Major-General Haig, and the object is to raise the tone of the spiritual life in native pastors and congregations. Rev. John Richardson, D.D., archdeacon of Southwark, is the chairman of the committee conducting the matter, and the cost will be about £2000, of which

A GOOD WORK AT MANCHESTER.

On Friday, at Uxbridge, Mr. James B. Wookey gave an account, to an interested audience, of six weeks' evangelistic work, in which he has just been engaged in connection with the Manchester City Mission. At the opening meeting in the large hall at Messrs. Crossley Brothers' Works at Openshaw, he ascertained that many members of the choir were unconverted. He forthwith publicly appealed to them in the meeting to give their hearts to the Saviour, speaking with much force of the awful state of those who go to hell with their lips uttering, as in mockery, the praises of God. Before the meeting broke up, twenty of the choir came forward seeking salvation.

Mr. Wookey addressed, during the mission, three meetings for men only, at the last of which—the largest—the whole of the audience took the White Cross Obligations. He also addressed two meetings for women only, on the moral training of children; and attended three rescue gatherings for the fallen.

While the meetings were in progress at the Red Bank Mission Hall, one woman, who was casually invited to attend, had in her pocket on the moment of the invitation a bottle of poison with which she intended to commit suicide. She, however, came to the meeting instead, and gave her heart to Christ.

In his address at Uxbridge, Mr. Wookey spoke with much feeling of the consecration of Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill and his wife and daughter, to the work of saving the perishing in the big city of Manchester; and also of the Christ-like labours of several ladies who have left distant homes of comfort to go there and seek the salvation of their sin-stained and outcast sisters.

At the close of Mr. Wookey's touching address, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer said that he was sure one of the outcomes of what they had heard that night, would be a quickened interest among Mr. Wookey's friends at Uxbridge in his evangelistic and Gospel Purity labours; and that more than ever, as he travelled about in the Lord's work, he might feel that he would be supported by their prayers.

OBITUARY.

REV. W. MACFARLANE.

Many throughout Scotland will (writes a correspondent of The Inverness Courier) hear with sincere sorrow of the loss which the cause of the missions has sustained by the death of Rev. William Macfarlane, M.A., the distinguished missionary of the Church of Scotland, whose name is so closely identified with the Darjeeling Mission. One of his sisters, Miss Macfarlane, was associated with him in his mission work, and is now at Darjeeling.

HALFPENNY DINNERS.—A very successful effort to provide cheap dinners for poor children has been for several weeks in operation in the crowded district of Clapham Junction. Since the halfpenny dinners have been commenced there has been a daily attendance of 400 and upwards. The dinners, although not so varied as those at a penny, are wholesome, plentiful, and relishing, consisting of good pea-soup and a slice of bread, and a second slice of bread with jam—varied by peas-pudding and bread and jam. At the reduced charge of a halfpenny these dinners are self-supporting.

THE PAPACY.—The admirable paper of Rev. Dr. J. A. Wylie on "The Present Position, Policy, and Prospects of the Papacy" has now run through the first edition of 10,000 copies. The Council of the Evangelical Alliance, having received many and urgent communications from all parts of the country, recommending that a new and cheap edition should be published, have just issued an edition of 50,000 copies. The pamphlet is one of 32 pages (price one penny), and may be obtained of Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and all booksellers. For free distribution copies will be sent direct from the office of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C., at 7s. 6d. per 100, post free. We hope that this valuable paper will be circulated broadcast through the country, as there is great need at the present time to be alive to the workings of Popery both in the public and private life of the nation.

LETTERS FROM ROME.—1.

In passing through Paris, Mr. Lockie, secretary of the Paris City Mission, invited me to accompany him in the evening to 39, Boulevard des Capucines, the salle occupied by Rev. W. Gibson, the Wesleyan minister in Paris. Here I must stay to express my admiration of the evangelistic and unsectarian spirit of the representatives of the Wesleyan body, whom I met last year on the Continent—Mr. Simpson and his coadjutor, Mr. Smith, at Barcelona, Mr. Brown at Madrid, Mr. Whelpton at Havre; and Mr. Gibson, the elder of all these, sets the example in the French capital of the same most desirable and Christ-like spirit.

For eight years Mr. Gibson has adopted the plan of a Sunday evening Conference or Lecture, not ostensibly a directly evangelistic service, though the way of life is always made effectively prominent. On this occasion the lecture was on and I have seldom heard the great truths of the Gospel more fully preached, or more attentively listened to, than they were by that Parisian congregation, largely composed of passers-by, most of whom were men, gathered in by invitation at the door. The lecturer, an aged and venerable-looking man, spoke with great feeling, and his discourse was relieved by a solo sung by his wife, an American lady, equally interested in the subject with himself. Mr. Lockie has kindly sent me the following sketch of the lecture:—

Professor Delaunay (who was originally destined for the Romish priesthood, but became converted by repeated visits to the catacombs of Rome) is now giving a series of "Conferences," with large illustrated painted diagrams, the work of a Christian baron, in Paris. At the Y.M.C.A. rooms, much interest and enthusiasm were excited, also at Rev. W. Gibson's Conference, at 39, Boulevard des Capucines, and now at the large hall of the New American Episcopal Church, Avenue de l'Alma. He entitles his lecture, "The Testimony of the Catacombs to the Faith of the Primitive Church."

What are the catacombs? Who are buried in them? What are the testimonies of the faith of the early Christians? There are sixty-one catacombs, which were originally (like the catacombs under Paris) quarries from which the Romans obtained the cement and stone for building their city. In these subterranean passages the early Christians took shelter in times of persecution. There they celebrated the Lord's Supper, and held their "agapæ" or love feasts. These catacombs extend twenty-two miles from the walls of Rome into the "campagna" or fields around. There exist underground no less than 1200 chapels, also 600 shafts or descents, some with steps, others like holes for ventilation; through the holes the bodies of their martyred brethren and sisters in the faith, and in times of persecution food and raiment, were let down to the Christians below.

There are in the catacombs twenty-two miles of streets, or subterranean passages. On one of these descents is an inscription, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth," an extract from the Revelation of St. John. The early Christians deposited their dead in the chapels, which had tombs like shelves superposed in layers. On these ledges the bodies of the Christians were deposed after having been embalmed. There is in each a central tomb, called the Triumphal Ark. In this common tomb forty, or even a hundred, bodies of martyrs were brought down with songs of triumph and thanksgiving to God, as they went step by step singing the 116th Psalm. Methinks I hear them singing the words: "I love the Lord because He hath heard my voice and my supplications. The sorrows of death compassed me, the pains of hell gat hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow. Then called I upon the name of the Lord; O Lord, I beseech Thee deliver my soul." Over the tomb they placed a marble slab, around which was celebrated the Lord's Supper; the Word of God, the testimony of Jesus, was laid upon the tomb of those who "overcame by the blood of their testimony," who "loved not their lives to the death." From hence was read and preached (a glorious pulpit) the truth as it is in Jesus, which spread from generation to generation, until the end of the third century.

The Christians made no parade of their sufferings, but when the martyrs were left mangled and dying in the amphitheatre, Christian women absorbed the martyrs' blood with sponges or linen, and squeezed it into vases or receptacles, which were then cemented into the stone of the sepulchre, as a witness to their steadfastness in "resisting even unto blood, striving against sin."

The immensity of the catacombs can be imagined by comparing them to five extensive spiders' webs, placed one upon another in entire complicity; no one knows where they begin nor where they end. If these passages, of about two feet wide, could be joined to form one single street, they would extend 900 miles in length. Imagine these 900 miles all bordered by tombs, and you have an idea of the immensity of the catacombs. Tombs upon tombs, graves upon graves, catacombs upon catacombs. Sometimes you go down 50 feet underground, sometimes 100, and even 150 feet. They resemble the layers of strata in a coal-mine. God has preserved these vast catacombs to be silent witnesses of his truth, as it was professed 1800 years ago. The catacombs are named cemeteries, because that word means "a sleeping place," and declares the faith of the primitive Christians on the subject of death. The word "death" is not found in the catacombs; you may travel league after league in the catacombs, and it is not death but life that is expressed everywhere. These early Christians never said of their departed friends "they are dead," but "they sleep." During 450 years seven millions of Christians have been entombed in the catacombs; of this number two millions died as martyrs. This answers the question, Who are buried in the catacombs?

We will now examine into the testimonies of their faith. This is shown by the epitaphs and inscriptions cut or placed over their tombs, thus:—

Lucina—thou sleepest in peace.
Claudia—went to sleep at God's call,
Hermes—thou sleepest.
The name of Christ in symbol in the centre of a [stone.

A very remarkable tomb is one in which four Christians are buried; on the slab are four footprints, signifying that they had left their footprints on the sands of time, and had walked with God on earth, followed in the steps of their Redeemer, in God, in Christ, in faith, in hope —thus:—

IN DEO
IN FIDE
IN CHRISTO
IN SPE

The early Christians used symbols, the meaning of which was known only to themselves, to baffle their Pagan persecutors; and many were illiterate, so that the symbols were to them a language. Their faith in Christ was expressed by the picture of a fish, and by the Greek letters of which the word fish is composed (Ichthūs). The name of Jesus occurs but five times in the whole extent of the catacombs, the name Christ being used in its stead. Why is this? Because the name Jesus is a Hebrew name, but Christ is Greek. They knew very little of the Jewish dispensation in the catacombs. Generally speaking, Jewish names are not found recorded on the tombs. When a Jew became a Christian, after he had been baptized he forsook his Jewish name for a new name, to signify his new birth and entrance into citizenship in the kingdom of God. Thus David would become Apollonius; Saul, when converted and baptized, changed his name to Paulus (the least); the Gentiles, or Pagans, when converted and baptized, changed their names also. The Jewish converts are recognised by the seven-branched lamp of the sanctuary, being found on their tombs with
It is most remarkable that in the catacombs there are no crosses, no sign of the sacrifice of Christ: they had passed the cross, and were looking forward to the crown. They were risen with Christ, having died and been buried with Him, therefore they sought those things where Christ, is at the right hand of God.

Christ, the resurrection, and the life, are the three great articles of faith recorded on these tombs. The confession of the catacombs is the same as Peter's—"Jesus, the Christ, the Son of the living God." The letters of the Greek word, I, ch, th, u, s (fish) are the initials of these five words—*I*ēsous, *Ch*ristos, *Th*eos, *U*ios, *S*ōtēr (Jesus, Christ, God, Son, Saviour). When a convert had been baptized he received a white stone, which was a name which no one could understand except him who received it. This name was the above Greek word for fish, and was the symbolic expression of faith in Christ.

There are baptistries in three of the chapels in the catacombs; the Tiber, being a muddy river, they did not baptize in it, but dug baptistries; the water is entered by a staircase of ten steps. The baptistries were called "piscina," from the Latin word "Piscis," that is, the home of the fish. Three of the African Fathers, writing in the second century, say that the African churches placed a fish (not a dead one, of course) in the baptismal water, and called it on that account "piscina." Upon a tomb is found a painting of a ship, or ark, representing the Church of Christ; the ship rests upon a dolphin—a fish, indicating that Jesus, the Christ, the Son of the living God, is the foundation of the Church. The figure of Christ Himself is represented standing on the prow as the heavenly Pilot.

A painting representing Jonah being vomited by the sea monster is often found on the tombs, being a "sign" of the resurrection of the Lord. There is also a bird feeding on a fish; it is a dove. What can this mean? The dove symbolises the Christian, who feeds upon Christ—the doctrine of the Apostles, the Word of God. Next is a painting of Simon Peter, catching a fish, out of whose mouth drops a coin. The Greek cross is frequently found, but no cross or crucifix until the fourth century. Two doves are looking unto Christ, as the Alpha and Omega. Here is a man leaning on the name of Christ, as a soldier rests on his musket; the N on which he is leaning is the initial letter of the Greek word "Nika"—"Christos Nika," Christ our Victory.

We find also some characteristics of the life of Christ. Christ at the tomb of Lazarus; Christ as the Good Shepherd, followed by his sheep and lambs. This epitaph is the name of a woman, and her new name "Vita," life, because Christ was her life, and her hope of glory. Another painting represents a love-feast—seven persons are represented; the bread used at the Lord's Supper was in the shape of a hand, stamped with the name of Christ. After the love-feast they celebrated the Lord's Supper. Two doves are represented drinking out of a cup—feasting on Christ. Two doves are painted at the Lord's Table. Another picture of a love-feast represents two Christians, a man and woman, sitting at a small table, with a fish. Another represents a woman hymning a triumphal song. Again, women in the attitude of prayer; the early Christians stood, with arms uplifted, and eyes raised heavenwards; they were "looking unto Jesus," seated at the right hand of God. They were "risen with Christ," their sins were remitted, and they looked to Him who is risen, and in glory on high.

They frequently sang and recited parts of Psalm cxvi. A painting of the Last Supper shows Jesus and his disciples sitting, and not kneeling, at the Lord's Supper. Jesus holds in his hand a cup, and with his right hand gives the bread to the next disciple, saying, "Take, eat, this is my body, broken for thee: do this in remembrance of Me, until I return." Here is a chapel, and a group of Christians looking heavenward. If they were asked, "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" the answer would be, "Because this same Jesus who is now in heaven shall so come in like manner as He was seen to go into heaven." This is a picture of a Pagan woman, mourning, robed in black, and the image of despair. She weeps because she has no hope beyond the grave. Here are two Christian women; what a contrast! They are not shedding tears of despair; they look heavenward, are clothed in white robes (no crape, no mourning), and through their tears they see by faith beyond the skies, and those eyes are illumined by hope. The martyrs, when buried, were dressed in bridal array, in ascension robes.

Resurrection—life in Christ the Son of God, is the testimony of the catacombs. An epitaph says, "In the consciousness of Christ my spirit knows no death." The crypts in the Necropolis of Rome were the nucleus out of which burst forth the chrysalis of our modern Christian civilisation. There the sturdy warrior sleeps by the side of the baby martyr; beautiful virgins also sleep there, waiting the Heavenly Bridegroom's call. Truly here "Death is swallowed up in victory." On no tombs is the cruel word "Death" seen, for Christ, our Life, is there. Each tomb tells of "Christ, Resurrection, Life."

There is no clericalism, no pontifical, prelatical or parochial pastor, nor any Pope or temporal head of the Church, no saint or angel worship. Thus, subterranean Rome contains the proof that she has wandered far away from the church's primitive purity—the ancient simplicity has passed away. Paganism, introduced by Constantine, lent her pomps and ceremonies to the new worship. The preaching of Christ and the resurrection brought many sages from the schools of Rome to ask whether there was a hereafter, and that question was answered from the numerous pulpits in the catacombs, and at the amphitheatres, by the martyrs who suffered in the arenas. Some of the epitaphs run thus: "Deus Christus Omnipotens refrigeret spiritum tuum;" "Spiritus tuus in pace;" "Spiritus tuus in bono;" "Spiritum in luce Dominus suscepit." "I have kept the faith" was the martyr's expiring cry of triumph. The dove symbolised the indwelling spirit of him who walks in the beauty of holiness. Doves surround the cup of salvation and the table of the Lord. The Agapē was the school, and the Church the city of Christian love. It was the vestal altar on which was kept alive the flame, the sacred fire of brotherly love. This secret and indissoluble bond proved stronger than the Roman Empire. The churches were burned, their assemblies scattered, the Church members slaughtered, but nothing could dissolve the bond of love.

The diagrams by which the lecture was illustrated added much to its interest. I hope many cities and towns in England will have the opportunity of hearing Professor Delaunay for themselves. R. C. MORGAN.

WAREHOUSEMEN AND CLERKS' SCHOOLS.—At a special meeting held last week the arrangement was ratified whereby, by the payment to the trustees of these schools of £20,000 by the Drapers' committee, that body is admitted to the advantages of the Institution. Twenty orphans and necessitous children of drapers were elected to its benefits.

THE MISSION SHIPS.—The Annie, now at Folkestone, is being made a means of assisting the fishermen in their spiritual and temporal welfare, until a permanent hall or mission-house is erected there. On week days and Sundays the Gospel is preached by the missionary, Mr. King Lambert, and not without blessing. Free teas for merchant seamen and fishermen have also been provided, at which gifts of Bibles, comforters, cuffs, &c., were distributed to the grateful recipients. We hope to remain until the Annie, which is no longer strong enough for cruising purposes, is sold, the proceeds of which will go towards the purchase of the new Gospel ship, Herald of Mercy. The Mystery, our French mission schooner, has been at Boulogne among French, Scandinavian, and English seamen during the past three winter months. Hundreds have been gathered on board to hear the Word of God. The Mystery, after an overhaul, will shortly sail for other ports in France.—Yours faithfully,

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Burton-on-Trent Workhouse drink-bill is 17s. 6d. per head, greatly in excess of the average.

A Bill for the earlier closing of public-houses, in Ireland, on Saturdays, has been read a first time.

The results of the first six months of Prohibition in Rhode Island are reported as "most satisfactory."

About one hundred persons signed the pledge during the week's temperance mission at Wimborne Corn Exchange.

Under the auspices of the Soldiers' Home, Gosport, a temperance mission is being carried on in the Thorngate Hall, at that place.

At a Gospel temperance meeting, conducted in the Corn Exchange, Bourne, by Miss Brewster, of London, 170 persons took the pledge.

The trade tried to upset a recent Local Option meeting at Portsmouth. An amendment was out-voted, and a Local Option resolution carried.

The Mayor of Belfast, a staunch abstainer, recently entertained the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to luncheon at the Town Hall. No intoxicants were served.

Mrs. Reaney conducted meetings at Carlisle, last week, under the auspices of the Gospel Temperance Union. Nearly one hundred pledges were taken.

Mr. S. Wright, M.P., South Nottingham, has promised to introduce a Bill for the granting of licences to makers of non-intoxicating beverages, now unfairly dealt with under the Brewing Act.

The Scottish Temperance League recently entertained to tea a number of the students of Glasgow University. Sir William Collins presided. Addresses were given in favour of total abstinence.

For more than a year no intoxicants have been used in Lambeth Workhouse, either by officials or inmates. One of the guardians writes that to supply drink to able-bodied paupers is illegal.

Mr. Kimber, M.P., will move an amendment to the Sunday Liquor Bill, having for its object the prohibition of the use of intoxicating liquors in clubs, railway-stations, cottage beer-houses, &c.

Miss Haslam, Church of England Temperance Society Women's Union, has been conducting a series of meetings in the diocese of Exeter. In three weeks she delivered twenty-seven addresses.

A very successful Gospel temperance mission has been concluded in Hereford by Mrs. Joseph Lucas, of Sunderland. The hall each night was densely crowded, and it is estimated that nearly a thousand pledges were taken.

A dividend of 10 per cent. has been declared by the British Workman Public-house Company, which is pretty good proof that good management is what is essential to the success of such undertakings. The gross takings of the year amounted to over £82,000.

The landlord of a tavern, in Poplar, has achieved an unenviable notoriety by offering prizes to the six children who buy the largest quantity of drink at his house within a certain time. The Home Secretary has stated in Parliament that the renewal of his licence will be opposed.

The Great Western Railway Temperance Mission now numbers 15,000 members in all its branches. It has five coffee taverns in successful operation, besides two others in course of erection. It was originated on C.E.T.S. lines, and 12,000 members belong to the total abstainers' section.

In the House of Commons, last week, the conduct of certain Indian officials, in reference to the imprisonment of eight men, leaders of the total abstinence movement, was called in question. The now notorious proclamation was, it was replied, withdrawn by the Bombay Government, and the case of the imprisoned men would be inquired into.

A deputation from the Mildmay Christian Police Association recently addressed the St. Paul's (Upper Holloway) branch of the C.E.T.A. Several constables gave instances of the misery and wretchedness they witness day by day, and one was most enthusiastic in wishing success to Sir Wilfrid Lawson's Local Option Bill. There are now between 2000 and 3000 total abstainers in the police force.

The annual meeting of the City Gospel Temperance Union was held last week at Exeter Hall, which was crowded with young women and girls from various metropolitan factories. Through the co-operation of the proprietors, the Society now has access to eighty of these establishments, employing 5000 young persons. During the year upwards of two hundred meetings have been held, mostly in the dinner hour, and over five hundred have signed the temperance pledge.

FOREIGN.

The consumption of Kentucky whisky in the United States has decreased nearly two million gallons in the past year.

The W.C.T.U. at Washington, D.C., has opened a Hope and Help Mission in that city. Such places of refuge for the unfortunate are being established in all large cities.

Intemperance is an astounding check to the development of the coloured race. Two-thirds of the cases that come up in the criminal courts in Richmond, Va., involving coloured people, can be directly traced to the Rev. Dr. Magoun, many years President of Iowa College, says no law on any statute book is better enforced than the prohibitory law of the State of Iowa. Its success is due to popular support.

The pay car on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, in its first trip after the recent accident, carried besides the paymaster a temperance pledge, which every man was required to sign if he desired to remain in the employ of that road.

Last year 29,000 Scandinavians landed on the American shores; they are going in increasing numbers, and in many localities hold the balance of power. They are more easily reached than the Germans, especially now, when temperance work in Sweden has received such an impetus from the King and Queen. The Union Signal urges that temperance work among them should be pushed.

The Belgian Government has under consideration some measures for the repression of public drunkenness. A fine of from 1 to 15 francs is to be imposed on anyone openly drunk in any public place, including any place where intoxicants are sold; a repetition of the offence to be met by a fine of from 5 to 25 francs, and of 26 to 100 francs, or imprisonment of from one to four weeks. The same penalties to be incurred by those who sell any intoxicating liquor to one already drunk, or to one under 16 years of age. Anyone giving drink to a minor, so as to cause him to be intoxicated, to be deprived of the right to exercise certain civil and educational functions. And, finally, offenders' names, and the penalties attached, to be placarded in certain public places at the expense of the offender.—Chrétien Belge.

THE INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION have adopted a petition to Parliament on the subject of international arbitration, to which signatures are invited. It lies at their office for this purpose, and copies will be sent on application to No. 41, Outer Temple, E.C.

THE OLYMPIA HIPPODROME.—Some ladies connected with the evangelistic department of the Y.W.C.A. entertained the lady artistes and children of this place of entertainment at a flower tea party on Wednesday last week, the 16th inst., at St. Matthew's schoolroom, West Kensington. After tea several sacred songs were sung, and earnest addresses given by Revs. W. Handcock, Darwin Fox, Colonel Paschkoff, Lady Sebright, and Mr. Courthope Todd. The speakers were listened to with deep attention throughout, and it is believed that the faithful Gospel message came to not a few as "Good news from a far country," and will bear fruit in due time.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—Three very successful reunions of this Mission have lately been held at Greenwich, the Crystal Palace, and Kennington. At the first the company of the Prince of Wales's Theatre assembled in full force, Mr. C. Morton, the manager, proving by his presence his entire sympathy with the work carried on at Macready House. At the Crystal Palace the company engaged in the pantomime there met together, and at Kennington the companies of the theatres on the south side of the Thames. At each Mr. Courthope Todd was supported by some of the local clergy, and the Gospel message was faithfully given, and proved the power of God unto salvation.

MISS LYDIA M. VON FINKELSTEIN continues her public lectures on Life in the Holy Land with unabated interest. Her audiences are large, and the greetings she receives are of the most cheering character. She will complete her lectures in England on March 31, then pay a short visit to Rome, then to her native city, Jerusalem; and on July 15 she hopes to commence in America a series of lectures, which will be continued, almost daily, to the end of the present year. We have the authority of Miss Finkelstein to say that the reports now in circulation, of her marriage, or her intended marriage, have no foundation in truth. She has no intention of changing her condition in life whilst her lectures continue to be useful and acceptable to the public. Her engagements for the current week are: Feb. 25, Walthamstow; 28, Luton; March 1 and 2, Norwich; 4, Reading.

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, on his way home from China, rested a few days in Cannes, and gave several addresses upon missionary work in inland China. His accounts of the progress of evangelisation, of open doors, and successful labours, were deeply interesting. Many of the details he narrated were very touching. In several places native churches and teachers have been formed, and the work of conversion goes steadily forward. The converts show their reality by at once becoming witnesses for the truth. They save their money, buy hymn-books, Testaments, and tracts, and collect their neighbours to hear the glad tidings which have delivered them from sin. There are no "rice" Christians among them, as they lose position and many advantages by adopting Christianity. The harvest truly is great.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz, the well-known Jewish reformer.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the first Missionary Conference of the season, at Leicester, Feb. 28 and March 1 and 2. Programmes and information can be had from Mr. Float, Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor reached London in time to be present at the usual prayer-meeting at Pyrland-road, on Saturday afternoon. He will give an account of his recent visit to China at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Thursday, March 3, at 7.30.

Dr. George F. Pentecost, pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church of Brooklyn, announced to his congregation on Sunday, January 30, that he had resolved to devote himself exclusively to evangelistic work, and tendered his resignation, to take effect on March 1. His first field of labour will be in Cleveland.

Some of our readers may be disposed to think that in giving so much space in this issue to the past doings of persecuting Rome, we are only endeavouring "to flog a dead horse." We wish we could believe that the intolerant spirit of that system had vanished, or been softened by the lapse of centuries and the more widely diffused light of true Christianity. But, strangely enough, a fact has come to our notice since the report of Mr. Guinness's lecture was in type, that shows how unchanged is the Romish Church, in all the features that have made it so hateful to the friends of religious freedom. Mr. Andrew M. Milne, of the American Bible Society's staff, has lately, with a companion, been promoting Bible circulation in the northern parts of South America. The following is extracted from a recent letter by Mrs. Milne:—

> In a town in Peru the Bishop gathered a number of "the faithful," and made a bonfire of many of the Bibles sold there. Mr. Milne and his fellow-worker have been warned and threatened with imprisonment, &c. Still they were free, and well, and of good cheer. "The God of Daniel will deliver."

We observe there are very diverse opinions expressed by eminent Episcopalians as to the wisdom or otherwise of making the Simultaneous Meetings an annual institution. Some say Ay; a greater number say No; one friend thinks that once in ten years will be often enough. The greatest danger attached to these very large efforts is the almost inevitable recoil. We trust our C.M.S. friends will endeavour to perpetuate the movement by the frequent holding of local gatherings. We believe that this plan, carried out all the year round, is likely to be far more fruitful than yearly meetings on an

A Glasgow "Amateur Vagrant" has been exciting no small stir in that city by his exposure of its social sores through the columns of The Daily Mail. In his wanderings the scribe has also attended some special evangelistic meetings conducted by a "layman," and his comments on what he has seen are not over complimentary to many of the city pastors. Indeed, he seems to pronounce over them the words, "Weighed in the balances and found wanting." He asserts that whatever reviving of spiritual life there is in the community is the result of the efforts of "laymen," as they are called, and that the ordained pastors can do nothing without their help. He asks:—

> How is it that in the midst of these special efforts, recurring seasons of revival, each declared to be greater than the last, we hear but the one cry from the pulpit, "Church attendances are falling off?" Where are the converts going? Are the conversions we hear about permanent or ephemeral? What state, socially and morally, is the city of Glasgow in, with all its expensively built and maintained churches? The vice, the crime, the lewdness, the unmentionable infamy that flaunts itself on our public streets is heartbreaking and appalling. The mass of the people in this and other great cities of Christian Britain are living in a condition that would disgrace a nation of savages. Within a half-mile radius of —— Church there are at least half-a-dozen Free Churches where the ministers Sunday after Sunday are speaking to half-filled pews. Does the Free Church supply not exceed the demand? The question may be put with equal emphasis to the Established, United Presbyterian, and other denominations in the city. The inevitable question follows: Is it worth while to keep up so many ministers who cannot do the very work they were settled in churches to perform, when laymen can fill churches in any part of the city, even on week nights, with no special training for the work?

Other correspondents of the same journal take up the doleful tale. One, who is a Presbyterian office-bearer, declares that the best work in Glasgow is being done by outside organisations, such as the United Evangelistic Association, the Salvation Army, and other societies, which have found it impossible to work under church rules and methods. "An Elder" thus comments on the situation:—

> The minister has the regular routine service—very commonplace, very routine. The people present look as if they were doing penance. There is no hearty praise, or prayer and thanksgiving. Any person accustomed to address an audience can see at a glance they are not interested in the service, far less in the sermon. The preacher is out of sympathy with his hearers. He does not seem to live in the same world with them. He does not understand the weary toil and moil of a working man's existence. The sermon is paper. It might pass as a moral essay, but it is not in any sense a Gospel sermon. The glad, good news of salvation to lost sinners, which never fails to interest, is not in it. Is there any wonder that souls are unsaved? Let me recommend the ministers whose ministry is a failure to ask some of the elders to take their turn in preaching, or the deacons, or the Sabbath-school teacher. I have often thought if we could get together a conference of East-end working-men, and let them speak out all that is in their heart as to the hindrances to Church life and progress, it would astonish our clergy.

These things go to show that our Church systems, like all other institutions, are on their trial. The pressure of our modern life; the spread of education; the enfranchisement of the democracy—these and other elements are combining to bring everything to the test of utility. Mere professionalism and ecclesiastical dignities do not command the homage they once enjoyed, and they will be accounted less and less as the years go by. It must, therefore, become a simple question of self-preservation with our Churches, whether they will adapt themselves to the for whom they exist, or whether they will still further alienate the toiling masses by indifference and lifeless formalism.

No doubt it is easier to recognise and deplore the evil than to point out a sufficient remedy. The fault, we think, cannot be said to lie so much with the pastors as with the system. Too much has been and is expected of the pastor. The powers and capacities of any one man, however good and gifted, are comparatively limited at the best, for actual work. There must be a far greater division of labour, and the utilising to the full of all the varied gifts of the membership. Above all, we need a quickened sense of the true mission of the Church of Christ, as the salt of the earth, the preacher and manifestor of righteous living, and the light-bearer of the Gospel of Divine love and human sympathy. To this end we need the consecrating oil and the dross-consuming fire of the Holy Ghost.

In a recent issue we mentioned that a fund was being raised to commemorate the Jubilee of Mr. D. L. Moody, which occured this month. The proceeds of the fund are to be devoted to the institutions he has established at Northfield, Mass., in which special attention is given to the study of the Scriptures. The institutions are for the youth of both sexes, and young people from England are as eligible as Americans. Gifts may still be sent to Mr. Robert Paton, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. The fund will shortly be closed.

The subject of the sufferings of the rural clergy owing to agricultural depression is becoming one of pressing concern. There has been a correspondence upon it for the last two months in The Guardian, and the publishers of that newspaper have reprinted the substance of the letters. The picture is a harrowing one. Incumbents in the Eastern Midlands, except for private assistance, would be in destitution. Servants are given up; children taken from school; life insurances pledged or sold; books, furniture, and even apparel disposed of.

It is proposed to spend £36,000 for the site alone of a Church House, and tens of thousands must follow. No wonder there are clergymen who write to the papers in indignant protest. No wonder the Leeds Clerical Society has passed the following resolution:—

> A Royal Jubilee Fund for the improvement of the income of the poorer clergy is more worthy of support than a Church House.

A generous and kindly thought of Lord Wolverton has just developed into an act which ought to excite imitation. He has devoted the salary to which he was entitled as Postmaster-General, under the late Government, to the establishment of a fund for sending postmen who require rest and change to a Seaside Home. Such practical acts of kindness are among the things that never die, and we may be sure the name of Wolverton will ever be fragrant among the employés at St. Martin's-le-Grand.

The London Road Car Company, to their credit, stand out against the practice of running cars on Sunday, although they believe their dividend could be increased

Dr. Parker, speaking recently to divinity students at Edinburgh on "Preaching," gave some excellent practical advice. Attention to it would result in reducing the number of sermons which, as he said, might be published under the title of "The Gospel made difficult."

> Your business as preachers is to make what you say as intelligible and simple as possible. Simplicity is the last expression of profundity.

If it is asked how this simplicity can be attained, perhaps the best answer will be found in another utterance of the Doctor, "Steep your minds in the Bible." This is advice which may with advantage be followed by hearers as well as preachers.

Not long ago a minister, who publicly abjured his belief in the divinity of Christ, stated that he had long been preaching Unitarianism without his congregation knowing it; and it is not difficult to understand how such a state of things was possible. A few people hungering and thirsting for the daily bread of Gospel truths and consolation soon would have detected its absence from the pulpit teachings, and the husks of "fine preaching" would have been relegated to their proper place. "Be suspicious of clever outlines," says Dr. Parker, "and in the proportion that they are clever, dislike them."

A movement is going on among Congregationalists in relation to a Prayer Union. It was started by Mr. Sturt, a minister at Dewsbury. It is pleaded that a new departure of the body in evangelistic work must be preceded by a great Prayer Union of the churches; that a strong current is setting in for spiritual life; and that ministers should begin by a brotherhood of prayer on Saturday nights.

The present Pope is said to be the first diplomat in Europe. He was lately described as "the wire-puller of the world." He has given a reply to Prince Bismarck, which was intended to satisfy him on the question that recently agitated the German Parliament; and he has given another, intended to conciliate the Roman Catholics who are in opposition to the Chancellor's scheme. The great electoral battle is being decided as we go to press, but to the Roman Catholics of Germany, as of Italy also, the deference of the Pontiff to military authority has given a shock, of which we do not yet see the end.

We have been harbouring the idea that the use of strong drink had much to do with a high rate of infant mortality. But that is a mistake, if we are to believe the report prepared by the Workington medical officer of health. He ascribes it to tea. The mothers take it three or four times a day, he says, and the children are dosed with it. Another prolific cause of infant mortality was the Salvation Army. The mothers go to the barracks, and in their absence the children are very sadly neglected. The Church Army, he adds, is not much better. General Booth and the Archbishop of York had better see to this—that is, if they can be induced to credit the allegations, which we doubt.

A correspondent, referring to the sketch of Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, which appeared in our last issue, points out what he considers to be a serious Presbyterian Churches, by which such men as Mr. Chalmers, Robert Moffat, and David Livingstone, were driven to seek entrance on their life work through the aid of English Missionary Societies. If the right men get to the mission field, no doubt it matters little who sends them, but it must be to the advantage of the Scottish Churches, among whom the missionary spirit is by no means dormant, to diligently study the course of, for instance, the China Inland Mission, whose ranks are frequently recruited by young men from North of the Tweed.

Such an act of grace and clemency as the following Calcutta telegram foreshadows, ought to help the cause of loyalty and good order throughout the vast Indian Empire:—

> Twenty-five thousand prisoners, being one-third of the number now undergoing sentence in the Indian gaols for criminal offences, will be released to-morrow (February 12) in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee. No convicts will be set free whose release would be likely to be dangerous to society. Special leniency will be shown to female prisoners. All civil prisoners in gaol for debts under a hundred rupees will also be released, the Government paying the debts. Their number is expected to reach 300.

It is a pity the Indian Government do not go two steps further, when they are in this excellent mood. Let them prohibit liquor selling, and the Chinese opium trade, and they will surround the Jubilee year with a halo of unfading glory.

We hope the following statement, taken from an Irish paper, is true; if so, it points to a simple and easy method of staying the gambling plague that rages in mid ocean:—

> A complaint was made by a passenger on the Aurania the second day from Queenstown that he had been cleaned out at poker by two professed Atlantic gamblers who were on board. Captain Haines at once came into the smoke room, and made a speech to the following effect:—"Gentlemen, I do not object to a quiet game at whist on board my ship, but poker and other gambling games I do object to. I have come to warn you that there are two professed gamblers on board. They are known to me, I can see them now, but I will not look at them. I now warn them that if they play another game of poker or other gambling game on board this voyage I will at once have them put in irons and kept prisoners until we reach New York, when I will then hand them over to the authorities." Loud cheers greeted this speech, and from that time to reaching New York not another game of cards, except whist, was played on the steamer.

The Mansion House Council for Metropolitan poverty have reported strongly against the raising of a large Central Fund, except in cases of extreme urgency; they counsel co-operation, and strict investigation in granting relief; condemn indiscriminate almsgiving, and call on the authorities to ruthlessly prohibit street begging. This advice may be very good from a negative point of view, but it affords little help in the solution of the poverty problem. If they could have formulated some feasible scheme for providing employment or encouraging emigration, it would have been more to the point. The great bulk of the poor desire work, not alms; but so long as the whole world is freely permitted to undersell the home producers in our marts of commerce and labour markets, the state of the toiling and dependent classes is likely to wax worse and worse.

The Home Secretary did not give much encouragement to the deputation that waited on him last week with respect to observed that if Government aid were given, there must be Government inspection and control. We fail to see why this is inevitable. Let Government make sure that the emigration agencies they help are worthy of confidence, and then leave the control of the children to them as at present. With so much already on their hands, we fear that little is to be hoped for from the authorities. All the more reason why private efforts should be generously backed up.

With most of the address recently given by Rev. E. White to outgoing medical missionaries we are in cordial harmony. Such sentences as these are golden:—

> There is a marvellous force attending the work of every man who is in Divine earnest, through the indwelling of God's Spirit...Every Christian act or speech has a germ of immortality in it, and has a power of spreading similar germs all around. ...The last influence to which you are to yield is that of despair, arising from the numbers of mankind... It is because we are half blind, or, perhaps, half asleep, that our success is so limited...You must live the Gospel...Love will go farther than light.

Weighty words, indeed, and we trust they will prove to have that power of reproduction to which Mr. White referred. But why should he have gone out of his way to cast wholesale discredit on "traditional creeds and formularies," and to stigmatise, without any adequate cause, what he called "the elaborate extra Scriptural creeds of modern Christendom?"

Such sweeping and unguarded language from one who has done his full share in the way of creed-making is scarcely to be commended. Moreover, he immediately proceeded to set at nought his own advice, when he expatiated with much force and beauty on the doctrines of salvation by grace only, and of the true sonship of believers, points on which many Christians are not entirely agreed. To show in what respects modern creeds are "extra Scriptural" is most praiseworthy, but in these times of invertebrate belief, it is surely unwise to cast an unqualified slur on the "terminology," which, however imperfect it may be, certainly expresses the most reverent and devout thought of the best men of past generations.

The Bishop of Lichfield in a monthly address has uttered a timely warning to his clergy. To Nonconformist pulpits, in many cases, the warning would be equally applicable. The custom of preaching morning and evening, and Sunday after Sunday, all the year round, on isolated texts, and leaving the people without systematic doctrinal instruction is a growing one, we fear. It fails to strengthen faith; leaves the coming generation a prey to novelties, and has nothing to recommend it but that, in days of multiplied pulpit helps, it is easy. Paul told Timothy to give attendance to doctrine.

A glance over our columns devoted to Church news (says The New York Evangelist) will reveal the cheering fact that revivals are occurring in many places. Our pastors are just now at home and busy, each one endeavouring to build the wall over against his own house. These swiftly passing days of the winter are precious, every one.

MR. JOSEPH COOK began his present course of Monday lectures in Tremont Temple, Boston, on February 7. In these lectures he will set himself to answer the question, "In what essentials

MR. G. CLARKE AT ABERDEEN.

We have received from Rev. Dr. D. Brown, Principal of the Free Church College, Aberdeen, an interesting sketch of Mr. Clarke's mission in that city, lately concluded, which we are compelled somewhat to abridge for want of space. Dr. Brown says:—

In compliance with a cordial invitation from ministers and Christian gentlemen of all evangelical denominations, Mr. Clarke began a fortnight's mission in this city on February 3. Noonday prayer-meetings, afternoon Bible-readings, and evangelistic services were arranged for in one Free and two Established churches consecutively in different parts of the city. At all services the numbers increased from day to day, till, by the time they were half through, it became difficult to seat those who were not early in their places; during the last days the churches were filled at the evening service for nearly two hours before the appointed time.

Of the services it is impossible to speak in detail; but one or two features may be noticed:—At the daily noon prayer-meetings Mr. Clarke addressed himself to Christians, and some of us who have to speak at such meetings envied the faculty of talking for some forty minutes with such naturalness and winningness as he did, while seeking, in varied forms and by examples that had fallen under his own observation, to raise the true working activities of Christian life, yet ever keeping in view the basis of it all in union with Christ, and the constant supply of his indwelling Spirit.

One of his most remarkable addresses was at a meeting "for men only," at 9.45 a.m., on the first Sunday of the mission, in the large hall of the Young Men's Christian Institute. The subject announced was, "The Christian Athlete." Before that hour the hall was crowded, both below and in the gallery, so that many had to go away, unable to get in. His illustrations were so striking that they riveted every ear.

Speaking of his experiences in training for athletics he said: "But what are those gentlemen I see lying around the ring, chatting with a pipe in their mouths, and not running at all?" "Oh, these are the gentlemen who support the ring. They did run, some of them, but they tired of it, and now they help to keep up our club." Ay, dear young men, that is what a number of our so-called Christians do. They come to church, put their penny into the plate, and subscribe, perhaps, to the Sustentation Fund; but they don't belong to the club. They are not actual members of the Church, or even if they are externally, are not out and out for Christ.

Passing a crowded meeting at 2.30 that day in the Wesleyan Church, I must say a word about the most remarkable of all the meetings, held on the afternoon of the second Sunday of the mission in the Music Hall, the largest building in town. Before the hour of meeting it was packed, and as the crowd poured in not a chink of vacant space, above or below, was to be seen. "The spirit of power and of love and of a sound mind" seemed to come down upon the speaker in unusual measure and with visible effect, as if his soul were getting down into their souls as he pleaded with them. His subject was "Proud Men and Proud Women," and, as he depicted the pride which could brave every obstacle but the laugh, the sneer, or the contemptuous look of companions, in a strain sometimes withering, sometimes winning, but in both cases alike out of a full heart, he warned them of the "shame and everlasting contempt" which awaited such at the great white throne, but cheered as many as were willing to "Stand up for Jesus," with the confession of their name before his Father and the holy angels at that day. During the singing of the last hymn, to let those quietly away who wished to leave, nearly one half of the whole audience remained, and, after a few affectionate words, and short, silent prayer, he asked as many as were prepared to live out and out for Christ to stand up, when, in twenties and thirties, to the number of 160 or 170, male and female, of every class in society, rose, not a few with tears names and addresses, and more would have done so but for want of convenience where they stood.

The last evangelistic address on Sunday evening, in the Established North Church, will not soon be forgotten by the densely-packed audience, several of the city ministers being present and taking part. At the close, Mr. Clarke expressed his gratitude for the catholicity and cordiality with which he had been supported by the ministers of all denominations, and his thankfulness for the evident tokens of his Master's presence, and the power from on high which had rested on the meetings. And no wonder, for, beyond doubt, hundreds were moved as they had never been before—some to an earnest desire to be saved, others to decision for eternity; while Christians in all stages of the Christian life felt that they had received a quickening which they hope to turn to good effect in their several spheres of Christian work.

One feature of Mr. Clarke's work must not be omitted—the eminent success which he has had here and elsewhere among young gentlemen, and especially young ladies of the better or "West-end" class. To God be all the praise.

FISHING AMONG THE FISHERMEN.

Mr. Samuel McKenzie has concluded a very successful three weeks' mission in the fishing village of Sandend, on the north-east coast of Scotland. From the first the meetings were well attended, and during the last fortnight the public schoolroom in which the meetings were held has been crowded almost every night. The whole village has been moved; anxious ones have been earnestly seeking the way of life, and a number have professed to take the Lord Jesus as their Saviour and Master. At the closing meeting, in response to a request that those who were favourable to the formation of a Sunday Morning Fellowship Association should remain behind, twenty-five men remained and formed themselves into an Association to meet every Sunday morning for an hour's prayer and study of the Word of God.

Mr. McKenzie is doing a noble and Christ like work in this district by seeking to evangelise the smaller villages, which are too often overlooked by evangelists in their honourable desire to speak to large crowds, and to see large numbers brought to the feet of Christ. S.

DR. THAIN DAVIDSON in his latest sermon to young men at Colebrook-row gave his hearers some admirable advice as to sobriety of life. The discourse is fully reported in The Islington Gazette of the 16th instant.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.—A branch of this Association has just been opened in Hanley-road, Finsbury-park, for the shelter of girls and young women who desire to lead honest and virtuous lives. The Home will be managed by a sub-committee, Mrs. Bailhache taking the immediate oversight of the work. The expenses for the first year are estimated at £250, of which about £40 has been promised. Gifts of furniture, wearing apparel, &c., will be gratefully received by Mrs. Bailhache, 17, Wilberforce-road, Finsbury-park. It is by the establishment of such Homes in different parts of the Metropolis, and the vigilant action of the committees which supervise them, that we may hope, not only that a great rescue work may be done, but that the tide of immorality may be checked in its very springs.

THE BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH ON MODERN SOCIETY.—Preaching on Sunday morning at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, to a congregation, including the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Mayor, and members of both Houses of Parliament, Dr. Magee pleaded for the rescue of fallen women, which, he urged, could be effectually carried on only by Christian workers, and by women of education, culture, and sympathy. He strongly denounced those mothers who received into their houses, and, worse still, gave the hands of their daughters in matrimony to men who had caused and created these victims of fallen humanity, as a peer's robe, like charity, was supposed by women to hide a multitude of sins. To such professing members of and worshippers in the Church, the Lord would pronounce the curse,

LONDON CITY MISSION.

The sixth annual conversazione on behalf of this noble work was held at the Mansion House on Friday last, by the courtesy of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, about 500 ladies and gentlemen being present.

Lord Herschell, in moving a resolution that all efforts to relieve the poor are ineffectual which leave their characters untouched, said that, much of the existing social wretchedness being due to moral causes, it could only be cured by a remedy which went to the root of the matter. Vice is not by any means limited to any one class or rank of life, but the poorer have severer temptations, because of the very wretchedness in which they live. People are sometimes a little discontented with what they call the very small results of a Society like the London City Mission, and no doubt from one point of view the results do seem small compared with the mass of wretchedness that exists; but looking at the case from another point of view, the gain is very great. It may seem a small thing that one man who has been a curse to his family should become a blessing, but how infinite the gain to the family if that man, instead of cruelty, shows love—instead of neglect, care and consideration. If results are looked at from this point of view, though numerically small, they are really substantially great.

A very vivid and graphic account of a missionary's work was then given by Mr. Baker, who has for ten years been engaged in this work. He urged the possibility of reaching the hearts of those who are visited, and though this is done through many rebuffs and occasional insults, yet when it is accomplished the greatest opposers often become the firmest friends.

Sir Charles Warren, whose sympathy towards work of this kind, and unqualified support of the temperance cause are of great value, said that a great deal had been done by the teetotal societies; but whatever good resolves the people made, they could not carry them out unless they had help from above; and it was by the London City Mission and kindred societies that they were led into the right way to obtain this help. Therefore it seemed to him that those who were desirous for the peace and prosperity of London should make some great effort to increase the number of such workers. Sir Charles also referred to the good work the Mission was doing among the police and the cabmen.

Then followed a long and impassioned appeal from Rev. Burman Cassin, whose words were words of power as he pleaded (1) for co-operation amongst Churchmen and Dissenters in the great battle against vice and sin in our vast city; (2) for the practical sympathy of the well-to-do classes who live in the suburbs, and consequently are not brought into contact with the lamentable condition of the East-end.

The proceedings were varied by an excellent musical programme.

The "silver" anniversary of the Shadwell Branch was celebrated on Tuesday last week by a tea and public meeting in Love-lane. The district superintendent, Mr. J. Rennie, presided. The report for the year contained many gratifying statements, which proved that God has abundantly blessed the work. The working-men's Bible-class has an average attendance of seventy-seven. The whole work is in a vigorous and healthy state. Brief addresses were delivered by Revs. B. Sackett and J. B. Barraclough, and Messrs. George Harris, G. Wade, F. C. Mills, and others. Reference was made to the energy and devotion which Mr. Harris, the missionary, exercises in his efforts in the neighbourhood.

MISSIONARY BREAKFAST AT OXFORD.—Amongst the company at Canon Christopher's annual Oxford réunion were several well-known missionaries, and, seated next to Professor Legge, a very intelligent-looking Chinese gentleman, whose calm and reposeful demeanour was in striking contrast to the Western life and vivacity around him. Bishop Moule, in the course of a quiet, earnest account of the work being done in China, gave a good insight into the everyday life and work of the missionary. The Bishop, who has been out thirty years, said he was not a Bishop Hannington—he had not a spark of enthusiasm in him. There were bishops and bishops, missionaries and missionaries—all were wanted. The great thing is to go HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The monthly workers' meeting was attended by those who longed to know the mind of the Spirit through the Word by the lips of his servant, Rev. J. Wilkinson. For an hour the Scriptures, from Abraham to the Apostles, were opened up, bringing out clearly that the duty and privilege of every believer in the Lord Jesus is now to show kindness to God's ancient people, who are to be the evangelists of the world in due time.

The evangelisation of the world, said Mr. Wilkinson, is to be done now, and the command, "Preach the Gospel to every creature," is as binding upon the Church to-day as if everybody were to be converted under its preaching. It is a glorious thing to get our life-work from God. Wait on the Lord for hours, days, weeks, if need be, but get it direct from Him. The world is to be blessed now, but we must find out God's way of doing it. In proportion as we get the Jews evangelised they will become glorious helps in the evangelisation of the world. They believe three-fourths of the Bible, and they are neither wife-beaters nor drunkards. Where are the Jews to-day? Where are they not? They are in all lands, have access to all people, are familiar with the habits and customs of all lands: they have a physical constitution which will acclimatise with all countries; and a readiness to acquire languages.

Many workers went away greatly profited, having obtained clearer light on this important matter. The chairman of the evening, Mr. S. R. Briggs, from Canada, gives the following testimony of Miss Macpherson's work on that side:—"It has been my privilege for many years to watch, with no little interest, you and your work, more especially in reference to the children placed out in Canadian homes, and, therefore, feel it incumbent upon me to state that you have in this matter given good evidence that you believe in practising what you preach; the record of the thousands you have placed out in Canada give good proof of this. Your eighteen years' experience in the work, as well as the faithful services of Mr. and Mrs. Merry, who have the oversight of your great charge in Canada, is a guarantee that we shall still have quality rather than quantity, as regards the emigration of children. If this rule were observed, I am fully persuaded our people in Canada would most gladly welcome, and find good homes for all such children.

"THE VIGILANCE RECORD" is the title of a new monthly started to further the objects of the National Vigilance Association. If the promise of the first number is kept up, it will vindicate its name. Mrs. Ormiston Chant has undertaken the conduct of the paper, and we trust that social reformers will give it every encouragement in its benificent mission.

HELP FOR POOR.—Sir,—For eighteen years I have lived and laboured in the very heart of East London, and am sorry to say that the distress this winter is nearly as great as ever. Multitudes of families, through no fault of their own, are in absolute want, tender women and frail children literally crying for bread. For a pound we can provide twenty substantial food parcels for as many desolate homes. About 400 starving families have long been assisted by us weekly, but our funds are nearly gone.

REV. W. CUFF, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, preached on behalf of Tanner's-end Gospel Mission, on the 16th instant, in Edmonton and Tottenham Congregational Church. A public meeting was subsequently held in the church at 7.30, when Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., presided. The work commenced seven years ago, in a back kitchen, was transferred to a barn without flooring, and from thence to a cart-shed, at a rental of £10 per annum. Twelve months ago a building was erected, in which a progressive mission is being carried on. Revs. T. Bagley, W. Cuff, and D. Russell, also addressed the meeting. The hon. sec. is Mr. Herman Saunders, 122, Upper Fore-street,

AMERICAN EVANGELISTS.

MAJOR COLE IN SEDALIA, MO.

Great good is being accomplished in this city by Major Cole and the resident ministers. Major Cole has a way of presenting the Gospel that compels the average hearer to acknowledge the truth of his statements. Every meeting results in the conversion of some. Old residents of the city say that Sedalia has never before enjoyed such a religious revival.

MESSRS. PENTECOST AND STEBBINS.

Dr. Pentecost has held a series of meetings in the Rink at Winsted, Conn., the result of which is from two to three hundred conversions. Dr. Pentecost was assisted by Mr. Stebbins, and people came from the surrounding villages to attend the services, carrying the revival spirit back to their homes, and the work is spreading in all that section.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND McGRANAHAN.

These evangelists, assisted by Mr. C. Herald, have been busy for several weeks at Harrisburg, Pa., and their labours have been abundantly blessed. Several churches united in the work. Major Whittle's intensely earnest addresses, and Mr. McGranahan's impressive rendering of the Gospel hymns, have combined in awakening many to soul concern. Mr. Herald has conducted the overflows.

At the close of the four weeks' mission a Convention was held, when Mr. G. H. Stuart and Rev. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, with others, aided the evangelists in the consideration of the various important topics brought forward.

MR. SANKEY IN NEW YORK.

The Cooper Union service last Sunday was largely attended (says The Observer of Feb. 10). Rev. Dr. S. B. Rossiter, of the North Presbyterian Church, preached on the final judgment. The address was a very solemn one, and was listened to with marked attention on the part of the large congregation. Mr. Ira D. Sankey sang and spoke, and also conducted the inquiry-meeting which followed the larger service. There were a number of hopeful cases, and the workers went away with grateful hearts, realising that prayer had been answered, and the work owned of God in the salvation of immortal souls. Mr. Sankey is to aid in the service again next Sunday, after which he leaves for the Y.M.C.A.'s State Convention at Utica. At the close of this Convention he is to join Mr. D. L. Moody in Chicago.

MR. MOODY IN CHICAGO.

Mr. Moody's work in Chicago is making itself felt more and more every week. Thus far its influence has been chiefly confined to the West Side, where he is still labouring. After each of the services the inquiry-rooms have been well filled. Up to the close of the meetings in the First Church, Sunday night, Dr. Goodwin thinks that nearly six hundred persons have been in the iniquiry-rooms there. The greater number of people hitherto reached have not been in the habit of attending church. The peculiarity of the meetings till now, though held in churches, is that they have been attended by non-churchgoers, who have been visited and urged to attend by church members whose hearts are set on doing good in Christ's name.

At one meeting Mr. Moody made the following announcement:—"We are organising a society to do special mission work in this city. We want to get a hundred lady missionaries to visit those who do not attend church, and we want devoted women to go to them in the garret or in the cellar and read the Word of God to them. I have no hope of reaching the city of Chicago in any other way. There are thousands who will not come to church any way, but there are thousands also who would like to come but cannot, and we shall have to reach them. You cannot go through the streets without seeing hundreds of men drunk, and they represent homes; many of them have wives and children, and those wives must be seen and encouraged in their homes, and led to the Lord Jesus."

MR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM

has been conducting a series of special services at Cleveland, Ohio. On Sunday, Feb. 6, besides preaching morning and evening, he addressed a large meeting at the Central Friendly Institution, and gave a plain talk to men only at the Y.M.C.A. rooms. The News and Herald says of him that he speaks with unabated vigour. Mr. Needham believes that the Word of God is quick and powerful for the conversion of sinners, and he makes this his rule of action. He is ably assisted by his wife, who invariably takes charge of the afternoon services for Bible study.

MESSRS. MUNHALL AND TOWNER.

These evangelists have had a time of great blessing at Dr. Talmage's Church in Brooklyn. In an interview with the representative of the New York World, Dr. Talmage said:—

"The work surpasses our highest expectations. There have been over five hundred additional memberships to this church. The number of conversions is over two thousand. When it is known that these come from all parts of the country, I think we have a right to feel rejoiced at the good work. Hundreds of these we will never see again. The remarkable character of these revivals has been the quietness with which they have been carried on. Yet many prominent men, women, and children have come in, and the Church is wonderfully reinforced. Dr. Munhall has preached with extraordinary effect. The Professor and Mrs. Towner have played and sung with great force at all the meetings. I never heard of a revival carried on on so great a scale. Although we have received such a great number of members, let me say that not one has been received into this Church without having gone through a thorough and careful examination. No person is admitted here but such as have shown good evidences of a change of heart, and a disposition to thorough consecration. I am happy to say that already one hundred and fifty young men, representing some of the best families in Brooklyn, have come out and joined us, and I have no doubt many will yet become evangelists."

The Mission was to end on Sunday, 18th inst. Dr. Munhall, with Mr. and Mrs. Towner, were then to hold a week or ten days' Mission at the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A., and after that to commence a campaign in Dr. A. J. Gordon's Church in Boston.

Rev. E. P. Hammond was announced to begin special services at Washington Heights on Sabbath, February 17. These union services were to be continued day and evening during the week following, and it may be for a longer time.

COTTAGE HOSPITAL FOR FISHERMEN.—Among other propositions put forward for fitly marking Her Majesty's Jubilee, is one to found a Cottage Hospital in Gorleston, Suffolk, principally for the benefit of the North Sea fishermen. The district has a population of about 14,000 inhabitants, chiefly dependent upon the fishing industry, and there are 2,500 fishermen belonging to Gorleston alone. The proposed hospital will have accommodation for from eight to ten beds, and the fishermen have expressed great delight at the prospect of such an institution being founded. The proposition has the warm support of the principal inhabitants, headed by the Vicar and other ministers.

A CONTRAST.—Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool, has written as follows to Sir Andrew Walker:—"Dear Sir,—Your letter, and the announcement it contains of your generous intention to contribute the munificent sum of £10,000 towards the erection of the proposed Cathedral of Liverpool, has afforded me deep gratification. On behalf of myself and the Churchmen of the diocese, I ask you to accept our hearty thanks." Another clergyman, Canon Wilberforce, wrote some time ago:—"It is said that every man has his price. But I say that Almighty God is not to be bought. He is not to be bought with gold that is blistered with the orphan's tear—by gold that is steeped in the mother's blood—by gold that is cankered with the mildew of England's sin. And I say again that I would sooner see the Cathedrals rot upon the ground than they should be re-built by the colossal fortunes that have been raised from the drinking idiocy of the English people."—Alliance News.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Mr. J. B. Wookey will conduct a Gospel mission in Brighton in connection with the Y.M.C.A., from Feb. 26 to March 6.

Brighton.—Owing to the recent fire at Steine House, the daily noon prayer-meeting is now held at the Royal Pavillion. Visitors are invited to attend.

Ealing.—This day (Thursday) Mr. George Williams will preside at the opening of Shaftesbury Hall, Ealing—an iron structure lately used as a Presbyterian Church, but now acquired by the local Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Geo. H. Marsh has been labouring with much success at different points in Ontario and elsewhere. He has accepted invitations to hold evangelistic meetings in connection with the Association at Peterborough, Ontario.

A Good Way to form a branch of the Association is to get the churches to unite in a series of Gospel meetings on neutral ground, and to ask Mr. Thorne, as the representative of the English National Council of the Y.M.C.A., to conduct them. Friends wishing to do this should communicate with Mr. Thorne, whose private address is 3, Mill-hill-road, Derby.

Weston-super-Mare. — A most encouraging Mission has been concluded here by Mr. W. R. Lane. Our hearts are filled with praise for blessings received; many souls have been brought to the Lord. The Bible readings each afternoon were largely attended and were very helpful. The young converts are confessing Christ and doing all they can to bring their companions to our services which are held every Sunday evening.

FRED. J. RAYNER, Secretary.

German Young Men in London.—In connection with the German Y.M.C.A., at 28, Finsbury-square, E.C., a Christian Home has been opened for German bakers and artisans resident in London. The Home is managed strictly on Christian principles, and aims at offering protection from the dangers of low lodging houses, and at bringing the people under the direct influence of the Gospel. The new Home is situated in 90, Great Eastern-street, Shoreditch, E.C., and may be inspected every day, except on Sundays.

Bournemouth. — It is not surprising that the year which has witnessed the opening of the Cairns Memorial House as the future home of this Association should have had a large accession of new members—141—bringing up the total to 270. The Sunday afternoon Bible-class has been well attended, and devotional and prayer-meetings have been continued with increased success. The recent mission conducted by Rev. W. R. Mowll and Captain Dawson, resulted in blessing to many of the members. The various educational classes are now in full work, and it is matter for sincere congratulation that so large a library (900 vols.) has been added to the working power of the Association.

Ryde.—The report read at the twenty-ninth annual meeting of this Association states that it is in a most hopeful and prosperous condition. The Sunday Bible-class has an attendance of from sixty to one hundred, and some of the members have become teachers in the Sunday-schools. Open-air services are regularly held, at which large crowds have listened with interest to "the story of the Cross," told with earnest simplicity. A mission band has also been doing good work in the villages. Lectures and classes have been effective agents in intellectual culture, and Hazelwood, the well-known Home of Rest and Recreation for Commercial Young Men, has not only contributed much to the enjoyment of its 1361 visitors, but has been instrumental in leading many to decision for Christ.

Tottenham, N.—The annual meeting of this branch was held last week at the new hall in Forster-road, Tottenham. The report for the past year stated that the Bible-class had maintained the foremost place among the Association's agencies. The Evangelistic Society has done good work since its formation in September, and a Police Bible-class has been conducted during the year at the request of the Local Christian Policemen's Association. The chairman, Mr. de Selincourt, said he had himself mixed with all sorts and conditions of men, and the conclusion forced upon his mind was that the only life worth living was a Christian life. Rev. T. Bagley said he knew the evangelistic work in connection with the society was being appreciated, and was beginning to tell in more senses than one. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, also testified to the good work the Association is doing

Islington. — A never-to-be-forgotten mission has been held at the Priory by Mr. Henry Varley. The afternoon Bible-readings were well attended and highly appreciated by an audience of members of all the churches. The evening meetings, which were devoted to young men only, were marvellously powerful, and on the Saturday evening the hall was packed. We are trusting, writes Mr. Atkinson, the secretary, that the numbers of young men who have consecrated themselves to God under our friend's labours will come out as shining lights, as their predecessors have done on former occasions.

Montreal.—The thirty-fifth anniversary of this the oldest society on the continent of America (being just a fortnight older than that at Boston) was recently held. Mr. R. H. Holland, the president, expressed the hope that the Association would be speedily provided with a building in every way fitted for their growing work. Mr. Budge, the secretary, brought the work of the Association before the meeting in a very stimulating way. The claims of the Association on the sympathy and support of the Christian public were put with great power, both by Mr. H. M. Moore, of Boston, and Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D., of New York.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Herbert Francis conducted special services last week in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at Ealing.

Gateshead.—Special services were held for children, by Mr. George Banaster, in Gateshead, from January 22 to February 7.—The meetings were held in various Nonconformist places of worship. There were many cases of deep impression, and, we trust, conversion.

Devonshire.—Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, has held a mission at the seaside villages of Seaton and Beer, which has had very blessed results in stirring up Christians, and leading sinners to the Saviour. A good number of Sunday-school children have given their hearts to God during the mission.

Mr. William Hall, evangelist, Annan, has closed a three weeks' mission in the Mechanics' Hall, Longton, near Carlisle. Hundreds gathered to hear the old, old story, and the truth has carried conviction to many souls. The evangelist has commenced a mission at Moniave, Dumfriesshire.

Kingston.—A very successful ten days' evangelistic mission, arranged by the Kingston-on-Thames Evangelistic Association, has recently been conducted at the Albany Hall of that town by Mr. J. J. Scroggie. Some largely attended meetings were held, and, apparently, much good seed has been sown.

The Manchester and Salford Bible Van, managed by Mr. C. Clements, a colporteur of the Bible Society, has been a feature on the Market ground at Preston for some weeks. Large crowds have been attracted. Several thousand copies of the Scriptures have been sold. The addresses by Mr. Clements were attentively listened to.

Fraserburgh, N. B.—Mr. F. E. Marsh has been labouring here for the past fortnight with great acceptance. Almost every night there were souls inquiring the way to salvation, many of whom went away rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. Mr. Marsh gave occasional Bible-readings, which were largely attended and thoroughly enjoyed.

Southport.—A ten days' mission, in the Cambridge and Town Halls, conducted by Mr. C. Duxbury, has proved a source of blessing to many. Mr. Duxbury has been assisted by several local friends. The afternoon Bible-readings in the Town Hall have been very enjoyable. There was a service, for men only, in the Cambridge Hall, on Sunday, Feb. 13, when a large number of working-men were present. Hundreds of souls have been blest; many have found peace in believing through the instrumentality of these services.

A Mission Week at St. Kitts.—Rev. Alexander McAulay writes with reference to the Centenary Mission held in this island in the West Indies. During the mission week the church at Basseterre was filled. "The hearers listened with intense eagerness, and many received the Word with readiness. The large school-room was used as an inquiry room, into which from two to four hundred went every night." A pleasing feature of these missions is that all classes of the community, forgetting denominational barriers, throng to hear the evangelists from England. Mr. McAulay concludes by saying:—"We are now missioning St. Vincent's, where people are falling down in agonising distress about their souls. Deep conviction of sin is needed in these islands."

Mr. John Elliott has recently conducted a month's mission in Rev. Pelham Stokes' Mission room, Wareham. The meetings have been largely attended, and numbers have professedly passed from death to life.

Plumstead.—God has graciously blessed a week of special services recently held at Cage-lane Mission Hall by Miss Haire, of Weston-super-Mare. Many have professed conversion, and believers have been strengthened.

Seacombe, Cheshire.—The first anniversary of the Cottage Mission here has been held. The work is carried on by Miss Owen, of Egremont, assisted by Miss Moore. The mission is situated in the midst of the poorest and lowest class of people. Much good has already been done, while the outlook is most encouraging. Some of the greatest drunkards of the place have been influenced.

"A DEN OF THIEVES."—Mr. Hosack, the Clerkenwell magistrate, has directed the police to make inquiries as to a private club in the north of London, which he characterised as a "den of thieves."

AN ENCOURAGING TESTIMONY.—Mr. Justice Denman, at the Bristol Assizes, expressed his satisfaction that the amount of crime throughout the country this winter has been below the average, notwithstanding the temptations presented through lack of food and employment. This good result he attributed, first, to the spread of temperance; second, to that of education; and, third, to the work of Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies.

NEW RESCUE HOME, BRIGHTON.—A Home, situate at 73, Queen's-park-road, has been opened, and is intended for those who, having moved in the better classes of society, have fallen into open sin. For such Christian succour can do much, and the scheme has already received considerable promise of support from the Bishop of the diocese, and many of the clergy, and others. The Home will accommodate twelve or fourteen inmates. The rooms are to be comfortably furnished, and every care will be taken to provide for the temporal as well as spiritual welfare of those who here seek a shelter in their time of trouble. The hon. sec. is Miss E. H. Cooke.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE. — On Wednesday evening, last week, an interesting lecture was delivered by Professor Gordon Bowman, in the Pastors' College, in aid of the funds for Castle-yard Sunday and Ragged-school, now in great distress, owing to dilapidation. In the course of his lecture Professor Bowman urged the claims of Castle-yard, which was instituted by Rowland Hill, and which has for nearly eighty-five years been the scene of devoted Christian labour among the very poorest children of Southwark. We earnestly trust the friends may be enabled to continue their good work. The hon. secretary of the committee is Mr. H. Ebdon, 44, Richmond-terrace, Clapham-road, S.W.

MR. HENRY VARLEY is warring against immorality in its various phases. On Saturday last he addressed a crowded audience of men at the Priory, Islington. On Thursday (this day) a demonstration of men only is to be held at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Whitechapel-road, at 8 p.m. On Friday, March 4, the friends of Social Purity in Chelsea have secured the New Town Hall for one of Mr. Varley's addresses at 8 p.m. On the Tuesday following, March 8, Exeter Hall has been secured for a mass meeting of men only at the same hour. Tickets for the last-mentioned meeting can be obtained free at Exeter Hall or any branches of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Varley is dealing with fresh and important phases of this whole question.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH-ROAD.—The anniversary of the mission work carried on here was held on Monday of last week, and was a time of much soul-stirring and refreshing to all. The Hon. A. F. Kinnaird presided, and encouraging addresses were given by Dr. J. A. Dunbar, Mr. J. S. Brunning, Mr. Robert Paton, Rev. E. Henderson, and others. The church is situated in a densely populated neighbourhood, and the work done by the pastor (Rev. D. M. Cameron) and his helpers amongst the thousands of working men has been greatly blessed. There has been steady progress in all departments of effort. About 700 meetings have been held during the year, and 50,000 tracts have been distributed. During the winter a soup kitchen has been ministering to the wants of the people, and about 70 unemployed men have been supplied with a meal of soup and bread each day. Some sixty persons have lately joined in fellowship. Towards the building fund of the new tabernacle, opened in May last, about £1200 has been already

"I knew a poor laundress, who was once thrown in a desolate part of the country, far from the ordinances of God, or communion with the saints; but who lived (blessed be His name who doeth all things well!) in joyful communion with the King of Saints. . . . 'What can I do here for the Lord?' was the first question the new-comer addressed to herself, when she had settled in her strange home. . . . THE FORCE OF GENTLENESS.

All the mightiest forces of Nature are quiet. Gravitation, which holds the planets in their spheres, works with ease and in silence; the morning dawns without any noise or violence; light and air, though all around us—the elements in which we live—come and go in stillness. Summer heat and winter cold, penetrating and powerful as they are, are gentle in their operations. The deepest waters are the stillest. Electricity—one of Nature's mightiest forces—is yet subtle and impalpable. We see it not, and yet it is one of our most useful agents, serving us in a thousand ways. In the form of Magnetism it is more beneficent than in any other. Its gentleness must not be mistaken for weakness, for as a curative agent it is unequalled. Miss M. C. Westall, 13, Belle Vue, Hastings, writing on January 5, 1887, says:—"I shall be happy to bear testimony to the efficacy of your Treatment by Magnetism: slowly but surely has there been manifest improvement in my health. As you are aware, for years I suffered from extreme weakness and lassitude, but now I can speak of a larger measure of health and strength than I felt it possible to anticipate. The best testimony I can offer is the recommendation to others to write for your kind advice, at the same time persuading them to persevere and act upon the same, even if there should be no apparent improvement for the first two months."

The Fountain of Youth is an expression suggestive of Fairyland, yet certain investigators have at various times cherished the idea that an eternal elixir or a perpetual revivifier might be brought into operation. Such persons must have lost sight of the Source of human life, or they would never have indulged in such presumptuous flights of fancy. Decay must take place in process of time wherever there is life, but human felicity is sadly curtailed by the customs which have become part of our daily routine. People become old before their time, and premature decay and death are so common that very few enjoy a full term of years. Though we cannot have a fountain of youth, we have in our midst that which can enable our faculties to retain their vigour for the full period, thus setting at nought tendencies to its curtailment.

We have received the following from Mrs. E. Stead, Outwood House, Horsforth, near Leeds:—"I am so much indebted to your Treatment, through God's blessing; my life has been continued for nearly thirty years since all hope of restoration was given up—indeed, my recovery two years ago has been next to a miracle. I attribute also my husband's continuing in tolerable health to his new Magnetic Belt and Vest. Our doctor is greatly amazed at his improvement; at one time he told me that he would not guarantee his life for forty-eight hours. I have told him of your Appliances, and have often recommended them to him, telling him I am a living witness to their efficacy. I am seventy-one, and my husband seventy-eight years old, and as we cannot expect to testify much longer to the virtues of your Magnetic Treatment, we feel we should do what we can while we do live. I hope your efforts may become more and more appreciated." It is calculated that man's term of residence upon this earth should be from 100 to 120 years. How does this compare with our Registrar-General's returns? The surest corrective will be found by bringing ourselves into harmony with nature's forces—the most subtle, Odo-Magnetism, is one which naturally imparts increased vigour to the system. Numbers have testified that they have felt "a new lease of life," and it has maintained heartiness and vigour in many at the age of fourscore years. Full particulars of this natural remedy, together with reliable testimonies from persons of high repute, and list of 1,000 referees, post free on application to Mr. B. Copson Garratt, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C. Consultation, personally or by letter, free.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

"AS WELL FOR THE BODY AS FOR THE SOUL."

Until five years ago upwards of 12,000 smacksmen toiled in the North Sea at all seasons, in all weathers, in constant danger, and not only cut off from the joys and comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid. To-day seven Mission vessels cruise with the fleets (running the same risks, exposed to the same furious gales as the trawlers themselves) in order—

1. That injuries and illness may receive prompt help and healing.
2. That true friends may supplant and banish from the fleets that enemy of the English smacksmen, that pest of the North Sea—the foreign coper, or floating grog shop.
3. That dull and monotonous lives may be cheered and brightened by their presence and ministry.

☞ During the year 1886, more than 3,000 cases of sickness and accidents have been successfully treated in the Dispensary on board the various Mission vessels.

THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH" says:—
"The Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen has been instrumental in making the fishing-grounds too hot for those abominable purveyors of fiery spirit and bad tobacco—the Dutch copers. It cares for the men, and has its reward in their love and gratitude."

The Book World.

PICTURES OF ST. PETER IN AN ENGLISH HOME. By A.L.O.E. 5s. Nelson & Sons. This cleverly illustrated book contains jewels of truth in a chaste setting. We hope the story may have many readers, for there is much in it to stimulate, warn, and encourage the young in the battle of life.

OLD PATHS. No. i. The Adaptation of Holy Scriptures to the Moral and Spiritual Wants of Man. By Rev. J. RATE, M.A. 4d. James Nisbet & Co. This is an evangelical and practical sermon on the way in which the Bible satisfies the deepest needs of man's nature. It deserves a large circulation.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR. By Rev. JOSEPH S. EXELL, M.A. No. 4. 7d. James Nisbet & Co. Mr. Exell's cyclopædia improves as it goes on. Literature and life are ransacked for anecdotes, and similes to open windows in sermons through which light may shine on the truths behind. The selection of what is suitable reveals the editorial skill of one who knows from experience what is needed most.

THE THEOLOGICAL REVIEW AND FREE CHURCH COLLEGE QUARTERLY. 1s. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace. The second number of this magazine is even better than the first. "Religion on its true basis" shows in a scholarly and trenchant manner the weakness of a religion which has not its foundation in faith in Christ. "The moral reasonableness of the atonement" is a rather ambitious attempt—the writer soars higher than his wings will carry him; but Professor Lindsay's historical sketch of evangelical poverty in the centuries before the Reformation is admirable.

ACCORDING TO PROMISE; or, The Lord's Method of Dealing with his Chosen People. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 1s. Passmore & Alabaster. Reading many of the professedly religious works which pour from the Press is like wandering in a desert, where the sand is abundant, and refreshing water is scarce. But, when we get a book from Mr. Spurgeon's busy pen, we feel as if we had come to an oasis, where we may rest and taste the sweetness of the loved God. This feeling is very strong as we turn over page after page of his latest production. Thirsty souls will find satisfaction in it. The comfort and the blessedness of the promises which make the Bible bright with hope, are set forth with the fulness of detail and unction of expression we expect from a master in Israel.

A very striking pamphlet has been written by Dr. ELIZABETH BLACKWELL (6d. Kensit), entitled, "The Purchase of Women: The Great Economic Blunder." The first title repels us, though it is a simple representation of a brutal and melancholy fact. The argument of the pamphlet, briefly, is that on purely economic grounds the immoral commerce of the sexes stands condemned, by its violation of Divine law, and will surely find its Nemesis in the degradation and deterioration of the race. Dr. Blackwell fortifies her position by an array of facts and reasons that are irresistible, and are stated with all the intense moral earnestness and literary skill for which she is so honourably known. The pamphlet deserves to be carefully studied by all who can in any way help to mould public opinion and influence individual character.

TALES OF THE CITY. 2d. Partridge & Co. This little book contains three stories by a City Missionary illustrative of the power and grace of God.

THE SHIPWRECKED MARINER. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin, 26, Paternoster-square. Besides many stories of storm and tempest, and chronicles of disaster at sea, there is much in this quarterly anent the wonders of the deep that is both interesting and instructive.

The influence of the true Sunday-school teacher is only second to that of the parent; corresponding to it must be the responsibility. We warmly commend to all teachers who wish to be well equipped for their work an invaluable paper on "The teacher's responsibility in creating and sustaining a high moral standard in the class" (1d., Dyer Bros.), which is published as one of The Sentinel series.

THE IRISH WORKMAN (1d. Partridge & Co.) has, this month, a story of exceptional interest, entitled "Bill Green's Chance," from the pen of Mrs. Garnett. This periodical, on the pattern of the British Workman, finds a ready acceptance amongst the peasantry of the Sister Isle, many of whom have strong prejudices against LIVING WATERS. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. A packet containing 64 leaflets, with plain and striking Scripture texts printed in red and black.

The Reporters' Magazine announces that the success of the engraved edition of the Shorthand New Testament has led the publishers—Messrs. Pitman & Sons—to decide upon issuing the Book of Common Prayer in a similar style. It is possible that this may be followed by the Bible complete in shorthand characters.

GOLD AND THE GOSPEL. 1d. Mr. Erwin, 22, Church-street, Ballymena. In this little book the author sets forth the intimate connection there is throughout the Bible between the Gospel and giving, showing that giving for Christ's sake is at once an act of worship and loyalty, a means of consecration, of grace, and of communion.

CIVILISATION in some of its Bearings on Christian Missionary Work (3d. Bemrose & Sons) presents some important points for consideration in relation to the conduct of missions, insisting strongly that wherever European civilisation has thrust itself, though in its most unhappy forms, there the warriors in a holy warfare must press eagerly on with the message of the Gospel.

THE TEACHER'S CROWN. 2d. Elliot Stock. In this address to Sunday-school teachers, the author, adopting as mottoes the words, "Watch, work, wait!" insists on the importance of a teacher cultivating his own intellect and heart, and, having studied the character of his class, applying himself with earnestness, and in patient faith, to the work of their soul conversion and growth in grace.

THOMAS A KEMPIS AND THE "DE IMITATIONE CHRISTI." 3d. Macniven & Wallace, Edinburgh. In this delightful address to the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser gives us not only a sketch of this often-quoted monk of the thirteenth century, but shows that the "Imitation of Christ" is "in every generation the supreme rule and secret of a pure and high-principled life."

THESE SEVEN YEARS. 2s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. The story of the "Friendly Letter Mission," and of the grateful reception which Miss Skinner's twenty-nine letters have received from all classes, as shown by a vast number of extracts from letters and papers, is given in this interesting and tastefully got-up volume. It will encourage all who from faith and love seek to do something for God, however insignificant or unlikely to produce much result that something may appear to some.

OTHER CITIES ALSO. By Miss Davies. Hamilton, Adams & Co. This story of mission work in Dublin can hardly fail to achieve the purpose of its author, that such work should be carried on "in other cities also." It is a beautiful story of how, from the very smallest beginnings, from the prayerful and at first unaided efforts of one lady, this mission work amongst Roman Catholics grew and extended, till now it embraces seven large ragged schools, boys' homes and girls' homes in connection with the Society for Irish Church Missions.

THE MARTYR OF BRENTWOOD. 1d. Partridge & Co. The story of this well-known hero of Reformation times, who, though but a youth, had grace and Divine strength sufficient to witness a bold confession of Christ in the teeth of the Romish priests, and to go to the stake rather than deny the truth, is another contribution to the mass of good, healthful literature which is ever issuing from the Press in cheap form. William Hunter's example and thrilling history should do something, placed thus within the reach of all, to inculcate a noble spirit in our youth.

THE PARIS CITY MISSION has published a complete list of all the places of worship, Gospel-halls, &c., in Paris and the environs. This list will be distributed by thousands, by seven missionaries, at the homes of the people visited.

FIGHTING THE VICES.—It is a rough, hard, perilous, and unwelcome business; and yet there is no work to which city officials are called that is more essential and useful—none on which the city's safety, health, property, morals, and reputation, more immediately depend. In this regard Boston is favoured. Her Police Commissioners, in their annual report, claim more work done in 1886, by fifty per cent. in breaking up and closing gambling-hells, houses of ill-repute, and unlicensed liquor-shops, than in any previous year. The Society for the Suppression of Vice has co-operated with the police, and, together, they have made the spirit of reform more a terror to evil-doers than was ever before known in that city. —New York Evangelist.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following missions:—Mr. Opie Rodway at Baptist Chapel, Cinderford, Forest of Dean, commencing on Feb. 26, for six days; Rev. W. Hallam at Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent, on March 5.——For blessing on a series of meetings at Mearns, N.B., commencing on Feb. 27. ——For blessing on Gospel meetings, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, at Liverpool, Feb. 27 and 28, and at Malvern, March 5 to 14.——For blessing on meetings at Maryport, Cumberland, Feb. 27 to March 13, by Mr. F. E. Marsh.——That the efforts being made by the Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on the Lord's Day may be successfully carried through this Session. CONTEMPORARY OPINION.

Is nothing to be done about the translated French novels which are coming out in floods? Some publisher will arise with even less scruple than those who exist, and will circulate translations of books that surpass "Zola" in filth. How is he to be hindered?—British Weekly.

The suspension and degradation of such a priest as Father McGlynn, of New York, for refusing to establish parochial schools, and for his efforts to make the Irish Catholics good American citizens, and the undisguised interference of the Pope of Rome in American politics, mark a crisis which has no parallel in the history of the Roman Church in this country.—The Converted Catholic (New York).

Mr. Wallace J. Gladwin, of Bombay, informs us, says The Sentinel, that petitions to the British Parliament, praying for the abolition of the C.D. Acts in India, are being prepared in the various languages of that great section of the British Empire. He sends a strong appeal to the Abolitionists of Great Britain to interpret the word "National" in its widest sense, so as to include all portions of the Empire, and not to consider that their work has been finished by the repeal of the system of regulated vice in the British Isles merely. That appeal will not be disregarded. Our Indian fellow-citizens will see that we really consider them to be such. We shall not cease our efforts until we have achieved for every native woman the same protection from the brutal tyranny and degradation of State-regulated vice that is now the regained possession of every Englishwoman in the United Kingdom.

Referring to a case recently before the local magistrates, The Christian Commonwealth says:—The depravity which prevails in Nottingham is an awful illustration of the moral evils of the factory system. Even among parents and employers a startling laxity exists. But the most inexplicable fact in connection with this horrible case is the conduct of the inhabitants of Woodborough. Howett is said to have ruined no less than twenty girls in this village. Where were the fathers of those girls—and the mothers—and the brothers? Have they winked at all this? Have they been quieted by the filthy lucre of this son of Belial? Why have they tamely submitted to this infamy? Had they possessed the spirit of a midge they would have made the village of Woodborough too hot for Mr. Robert Howett. We hope to see the day when such a monster as this will find it impossible to show his face in any decent English community. Such a leper ought to be branded with the mark of Cain, and proclaimed an outlaw from all clean society.

BOOKS AS COMPANIONS.—A few weeks ago an auctioneer's catalogue of books was put in my hand. As I read I came to a list of books belonging to a gentleman, deceased, whom the heirs did not name, and for a good reason. I blushed scarlet in my study to read the titles of these books, and wondered that he could die and leave such coals of hell to be scattered abroad. From all languages and at great cost he had gathered together a library that Belial would have gloated over. It is said a man is known by his companions; but he is better known by his books. Men may sometimes be forced to consort with people whom they would shake off if they could. You cannot always choose your companions; but you can choose your books. Many a time I flee from my companions to escape,

SUNDAY, FEB. 27.—PSALM XXII.

THIS Psalm has well been entitled "Christ on the Cross." Its opening words were then uttered by Him (Matt. xxvii. 46), and its closing words "He hath done it" form the substance of "it is finished" (John xix. 30), which "He cried with a loud voice" (Luke xxiii. 46) before He "gave up the ghost."

Upon Aijeleth Shahar (the hind of the morning).—"The hind is the emblem of one persecuted to the death (Isa. xiii. 14);—the morning dawn, of light breaking in suddenly on darkness (Isa. lviii. 8). The combination gives an exact representation of the contents of the Psalm."—Kay.

1.—My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?—"The Crucified One is to his latest breath the Holy One of God; and the reconciliation for which He now offers Himself is God's own eternal purpose of mercy. But, inasmuch as He places Himself under the judgment of God as the sin-bearer, He cannot be spared from experiencing God's wrath against sinful humanity, as though He were Himself guilty. And out of the infinite depth of this experience of wrath, which in his case rests upon no appearance, but the sternest reality, comes the cry of his complaint, which penetrates the wrath and reaches to God's love."—Delitzsch.

2.—O my God, I cry in the daytime, but Thou hearest not.—This can only be reconciled with John xi. 42, "I know that Thou hearest Me always," by connecting it with that special cry for deliverance alluded to in Gethsemane (Matt. xxvi. 39) which it was not possible for the Father to grant, though able to save Him (personally) from death (Heb. v. 7).

21.—Thou hast heard Me from the horns of the unicorns.—The order of the Hebrew is, "from the horns of the unicorns—thou hearest me." "We may consider the words as separated by a small pause. The sufferer had 'O do Thou save Me' upon his tongue; but immediately He becomes able to entertain the confident expectation of being heard, and thus passes suddenly from the prayer to the expression of assured confidence."—Hengstenberg.

22.—I will declare thy name unto my brethren.—From this to the end of the Psalm, Christ joyfully anticipates the result of his sufferings.

31.—That He hath done it.—"The last words of our Saviour on the cross evidently refer to this, as his first exclamation is taken from the beginning of the Psalm."—Hengstenberg.

MONDAY, FEB. 28.—PSALM XXIII.

"He who had travelled through the dark valley and come forth conqueror (xxii.) will guide his flock safely through it."—Kay. The connection between Christ's death and his office of Shepherd is seen in Zech. xiii. 7; John x. 15, 16; Heb. xiii. 20, and 1 Pet. ii. 24, 25. In Zech. xiii. 7, on the words "I will turn my hand upon the little ones," Keil remarks that this means "I will make them the objects of active care." This Psalm may be considered as the expression of the little ones' faith.

4.—Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.—The rod is that with which the shepherd guides the sheep (see Micah vii. 14). The staff is that whereon he himself leans for support, and, it may be, defends the flock. "The one rod which the shepherd holds up to guide the flock, and upon which he leans and anxiously watches over the flock, has assumed a double form in the conception of the idea."—Delitzsch.

5.—Thou preparest a table, &c.—"After the figure of the shepherd fades away, that of the host appears. His enemies must look quietly on without being able to do anything, and see how bountifully Jehovah provides for his guest."—Ibid.

6.—Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me.—"Surely" should be "only." These are the only ones who now pursue him; as the enemy has been brought to a stand, and can only look on as Jehovah feasts him.

TUESDAY, MARCH 1.—PSALM XXIV.

The connection with Psalm xxiii. is thus pointed out by Hengstenberg :"Psalm. xxiii. concludes with the hope of dwelling for ever in the house of the Lord, and this Psalm, after some clauses of an introductory nature, asks the question, Who is qualified to "ascend into the hill of the Lord, or to stand in his holy place." The answer reveals one, and one only, as thus qualified, and his challenge to the gates of heaven to open and admit him form the conclusion of the Psalm. His admission constitutes his people's title. "When Thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, Thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers."

4.—He that hath clean hands.—Perfect purity of action; and a clean heart, perfect purity of motive; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, total absence of inconsistency; nor sworn deceitfully, total absence of what is false or deceitful. A perfect character, but where is such to be found?

6.—This is the generation...Jacob.—There is no authority for "O" before "Jacob," or for the insertion of "O God of." "Jacob" stands in apposition to "who seek thy face." And this is best expressed by "even Jacob," representing "the true Church of Jehovah, the Israel of God."—Delitzsch.

8.—The Lord mighty in battle.—Such was the Lord Jesus after his defeat of Satan and his "principalities and powers." Delitzsch says that the patristic interpretation of this part of the Psalm makes it refer to the Ascension of the Lord into heaven.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2.—PSALM XXV.

An alphabetical Psalm. "It contains nothing but what is common to the believing consciousness of the Church in every age, nothing specifically belonging to the Old Testament and Israelitish."—Delitzsch.

1.—Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul.—The expression "lift up the soul unto" occurs Deut. xxiv. 15, of the longing expectation of the hired servant for his wages. "The longing after God here spoken of is the longing after Him as the Saviour, as the next verse shows."—Hengstenberg.

8.—Good and upright is the Lord.—In Rom. v. 7, the good man is represented as going beyond the righteous man in kindnesses which call forth love. So the goodness of the Lord leads Him to be kind even to sinners in guiding them into the right way.

11.—For thy name's sake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity.—An allusion to the name of the Lord as proclaimed (Ex. xxxiv. 7) at Sinai, in which occur the words "forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin."

14.—The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him.—The word "secret" means "a being closely pressed together for the purpose of secret communication and converse—confidential communion; then the confidential communication itself, a secret."—Delitzsch.

21.—Let integrity and uprightness preserve me.—Surely not his own integrity and uprightness, but those of the Lord, for he adds: "for I wait on Thee." Compare "good and upright is the Lord" (ver. 8) and the next verse, "Redeem Israel, O God," &c. See also 1 John i. 9, "He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins."

THURSDAY, MARCH 3.—PSALM XXVI.

Delitzsch, after pointing out some points of contact between this Psalm and the last, adds:—"But in Ps. xxvi. there is wanting the self-accusation that goes hand in hand with the self-attestation of piety, that confession of sin which is thrice repeated in Ps. xxv." This would rather point to this Psalm being one in which David "in spirit speaks concerning Christ," and the language of the Psalm confirms this, for who but Christ could challenge God to judge him as having walked in his integrity?

6.—I will wash my hands in innocency.—"That which is elsewhere a symbolic act (Deut. xxi. 6; Matt. xxvii. 24), is in this instance only a rhetorical figure made use of to confess his consciousness of innocence."—Delitzsch. This is better than to suppose an allusion to the laver in which the priests washed when they approached the service of the tabernacle, for that washing was typical of the removal of defilement, not of innocency.

8.—The place where thy honour dwelleth.—"Honour" should be "glory," as it is in R.V. The reference is to the Shekinah, or glory of God, which dwelt between the Cherubim over the mercy seat. David had, in the tent on Mount Zion, immediate access to God's presence (2 Sam. vii. 18), a privilege which only the high priest had, and that once a year, when the ark was in the Tabernacle. He thus typified Christ as the Priest in the Heavenly Sanctuary of which the earthly Zion was a type; see Heb. xii. 22.

11.—Redeem me.—If this expression is regarded as a hindrance to the application of this Psalm to Christ, it may be remarked that it is used generally of forcible deliverance such as that of Israel from Egypt, and is expressly applied to resurrection deliverance in Hosea xiii. 14.

FRIDAY, MARCH 4.—PSALM XXVII.

David was both a type of Christ and a servant of Christ (Ps. cx. 1). His Psalms, therefore, partake of a twofold character. In some the Spirit of Christ speaks through David, and "David speaketh concerning Him" (Acts ii. 25). In others the Spirit of Christ, the Spirit of the members as well as of the Head, speaks through David concerning himself, and thus we get David's personal experience, which in all ages of the Church has made the Psalms a treasury of experimental devotion. This Psalm seems to belong rather to David's personal experience, though the second verse was literally fulfilled on a memorable occasion in Christ's life on earth. See John xviii. 6.

1.—The Lord is my light and my salvation... the strength of my life.—These three titles which David gives to the Lord have an interesting connection with the threefold manifestation of the Godhead in the work of salvation, and that in the order in which their working is experimentally realised. The Spirit of God enlightens the soul as to its lost estate, and leads it to Christ. The Son of God, in virtue of his finished work, becomes its salvation and life; and the Father is by Him revealed as the strength of this life (John x. 29; Eph. i. 19; Col. i. 11).

4.—That I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life.—The literal meaning must here give way to the figurative or spiritual. An actual dwelling within the Tabernacle or Temple cannot be thought of as the object of David's earnest desire. "The cause of this figurative language is that the Tabernacle, and afterwards the Temple, bore a symbolical character, representing the connection between God and his people, who dwelt with Him spiritually there."—Hengstenberg. The true key to such language is found in Eph. ii. 21; 2 Cor. vi. 16.

10.—When my father and mother forsake me.—See Matt. x. 37. Missionaries, whether to Jews or heathen, find generally that if a convert confesses Christ, father and mother forsake him.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5.—PSALM XXVIII.

2.—I lift up my hands towards thy holy oracle.—The word "oracle" is used only in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, and in this passage to denote the "Holy of Holies." It comes from the verb to speak, and denotes the place where God speaks to his people. "The appellation given to this part—the place where God speaks to his people—stands in beautiful connection with the appellation given to the whole, 'the tabernacle of meeting' (R.V.) where God meets with his people. The most holy place is, as it were, the audience chamber."—Hengstenberg. See Numb. vii. 89. It is interesting to note that the word "oracles" four times used in the New Testament for the "Holy Scriptures" comes from the Greek verb to speak and means "things spoken." They constitute for us the place where God's voice is to be heard.

4.—Give them according to their deeds.—"The objection to such language as this proceeds from a too exclusively humanitarian point of view which leaves God and his claims out of sight. It shows little sympathy with the mind of God, if his solemn denunciations of judgment against sinners (remaining such) do not evoke at least, "Even so, Lord, true and righteous are thy

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeacon Richardson, of Southwark, has gone to conduct a thirteen days' mission at Gibraltar.

The American Episcopal Church sustains fifteen missionary bishops in Africa, Japan, China, and Hayti.

The Socialists have announced their intention to hold a church parade next Sunday at St. Paul s Cathedral.

There is a probability of Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, of Holloway, accepting the living of St. James', Clapham Park.

A pronounced High Churchman, Rev. R. Wynter, has been appointed Rector of Wimborne, the country seat of the late Earl of Shaftesbury.

It is said that the foolish "Church House" scheme is well nigh dead, and that the £20,000 subscribed will be required to pay present expenses!

The Dean of Westminster, will publish presently his "Lectures on Job," a companion volume to the "Lectures on Ecclesiastes" issued two years ago.

The Bishop of Liverpool, in a pastoral letter, urges the clergy during the Lent of this Jubilee year to raise the standard of religion on five points—temperance, purity, unity, liberality in giving money, practical charity and brotherly love.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Since Rev. C. Wilson's settlement at Blackheath, the East Greenwich Mission has developed greatly.

Rev. John Hunter is giving a series of discourses in Trinity Church, Glasgow, on "Christianity as Christ Taught It."

Latimer Church, East London (Rev. J. Atkinson), has during the winter months assisted nearly 400 destitute families weekly.

Masbro' Chapel, Rotherham, under the pastorate of Rev. J. Nicholson, has admitted sixty-three members during the year.

The church at Stowmarket, under the pastorate of Rev. Luther Caws, has admitted 120 to membership during the past two years.

Last year forty members were added to the church at Luton. The young men's and young women's societies and the mission band are in a flourishing condition, and the monthly services for the people are attracting large congregations.

The friends at Kingston Sunday-school were much encouraged by a series of meetings for children held by Mr. T. Sayer, from January 24 to 28. The attendance increased each night, and there was deep interest manifested throughout.

The Congregational Church Aid Society is taking up in earnest the subject of unnecessary chapels in rural parishes, and, beginning with Dorset, is presenting a tabulated view of the number of places of worship in agricultural districts.

The Young Men's Bible-class in connection with Markham-square Church held their annual re-union on February 14. The pastor, Rev. J. Lawson Forster, urged upon the young men the importance of systematic Bible study. The class meets on Sundays at 3 o'clock.

During last week special services were conducted in the chapel at Stony Stratford by Mr. George King, evangelist. On one occasion over two hundred of the L. & N. W. carriage men listened during their dinner hour to his clear and earnest statement of the Gospel.

Mr. Hy. Lakin and Mrs. Cole have conducted a very successful mission in connection with the Oldham-road Chapel, Manchester. There have been nearly 250 professed converts. The pastor (Rev. W. H. Towers) conducts a catechumen class weekly, which is satisfactorily attended.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A mission meeting has been established at Stockton-on-Tees, as the result of an eight days' mission by Henry S. Newman, of Leominster.

At York, over 700 sat down to tea at the adult school annual meeting. It has been decided to open a mission meeting in place of one of the meetings for worship on Sunday evenings.

Isabella Young, of York, has conducted a successful fortnight's mission in the West Hartlepool meeting-house, which has been long unused. At the close the Friends and Primitive Methodists held outdoor services together.

BAPTIST.

Twenty-four members were added to the church at Presteign, Radnorshire, during the past year.

The church at Finsbury-road, Wood Green, has admitted seventy new members during the year.

Special evangelistic services have been conducted in the Blackley Chapel by Revs. R. Briggs, J. Anderson, and G. Harvey.

Thirteen of the young people connected with Trinity-road Sunday-school, Halifax, have just collected over £22 for the Foreign Missionary Society.

There is an average attendance of forty three at the Saturday evening meetings of the Metropolitan County Mission and Evangelistic Training Class, held at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle.

In the lecture hall of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, three "at homes" were held the week before last by the pastor, Rev. E. G. Gange, members of the usual congregation being invited in alphabetical order.

A mission chapel is to be added to the two already occupied by the Baptists of St. Helens.

Rev. Evan Edwards' visit to the churches of Cornwall seems to have been productive of much good.

During Rev. J. S. Anderson's pastorate of Zion Chapel, New-cross-road, S.E., the membership has increased from seventy to 300.

Mr. A. G. Brown conducted the opening services of a twelve days' mission at the Victoria Hall, Victoria-park Congregational Chapel.

A ten days' mission has been held by Capt. Dennis, at the Arthur-street Church, Gray's-inn-road. Upwards of seventy have declared themselves on the Lord's side.

After Mr. Archibald Brown's twenty-first sermon to young men on Sunday week, hundreds adjourned into the school-room for an after-meeting, and there were many anxious inquirers.

Open-air baptisms in the winter are frequently held in Radnorshire. During the present winter, and in severe weather, there have been baptisms in the open air at Franksbridge, Howey, Dolan, Llanfihangel, and Bwlch-y-sarnau.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At the last quarterly communion of the White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow, fifty-five new members were received.

The membership at Grange-road, Birkenhead (Rev. William Hutton, pastor) is now 511 as compared with 462 last year.

The membership of Elgin-street Church, Glasgow, has risen from 227 to 600 during the three years' pastorate of Rev. John Goold.

On March 1, Mr. Wood, of the Evangelisation Society, will commence a week of Gospel meetings at the new church in Ealing.

The Mission in Kilburn, in connection with Dr. Monro Gibson's Church in St. John's Wood, continues to be a centre of great usefulness.

During the last two years and a half, 147 have been added to the membership of Busby Church. The Bible-class has now ninety members.

The monthly prayer-meeting on behalf of the Foreign Missions of the English Presbyterian Church was held in the College Hall, Queen-square, last Tuesday.

There has been an increase during the year of fifty-five in the membership of Prospect-street Church, Hull. There has also been an increase of 190 scholars in the four Sunday-schools.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is to give four lectures on the deepening of the spiritual life in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh (Dr. Whyte's), next month, under the auspices of the Scottish Evangelistic Association.

The evangelistic services at Norwich, conducted by Mr. Davey, of the London Presbytery, have been a great success. Multitudes of the careless have been gathered in, and the members of the church have been strengthened and cheered.

At Queen's-road, Brighton, a large number of useful agencies are kept at work under the pastorship of Rev. William Fraser, who has now offered a prize to the Sunday scholars for the best paper on the life of the late Bishop Hannington.

Professor Leone Levi, who stands second to none among the political economists of the day, has been for thirty-five years a Sabbath-school teacher. He is an office-bearer in Dr. Oswald Dykes's (Regent-square) Church.

Professor Lindsay, presiding at a large missionary meeting in Glasgow, said that Scotland, though sending out a number of men to teach the Gospel in heathen lands, was still very slack about her responsibilities regarding foreign missionaries. Rev. H. S. Mackenzie, from China, mentioned that eleven of the missionaries there came from Glasgow, and they would be delighted to have as many more men of the same kind.

SALVATION ARMY.

From "The War Cry."

During the past six months 256 souls are said to have sought pardon at Newcastle-under-Lyme.

At Burslem some 130 of the most notorious characters of the town are said to have been converted.

Mrs. Tucker, of India, who has been dangerously ill, is now much better and on a fair way to recovery.

At Silverdale, where many have been saved lately, a publican provided seats to accommodate the congregation.

The testimony of the police at Chapel-en-le-Frith is that the Salvation Army has almost cleared the public-houses.

A travelling caravan, to be worked by a dozen officers, is proposed for work in the villages of Devon and West Somerset.

There has been a wonderful work of the Holy Ghost in Festiniog. Many souls have come to the penitent form, and have testified to being saved.

A glorious work is going on in South Africa, where hundreds are being saved, and corps are rapidly increasing. Four of the officers are now able to speak the Zulu language.

At Peoria, U.S., where are some of the greatest distilleries and breweries, a hundred dollars has been offered if the Army can get one notorious drunkard to give up drinking.

In Lafayatte, Ind., "a beautiful young lady whose cheque for 50,000 dollars would be honoured any day." may be seen in the Salvation Army procession with a tambourine in her hand, and joining in the Hallelujahs.

A man in Newcastle-on-Tyne, given to drink, was one night going to a music-hall, when he heard the Salvation Army band; he changed his course, and followed the musicians to the barracks, where he found salvation.

From East Hartlepool the report states: "We have a large theatre, and fill the pit every night, and have a splendid congregation every Sunday." From Easton, however, in the same division, the report comes: "Plenty of spiritual darkness. Souls are scarce indeed."

From Clench Warton and Terrington Camp Captain Bristow writes that some of the worst characters have been brought to the Saviour. One, a soldier for twelve years, said that when his regiment came home from Egypt, out of 700 men there were about twelve Salvationists on board.

A sentence in a recent Holiness article having been "taken to imply a belief that it is possible to escape death," this is altogether repudiated in last week's War Cry. "Neither," continues the paragraph, "have we the least degree of leaning towards the theory of the Agapemone, which has begun of late to be propagated again."

In a Vaudois village, it was proposed to get up some theatrical entertainment, the proceeds of which should be given for a harmonium for the village church. Nothing it was thought would be more diverting than a representation of the Salvation Army; accordingly the leader went several times to their meetings, but there the Lord met him, and his purpose was, of course, changed.

METHODIST.

At Ticehurst, a successful twelve days' mission has been conducted by Rev. A. G. Wilkinson.

Last year 1942 children were received into the Home carried on by Dr. Bowman Stephenson at Victoria Park.

An eight days' special mission was opened last Sunday at the Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, by the pastor, Rev. B. Senior.

On the first Sunday in February, within nine miles of Brecon, there were three women conducting religious services in various chapels.

A "Week of Prayer and Self-denial" was commenced on Sunday last by the New Connexion body with a view to extinguish the mission debt.

During a fortnight's mission at Cudsworth (Wardsley Circuit), great interest was aroused in the village, and about twenty decided for Christ.

Rev. J. T. Oliver has just closed a very successful mission at Kingswood, where a number of very notoriously bad men came to Christ.

Jubilee services have been held in connection with Littleborough Church. Four times during the fifty years it has been necessary to enlarge the premises.

During a fortnight's mission at Addingham (Ilkley Circuit), conducted by Mr. C. K. Hodges, about fifty adults and twenty Sunday scholars were brought to Jesus.

During a mission at Wibsey, Bradford, conducted by Rev. John Gawthrop, numbers of the scholars have decided for Christ, and about sixty adults have professed to find peace.

The ten days' mission at Leek, conducted by Rev. Thomas Cook, has been the means of rich blessing. More than 450 have recorded their names as determined to be on the Lord's side.

At the anniversary meeting of the Matthias-road Church, a good account of work was given. A mission band, including about fifty workers, goes out in detachments on Sunday evenings.

A fortnight's mission at Sandbach, conducted by Mr. P. Daniels, has been successful in arousing the attention of the people. About forty have given in their names as candidates for membership.

During the fortnight's mission at Nottingham, conducted by Rev. Thomas Waugh, over 340 adults sought the Lord, and at the conclusion many new converts gathered round the Lord's table.

Rev. J. S. Cooke, of Scarborough, has been conducting a special mission at the Centenary Chapel, York. Early morning prayer-meetings were well attended, and night after night the communion-rail was crowded with inquirers.

A remarkable revival has been going on for the past three months in Redruth Union. Prayer-meetings are held by the inmates amongst themselves, and the place rings with the hymns sung at the wash-tub, mangle, &c., by those who a short time since were swearing and fighting together.

Cockshutt, in Hadnall (Primitive Methodist) Circuit, has been visited with a great revival. Five young persons in one family have found Christ; a publican's wife and two daughters are amongst those brought to repentance, and are now seeking a better vocation. A number of the new converts signed the temperance pledge.

The mission band at Herne Bay is doing blessed work. During a mission at the adjacent village of Marshside the chapel was full every night, and on one occasion nearly twenty men and women testified of God's converting grace received during the week. Amongst these, four husbands and wives stood side by side in their new-found joy.

As the result of Rev. Thomas Cook's mission at Bradford, a house of ill-fame has been closed; a woman much addicted to drink, after going into the inquiry-room, went the next morning into the beershop she used to frequent, and said, "I got converted last night, and am coming here no more." A class for boys has been commenced in a shed.

Homeless Infants.—The Committee of the Nursery for Homeless Infants will be compelled to give a quarter's notice on March 25, to give up the Manor House and close the Nursery, unless a sufficient response is made to the appeal which they are now making to clear the debt of £214, and guarantee an adequate income to sustain the work.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BERLIN.—The St. Michael Society at the head of which are Counts Bernstorff and Pückler, has entertained 350 of the 634 Berlin scavengers.

IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY women serve on juries. The Women's Journal says in the city of Seattle the lady jurors have brought about "a general purification of the moral atmosphere."

ALGIERS.—On Christmas-day the pastor here had the joy of admitting to the Lord's Supper a lady honourably known in Algerian society, who has spontaneously renounced Romanism.

LYONS.—The Evangelical Alliance meetings held here were followed and surrounded with peculiar blessing; from sixty to eighty new converts of the McAll popular meetings were present.

RUSSIA.—Pastor Brandt, who was banished to Smolensk, has been pardoned so far that he may resume his ministry, though no longer in the Baltic provinces, but at the other end of Russia on the shores of the Volga.

GERMANY.—The movement for the greater independence of the Protestant Church increases. A great Conference on the subject will be postponed to the end of this month on account of the general elections. The invitation has been signed by a number of Christian men.

THE TEXAS DROUGHT.—A Committee appointed to investigate as to the suffering from the drought prevalent over a large section of the State of Texas, submitted its report to the Legislature on January 19. The report states that in this region there are at least 30,000 persons who are, or soon will be, absolutely destitute.

CARRIAGE CHURCHES.—The administration of the South-West Railway in Russia has just decided to construct some carriages to be used as churches, and which are to be attached to the train on Sundays and festival days. This is done at the request of the conductors, who complained that they were unable to fulfil their religious duties.—Christianisme.

THE PLAIN OF JEZREEL has been completely transformed within the last few years by a colony of Würtemberger emigrants. They have made roads, multiplied plantations, cleared and cultivated the land. The Latin monks of Mount Carmel have done all they could to hinder the works, but the energy and patience of the Würtembergers have succeeded in making the colony prosperous.

PUBLIC MORALITY IN FRANCE.—An important meeting has been held in Paris, of the French League for the raising of public morality. About sixty persons were present, almost without exception Protestants. Progress was reported from Lyons, Marseilles, Saint Etienne, Annonay, and the Cevennes and elsewhere. A law is proposed for the better protection of home life, wives and children.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.—In the Paris Chamber of Deputies on January 13, a proposition was made inviting the Government to take the initiative in an International Conference, in which delegates should seek to arrive at some understanding as a basis for the general and simultaneous disarmament of the nations, and for the establishment of an International Arbitration Tribunal.—Témoin de la Vérité.

CANNIBALISM IN THE SOUTH SEAS.—A letter dated Apia (Navigator's Islands), December 13, states:—Terrible news reached this place a few days ago. A number of Melanesian labourers belonging to the Island of Malaita, in the Solomon group, who, their contracts having expired, were on their way home, have eaten up the entire crew of the vessel which was conveying them, and then plundered the vessel. All Apia is in the greatest excitement, as we thought such an occurrence no longer possible.

SWITZERLAND.—Mr. J. Cadène, who lately died at St. Antonin, at the age of seventy-four, was an "out and out" Christian. Soon after his conversion, he refused an estate left to him by a distant relative, that the direct heirs might not be deprived of it. He habitually gave the first-fruits of his produce to the poor. His visits to the sick and sorrowful were full of sympathy and helpful witnessing to the power of faith in the Lord. His son is the faithful and distinguished pastor at Bordeaux.—Evangéliste.

THE BIBLE IN PERSIA.—A correspondent of The New York Evangelist, writing of a tour in Persia, says:—"I learn incidentally that Bibles left by our party three years ago, are still read with pleasure in the village, especially during the long winter evenings. As I stop for the night, I find that my host has a Testament in Persian, which he is reading. Thus the light is spreading unnoticed in most cases, and many other Mohammedans are coming in contact with Christian teachings. One of our Church members told me the other day of a young man who had become enlightened by reading from some leaves which had been torn out of a Bible, and pasted on the window to keep out the cold."

CONSTANTINOPLE.—With the view of elevating the standard of Christianity in the benighted East, by pure teaching and the diffusion of the Word of God, it has been decided to build an Evangelical Hall in the capital of the Ottoman Empire. Such a project must strongly appeal to the sympathies of all true Christians in every part of the world. The seat of government, and a city of vast dimensions, Constantinople is the heart of the Moslem faith, whose pulsations beat in distant continents, reaching the distant Soudan on the one hand, and our dominions in India on the other. Opportunities for evangelistic work are more than ever favourable, and the races once enlightened by Chrysostom, Gregory, and Athanasius again require the living word. The rallying point of evangelistic work, the hall, is to be in the most central part of Pera. Evangelical Christendom.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—Eight Missionaries now carry the knowledge of the Gospel to the poor of Paris. They pass from room to room in the lowest parts of the city, reading from and supplying copies of the Word of God. One of them devotes his efforts entirely to the neglected English poor. The marked blessing of Almighty God is resting upon this endeavour to enlighten the most ignorant and depraved—leading them to the Saviour. The Committee ask for the prayerful sympathy of English Christians. A French gentleman has just given 500 francs, but £30 more is required to pay the men to the end of the financial year. They implore your help.—J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 101 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

GEE-STREET MISSION, Goswell-road. Voluntary workers earnestly solicit funds to carry on the work of doing good to the poor. Subscriptions thankfully received by the Treasurer, ROBERT BAXTER, Esq., 6, Victoria-street, Westminster; the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, 54, Lombard-street; A. J. VIEWEG, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION, Vinegar Ground, City-road.—Funds urgently wanted to carry on the increasing work here. Also for Free Dinners for children of Board school opposite. WALTER PENROSE, Superintendent.

MORLEY HOME for Worn-out Governesses, Needlewomen, and Servants, 25, Chatham-place, Hackney, E.—This Home has been planned to meet the need of aged Governesses, Needlewomen, and Servants of small means (assisted by friends), or for others without means, for whom families would pay in recognition of valued services in the past. The terms are 8s. 6d. per week, including laundress. But there are no intoxicants. —Applications for admission (in the first instance by letter) should be addressed to the Hon. Superintendent, Miss E. COALES, as above. Subscriptions and donations will be thankfully received, and, through the kindness of Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, may be sent to the office of THE CHRISTIAN. (Prov. iii. 6.)

THE UTMOST ANXIETY IS FELT for the welfare of one of the most time-honoured Children's Missions in London. For 85 years a glorious work for Christ has been carried on in Castle-yard, among the very poorest children in Southwark.

Sick Children have been visited, Gifts of Clothing and Money made to necessitous cases. Summer Excursions, and numerous other benefits conferred.

All these useful operations are now threatened with collapse, through want of means to restore the greatly dilapidated building. For nearly two years the Teachers have been fervently praying for help against such a calamity, but the much-needed aid has not yet come.

Will every reader who has a heart to sympathize, and a few shillings to spare, generously come to the rescue, for the poor children's sake?

An urgent appeal has appeared in these columns for two weeks, without adequate response. The reader is therefore implored to help this time-honoured work in its present hour of need.

Contributions most gratefully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN.

Treasurer, Rev. ROBERT TUCK, B.A.; Bankers, London & Westminster Bank, No. 1, St. James's-square, S.W., account "Castle Yard Mission."

THE "PRINCE" HERESY.
THE RISE AND PROGRESS of the HERESY of Rev. H. J. PRINCE.

By ARTHUR AUGUSTUS REES, Brother-in-law to Rev. H. J. PRINCE, and late Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland. Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

"As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the Blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

"Thus fell that dear child of God, HENRY JAMES PRINCE; and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him."—Extract.

WORDS OF WARNING in reference to the TEACHING OF THE "AGAPEMONE."

By Rev. D. B. HANKIN, Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. Price 1s. per 100; 7s. 6d. per 1000.

"I desire to lift up my voice against his [Mr. Prince's] teaching, and I declare that the 'Agapemone' heresy is one of the vilest that has ever been foisted upon the Church of Christ. Mr. Prince claims to be the Holy Ghost personified, the introducer of a new dispensation; and assures his followers that whosoever believeth in him shall not die, but henceforth be without sickness or pain."—Extract.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS
By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM,
AUTHOR OF
"Christ our Light," "The Highway of Holiness," etc., etc.

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural."
The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel, and will do anyone good who reads it."
Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny book."—Penuel.

A Deeply-Interesting Narrative.
BY S. J. HUMPHREY,
Author of "Blessings on the Bees."

"A year ago this winter our house took fire. It was in the middle of the night, and we were all asleep. The flames were first discovered by a poor neighbour, who at once gave the alarm, and then burst in the door. . . . It seems almost a miracle that we were got out alive. We were dazed and suffocated, and it was only the heroic courage and great strength of our neighbour that brought us down the blazing stairway into the open air; but it nearly cost him his life."—Extract.

COMPILED AND SUNG BY

IRA D. SANKEY.

156 SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS.

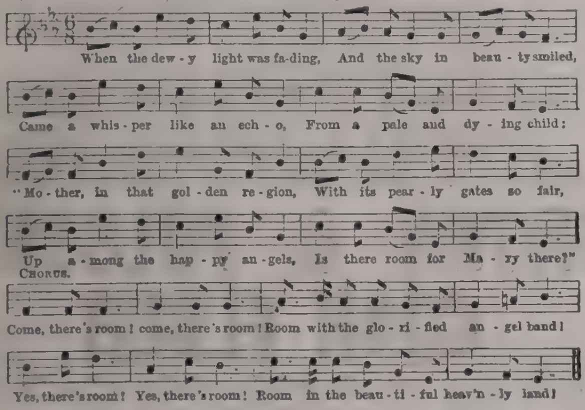
371. Little Mary.



When the dew-y light was fa-ding, And the sky in beau-ty smiled,
Came a whis-per like an ech-o, From a pale and dy-ing child:
"Mo-ther, in that gol-den re-gion, With its pear-ly gates so fair,
Up a-mong the hap-py an-gels, Is there room for Ma-ry there?"
CHORUS.
Come, there's room! come, there's room! Room with the glo-ri-fied an-gel band!
Yes, there's room! Yes, there's room! Room in the beau-ti-ful heav'n-ly land!

"Mother, raise me just a moment;
You'll forgive me when I say,
You were angry when you told me
I was always in your way.
You were sorry in a moment,
I could read it on your brow;
But you'll not recall it, mother,
You must never mind it now.

"When my baby sister calls me,
And you hear my voice no more,
When she plays among the roses
By our little cottage door,
Never chide her when you're angry,—
Do it kindly and in love,
That you both may dwell with Mary

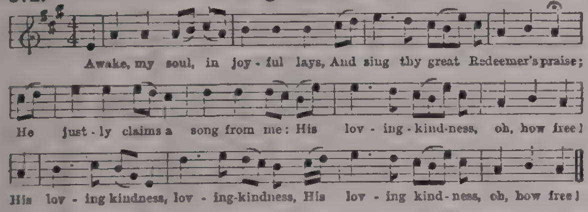
Then she plumed her snowy pinions,
Till she folded them to rest,
'Mid the welcome song of rapture,
On her loving Saviour's breast.
In the bright and golden region,
With its pearly gates so fair,
She is singing with the angels;
There is room for Mary there.

372. Loving-Kindness.



Awake, my soul, in joy-ful lays, And sing thy great Redeemer's praise;
He just-ly claims a song from me: His lov-ing-kind-ness, oh, how free!
His lov-ing kindness, lov-ing-kindness, His lov-ing kind-ness, oh, how free!

He saw me ruined by the Fall,
Yet loved me, notwithstanding all;
He saved me from my lost estate:
His loving-kindness, oh, how great!

Though numerous hosts of mighty foes,
Though earth and hell my way oppose,
He safely leads my soul along:
His loving-kindness, oh, how strong!

MR. JOSEPH RABINOWITZ.

THE subject of this sketch is the human leader of a remarkable modern movement amongst the Jewish people in South Russia. His name and work have been introduced to Christians in Germany by the distinguished friend of Israel, Professor Franz Delitzsch; and to English Christians chiefly through the "Mildmay Mission to the Jews." No society has the slightest ground for claiming him as their convert. His conversion was the work of the Holy Spirit alone.

He was born in the small town Rezina, near the River Nester, in Bessarabia, in September, 1837, so that he is now in his 50th year. His ancestors were old Bessarabian citizens. His grandfather and great-grandfather were Rabbis—hence the name Rabinowitz. His father, living in a small village, handed him over to the care of his grandfather, who was deeply pious as a Jew; he loved the Old Testament Hebrew Scriptures, and took great pains to make his young grandson acquainted with the Hebrew Bible. To the great joy of the old grandfather, the boy Joseph repeated Hebrew verses to visitors, and conversed in the sacred tongue, specially on Sabbath days. The grandfather belonged to the sect of the Chasidim, superstitious, pharisaical, and even fanatical; the leader of whom in that district was Rabbi Bal-Shem-Tov. On the occasion of the three annual festivals—Passover, Pentecost, Tabernacles, the grandson was taken to this Rabbi to show his progress in learning. When only eight years old he repeated at Passover the Song of Solomon, and at the feast of Tabernacles, he repeated one volume of the Mishnah of the Talmud—"Succah" (Tabernacle or Booth).

At ten years of age he removed to Orgieff, where he carried on his Talmudic studies under other teachers. He married when only eighteen, having then been engaged, or betrothed, four years. His father-in-law desired that he might become a Rabbi. The teachings of the reformers, Mendelsohn, and Levinsohn, reached Bessarabia, and so influenced him, as to lead him to abandon the Chasidim, and to turn his attention to the Talmud with a more critical eye. Two years after his marriage he had a business of his own, but, by a fire, he lost his all, though he, his wife, and only child providentially escaped. He now commenced the study of a profession. He studied the Russian language, and literature relating to the legal profession. His knowledge of law and of the Russian tongue gave him great influence amongst the Jews of Orgieff, and among others in the district. He tried to induce them to teach their children the Russian tongue, and other secular knowledge instead of the Talmud.

He founded a school which was well spoken of by the secular Press, which greatly increased his influence with the Jews, who sought his advice on all matters affecting the interests of the community. He prospered in his profession, and urged the Jews to live as peaceably as possible with their Christian neighbours. The persecution which broke out in 1871 at Odessa, together with the defeat of the French, convinced him that his schemes of education would not lead to the emancipation of his people, so he left for Kischeneff, where he remains to this day. Here he intended to live a quiet life, supporting his family by his profession as lawyer, but the editor of the Hebrew paper, Hamelitz, to which Rabinowitz contributed, gave him no rest till he devoted his life to his people's interests, little imagining the direction his efforts would take.

The desperate condition of his persecuted people led him to think of colonisation schemes in Russia, but this idea was not encouraged by his brethren. He resolved to go to Palestine. Arrived in Jerusalem in 1882, he gazed on the Holy City and Temple site, deeply moved by the desolation all around—even the devout Jew weeping and praying at the wailing place could be frightened away by an Arab woman. He reflected on 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14–16, and the words, "till there was no remedy," made a powerful impression on his mind. This passage he reflected was in the last chapter of the last book of the Hebrew Bible, and the words "NO REMEDY" came to his mind with overwhelming force. He then thought of the New Testament and its teachings, and received impressions, as by a light from heaven, that probably all the sufferings of the Jews and the desolation of the land of Palestine were to be traced to the people's continued rejection of Christ, and that all the hopes of the nation centred in Jesus, the crucified One. He returned home with his mind full of this new light. His wife at first opposed his views because she did not understand them; but his children soon accepted them.

He now began to regard the teachings of the New Testament as Divinely inspired as those of the Old, and the Lord Jesus Christ as the true Son of God, "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." To know the Son, he says, is to know and understand the Father, and for this reason he specially delights in the Gospel of John. He says, the Jews think they can understand the Son through the Father, but Jesus says, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me. He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." In answer to the question, "When did you definitely trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation?" he replied, "Three years ago last Rosh Hasshana, now about three years and a half ago."

On his return from Palestine he began to speak to the Jews about Mr. Oliphant's schemes of colonisation, but these he said would not lead the Jews back to Palestine; the Jews gathered round him to speak about the Holy Land, but, at first, he did not speak to them about Christ. Many of the people thought that Rabinowitz would form a colony, and himself lead the Jews back to Palestine. Soon after this Rabinowitz began to tell his brethren that he thought the only one who could lead them back to Jerusalem would be the Messiah, and to set them looking in the right direction for the Messiah he told them a little story by way of illustration. A number of Jews travelling by a four-wheeled conveyance in a little town in Poland, lost one wheel, and still pursued their journey; they overtook another carriage driving in front, and one ran and asked if this one had seen a lost wheel on the road? The driver replied, "You foolish man, you must go back and not forward to find your lost wheel." The four wheels were Abraham, Moses, David, and the Messiah. The fourth wheel, the Messiah, had been lost, the Jews must go back to find it. Finding this, Israel's four-wheeled chariot would run with safety.*

He may be said to be steeped in Talmudic lore, and is now well versed in both the letter and spirit of the Old and New Testament Scriptures. He delights to show that the promised Messiah of the Old Testament is the Jesus of the New, and this he does with great wealth of argument and illustration peculiarly Jewish. His manner of address is very animated, even enthusiastic, and rivets attention.

He is most affectionate in his spirit, and loves all who truly love the Lord, but does not wish to be allied to any Christian sect. He desires, as far as possible, to preach Apostolic Christianity to the Jews, leading them to accept Jesus as Messiah, Saviour, and Example; but allowing them, while trusting only in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation, to continue the practice of circumcision, the observance of the Jewish Sabbath, and the observance of Passover and Pentecost—indeed, preserving their nationality along with their faith in Christ.

Mr. Rabinowitz has recently visited London with the express desire of seeing Rev. Dr. Saphir and Rev. J. Wilkinson, and conferring with them respecting his work. He arrived on Dec. 26, and had Mr. Adler, of the Mildmay Mission, for his host and interpreter. We have already given some account of the large and influential meeting at Mildmay to greet our brother. It was thoroughly representative of societies and denominations. Another very interesting meeting was held at a hall in Bloomsbury, composed of Christian Jews alone, with one exception, over which Dr. Saphir presided. He was introduced by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, to the London Presbytery, and has been most warmly received in Edinburgh and Glasgow. A few friends gathered at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Wednesday evening, February 9, to bid our brother a loving farewell, as he was to leave our shores on the following day. He asks all Christians interested in Israel to pray constantly for him and for his work. A small representative council is about to be formed, the members of which will further the interests of his important work.

Those who have formed a close acquaintance with Mr. Rabinowitz during his six or seven weeks stay amongst us are amazed at the beautiful simplicity of character, the humble, loving spirit, the zeal, the faith, the catholicity of one whose surroundings have presented him with a type of Christianity such as that seen in the Greek Church. May the Lord call a host of Jews to Christ in these latter days, who shall respond to the command of their Messiah given to converted Jews eighteen and a half centuries ago: "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me...to the uttermost parts of the earth."

SAILORS' REST, MARSEILLES.

Many warm thanks to those readers of The Christian whose gifts for this Mission have just reached me. Everywhere sailors seem the object of interest, and I am thankful to say in Marseilles not less than in London, Bombay, and Yokohama.

Since the opening of the new Home in the excellent premises on the Quay we have had the joy of receiving a far larger number of sailors of many nations, and the still greater satisfaction of seeing that the Gospel is the same power it ever was. Miss Kean, from Glasgow, who joined the work in September, is much encouraged in her efforts, and has happily succeeded in gaining the confidence of these hardy sons of the deep. She mends their clothes, writes their home letters, and acts as cashier for their savings that otherwise would inevitably pass into worthless hands. Above all she seeks to point them to the heavenly Captain. One recently said, "I'll always remember that Sailors' Home for her sake. She used to wash and tie up a sore finger of mine when I came here first." How true it is that tender hearts lie concealed under rough exteriors.

REV. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES.

On Monday noon, Feb. 7, an audience, such as any man might well be proud of, greeted Joseph Cook as he stepped upon the platform of Tremont Temple, Boston. The distinguished lecturer was apparently in splendid health. Without announcing his prelude, he said:—Robert Browning, subtlest of ethical teachers which the poetry of our age has produced, affirms that human earthly choice decides destiny. This is the word not of a theologian but of a student, as Shakespeare, of nature's irreversible laws. His "grammar for babes in grace" is forgotten by certain pulpits, and a dwindling handful of theological professors, who tell us that all men are not to be judged by the deeds done in the body. Emerson says of Massachusetts, that "the whole population is out in search of a religion." Here we have an inquiry meeting of all nations. Is it safe to send this new gospel, which I think is another gospel, to foreign lands? Ex-President Porter, my instructor, whom I revere, affirms that a missionary might adopt these new views and be no less useful. I must combat this view. Let us suppose that a passage of the Gospel of Mark had lately been discovered on Mount Sinai, teaching that if one does not know Christ in this life he may in the life to come. "No one can be lost without having knowledge of Me." That, surely, would go far to make the Cross superfluous; it would eventually undermine the Bible and cut the nerve of missions.

What is essential in theology? (1) That which touches the question, "What must I do to be saved?" (2) and that which cannot be both affirmed and denied. Asia, as the revered Dr. Hamlin tells us, is full of future probation already. If it be taught in this whispering gallery of the world, our missions will be divided. Missions are not to be judged by the men who make them, but by the men whom they make in the third generation.

Mr. Cook then charged Universalism upon a Boston pastor who had said, "If I could, I'd be a dogmatic Universalist, for I would have more incentive to live for righteousness." He closed with further quotations from Browning. Rev. Sam Jones then led in prayer. To the question of pardoning the Chicago anarchists, Mr. Cook replied, "May God have mercy on their souls, but the courts none on their bodies."

Beginning the lecture, Mr. Cook said the population of the globe might be put in one field 15 by 15 miles. We have a rare geographical opportunity; there are now no foreign, or hermit, lands. Japan has reformed her politics, social life and religion, in twenty-five years. The globe is now a unit. Gladstone's speech is read in Chicago three hours before it is delivered. Our next morning's papers quote the London comments on our President's message, delivered at noon. We can bring the knowledge of the Gospel to every man before this century closes. Why may not this globe hereafter be our spiritual possession? The world is open to good thought, and bad, from both sides. Infidel literature goes everywhere. We go round the globe in ninety days. It took Cæsar 100 to cross the Roman Empire. There will soon be no barbarians; Cæsar, Charlemagne, the Teutonic knights and Russia have pushed back barbarism. They deserve our thanks. The Gospel is to be preached in every nation, for a witness to all peoples; then cometh the end. He who works with God to advance his kingdom will then be on his right hand. The first half is nearly fulfilled; I believe the last half will be fulfilled. Mr. Cook then closed with prayer.

RICH AND POOR.

A party of London clergy, says The Times, concerned at existing social conditions and conscious of their own faults, have, as the result of several conferences, sent a copy of the following appeal to every London incumbent:—

DEAR BROTHER,—The rich, as a class, offer an example of living which is contrary to the Christian profession, though the actions of some of their number are a striking protest against that example. They waste their lives and their wealth. They give nothing to the poor but alms; they neither deny themselves, nor follow Christ. They do not first seek the kingdom of heaven, but quote the laws of political economy, or the decisions of the doctor, or the demands of society, to show why they cannot obey God. Nevertheless, the rich, as a class, go to church, and are supposed to be typical Christians. As long as this is so how can we expect that the poor will be moved by their example to seek in Christianity help or solace?

The following are offenders against the law of Christ:—

(1) Possessors of knowledge, beautiful objects, or luxuries, who do not share them with the poor. Owners of houses and parks, givers of dinners, who invite to the enjoyment of their best those only who can ask again.

(2) Women who carelessly wear fine clothes, without having inquired into the possible cost in a sister's shame or death. Bargain-mongers who forget that some "cheap" things are too dear for "human" use.

(3) Employers who take their profit and do not concern themselves to know how the employed live. Men who think that five per cent. is a law of God, and that the body He created to be the temple of his Spirit can be fed, clothed, and recreated on a few shillings a week.

(4) All who, having earned or inherited a livelihood, plead that they have no time to make friends among the poor or to perform public duties.

The contrast between the condition of those who are equally God's offspring becomes unbearable in the light of modern publicity. Many are driven to think that only by the use of force will the poor obtain from the rich the means to develop their capacities for knowing, feeling, and doing.

We believe, on the contrary, that by the use of force the poor would grow in greed and selfishness; gaining with the wealth many of the vices which have gone with riches. And our hope is therefore that the rich, moved to follow Christ themselves, may offer such sacrifices and make such personal efforts for the sake of their brethren that rich and poor together may be able to live their life as God's children.

Dear Brother, the thought of these things weighs us down and stings our own consciences, and we feel forced to speak out. You and we are fellow-workers for the same end; we hold the same theory of life, and we are all labouring that Christ may be in man, and man in Christ. We ask you, with much humility, Will you bring this matter, in all its terrible reality, before those to whom you have to preach? Will you, for the sake of Christ and his poor, warn such as attend your church, and commit any of the offences which we have named, that they cannot call themselves in any full sense followers of the Master?

We do not sign our names lest they should suggest personal considerations, which should be far removed from such a subject; and take away from the force of the naked truth which we have ventured to set before you. X. Y. Z.

CHRISTIAN FRUITFULNESS.

WE are often, in the early years of our Christianity, liable to despair of being useful. We are disposed to rush about to get out of our own field, and into the field of another. Our field appears to be no field at all, and the little we do hardly worth living for.

Young Christians sometimes despair altogether; they deny their own gifts and callings; have feeble hands and feeble knees, and, in despair, do nothing but complain and repine. They have not even energy sufficient to resist the stream that slowly and steadily pushes them on with the worldly crowd. They have lost worldly zeal, but not gained Christian zeal. They lack faith of walk; they do not know God as the "God of Hope;" they do not cultivate courage as the first virtue after faith (2 Pet. i. 5).

Even this last class, however, sow a little seed in shady places; indirectly, although not directly, they work for Christ, and give a little money probably, towards his work. Entering a small township, one hot sultry day, I longed to rest in some quiet retreat and enjoy a cup of tea. Lifting up my heart to the Lord, I entered a small fruit-shop, the only modest-looking quiet shop near. A little fruit and soda-water cheered me, and some conversation with the Madame convinced me that she knew the Lord. She had been a servant for about a year before her marriage in the house of a Mrs. B——, and met the Lord there. The lady who helped her was only a seeker at the time, and one who laboured on hopelessly. She was very earnest, and really well taught in the Word, but with dark clouds over her faith. She knew not that this soul actually found peace through her instrumentality.

I give this case to illustrate the truth it is in my mind now to press. Christians know not what they are doing. Even those who are simply inquirers, have an insensible influence, and affect more or less those around them. Truth like error is infectious. A free-thought arrow shot forth in a small company often lodges in a poor young hard heart; and an inquirer's remark, or a sinner's frank confession often lodges in another poor wounded heart, and leads to confession and faith.

Christians, I believe, will find that they have won more souls than they anticipated. Facts, not speculation, have led me to this conclusion. I have for more than a quarter of a century mingled with Christians in various parts of the world, and Christians of various denominations, and it has been my habit to ask, where and when they were converted. One can generally in this way test the truth of a conversion, and as Paul records his own conversion three or four times, it is not unscriptural to ask where and when.

If Christians knew how fruitful they are, they would work far more. Some Christians, working much in public, do over-estimate their fruit, I am convinced; but quiet, humble, praying Christians greatly under-estimate their fruitfulness. I am persuaded that the little shoots planted and watered in shady places generally do well; but he who plants on a large scale, and in a rough, quick, general way, ought to reckon upon many failures. Every shoot may look well at first, but greater care is required than is generally given. The work of Wesley in 1740 and 1750 was a glorious work for England, but very large deductions were required when estimating converts. The Salvation Army work is a real and glorious work to hundreds, but very large deductions again are required when estimating converts.

On the other hand, it is necessary to increase your numbers when you estimate private work; it is small and weak apparently, but greater than men know. Bible-classes, Sunday-schools, tracts yield little apparent fruit, but much fruit eventually. Private conversations, casual remarks upon truth, good words in letters, are arrows shot at a venture, but evidently greatly blessed; and if we could only increase the faith of the workers the results would be amazing.

I have myself, I may say, traced hundreds of conversions to such sources as these, and oftentimes have I wished that it were in my power to tell far distant workers what they have done. It is sad to see the Sabbath-school teacher labouring with hopeless aspect, and unconscious that years afterwards some of the scholars are destined to be brave public witnesses.

God's Word is far more powerful than we imagine. The hand that wields it may be weak and ignorant, but the edge of the Word is not taken off by the weakness of the workman. "Ah!" said a godless, graceless, but talented mechanic to me, "I have been twenty years in sin and shame, but I have not forgotten my dear mother's prayers, not even the very words she used. I could tell you her very words, spoken more than twenty gears ago." That man came to Christ, and is a brave witness. Oh, that fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, Sabbath-school teachers, tract distributors, all praying and working ones knew their power, and had faith in the Word, the true promise, the solemn warning, the cheering word of faith and love! Oh, that they realised more God's name in Rom. xv.: "Now, the 'God of Hope' fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope." GORDON FORLONG.

WHITE CROSS MOVEMENT.

THE report of the National Temperance Union of America shows how easily the work of the White Cross Movement may be urged by means of existing institutions without any necessity for a fresh organisation. Early in the spring of last year a circular was issued to all the local Unions giving careful instructions as to the organisation of the White Cross. Literature has been freely distributed in Alabama, Indiana, Iowa, California, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

The work has been presented at two ministers' and three teachers' meetings in Colorado. The Secretary in Illinois reports that White Cross leaflets have become familiar objects all over the States, whilst four colleges in Michigan have shown a desire to forward the cause. The Summary of Statistics shows that from the Temperance headquarters alone 23,000 cards of membership have been issued, and 60,000 leaflets sold.

Mr. G. S. S. Vidal has lately addressed meetings in connection with the movement at Aylesford and Bethnal Green.

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

LECTURES BY MR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

III. PAUL'S FOREVIEW.

The third lecture by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, at Exeter Hall last week, though on different lines, and of a less thrilling character, was as remarkable for grasp of the subject as those which preceded it. "Paul's foreview of Romanism" he first sketched as described in the Epistles to Timothy. After giving an epitome of the "mystery of godliness," Paul goes on to say that "in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." The origin of this apostasy was to be Satanic, and its doctrines were to be doctrines of devils or demons. It was to be marked by a departure from primitive faith and pure religion, and the authoritative inculcation in their place of asceticism; by the substitution of an external religiousness for true holiness of heart. In this strain also Paul writes to the Thessalonians. The coming of Christ, he tells them, would not take place before the occurrence of an "apostasy," or falling away from the faith. This apostasy was to result from the working of what he calls "the mystery of iniquity"—a remarkable expression, in direct contrast with the "mystery of godliness," from which the apostasy is a departure.

From this iniquity was to spring in due time the "Man of Sin," whose coming was to be "after the working of Satan." The Satanic origin of this "Man of Sin" was thus twice foretold by Paul, and the outcome was to be marked by "all deceivableness of unrighteousness," and even by "lying wonders," and the belief of lies under the influence of "strong delusion" on the part of those who had "pleasure in unrighteousness."

A close and lucid comparison followed of the Pauline prophecies with John's prophecy of the rise, reign, and fall of the great Roman persecuting power. The expressions especially pointed out were the "false prophet," represented under the significant symbol of a beast, having "two horns like a lamb"—a wolf in sheep's clothing, a dragon in lamb-like form—and the term "Mystery" given to the Babylon spoken of in Rev. xvii. Paul's portrait of the "Man of Sin" was next sketched by Mr. Guinness. His countenance, he said, is marked by pretended sanctity. His hand is lifted in the attitude of one bestowing Divine favours. The semblance of the attitude is that of benignity and blessing, while the spirit of the man is that of the great adversary. Behind the "Man of Sin" is the face of the "god of this world," who for six thousand years has been deluding men to their destruction, and whose words are, "Fall down and worship me." The "Man of Sin" is at once an imitation of Christ and a contrast to Him. As Christ acts for God, so the "Man of Sin" acts for Satan. As the Son of God humbled Himself, so the "Man of Sin" exalts himself.

The principles which were to produce this "Man of Sin" had already begun to operate in Paul's day. But in apostolic times there was a certain restraining power, withholding, while it lasted, his manifestation. Paul speaks of this as "he who letteth," or hindereth. This hindering power was the presence and domination of the Roman Cæsars. While they continued to wield the power of the Roman Empire there was no opportunity for this man of sin to rise and reign. He could be manifested only on their fall. As "he that letteth" is the line, or succession of the Cæsars, so "he that sitteth" is the line, or succession of the Popes. Paul tells us that the judgment and destruction of the Man of Sin is to be accomplished by the Son of God, whose place, authority, and worship he has usurped. The Lord Himself will consume him by the breath of his mouth, and destroy him by the brightness of his appearing, or advent. Till that advent, then, he will continue—a statement which involves the pre-millennial character of the Lord's return.

After a detailed comparison of this portrait with that drawn by Daniel and John, into which space will not permit us to enter, Mr. Guinness turned to history. What are the facts? The history of the Christian Church has not been that of steady progress in the pathway of truth and holiness. On the contrary, it is the history of a tremendous apostasy. Even in the first century, as we learn from the New Testament, there set in a departure from the Gospel, and a return to certain forms of ritualism, as among the Galatians. In the second and third centuries sacramentarianism and sacerdotalism came in with stealth, and climbed to a commanding position, never since abandoned. In the fourth century, with the fall of Paganism, began the Imperial Christianity; in the fifth and sixth centuries sprang up the Papacy. The seat of sovereignty was removed from Rome to Constantinople. Then, slowly, on the ruins of old Imperial Rome, rose another power, and another monarchy, a monarchy of loftier aspirations, and more resistless might, claiming dominion, not only over the bodies, but over the consciences and souls of men—dominion not only within the limits of the fallen empire, but throughout the entire world. Higher and higher rose the Papacy, till, in the dark ages, all Christendom was subject to its sway. Of this several proofs were given from a Roman Catholic work by Gosselin on the power of the Pope.

> Popes crowned and uncrowned. They usurped supreme authority in the double realm of things temporal and things spiritual; they commanded; if any resisted, they waged war; they excommunicated; their anathemas fell like a deadly blight; their excommunication was as a terrific storm sweeping over a nation, a destructive tempest of thunder and lightning; kings bowed before its might; sceptres were broken, and crowns were crushed and scattered. Our own King John, after vainly raging against the Papal curse, was compelled to humble himself before the awful Pontiff who had deprived the country of all its spiritual privileges; who denied to its living the rites of religion, and to its dead the rites of sepulture; who shut against it the kingdom of heaven, and let loose upon it the artillery of hell.

A passage followed descriptive of the glory with which the Pope surrounds himself, and the rights which he assumes:—

> He never rises from his pontifical throne to any persons whomsoever, nor uncovers himself to any; nor does he ever condescend to honour any by the least inclination of his head. He wears the keys as the sign of his power to open the gates of heaven to all believers. He holds two swords as judging in things temporal and spiritual. He is the husband of the Church, and as such wears a ring indicating her perpetual betrothal to himself. Thousands upon thousands kneel before him, they struggle to get near his person, they stretch forth their hands to obtain his indulgences, and gorge down his benedictions. With the tiara upon his head, he gives the people his heavenly benediction; the deluded people rend the air with acclamations.

Then we come to that incredible spectacle witnessed at the Vatican in 1870, when the decree of Infallibility was agreed to by 700 bishops from all parts of the earth, the representatives of more than thirty nations and of two hundred millions of Christians. They confessed and professed the twelve articles which Rome has added to the ancient Nicene Creed, and swore adhesion to them:—

> O creed of Pius—or Impious, as he deserved rather to be called—thou art a millstone round the neck of the Roman Pontiff, of the College of Cardinals, of the archbishops, the bishops, the priests, the people, of the whole Papal Church; a mighty millstone that must sink them in destruction and perdition. There is no shaking thee off. Alas! they have doomed themselves to wear thee; Rome's last word is spoken. Her fate is fixed—fixed by her own action, her own utterance, her own oath. Individuals may escape, may flee the system, but as a Church it is past recovery, and utterly beyond the reach of reformation. O that thousands might escape from it while yet there is time! O that they would wake from this blind and abject submission to the tyranny of hypocrites!

Mr. Guinness, in conclusion, quoted the Ursuline Manual as showing that, in the confessional, every priest sits as an image of the Pope, his master, with the sacred conscience of men and women beneath his feet; yea, as though he were God. This manual says distinctly: "Confessors should not be viewed in any other light than…as holding the place of Jesus Christ." In the volume of the laws and secret constitution of the Jesuits, it is also laid down that the superior, whoever he may be, must be recognised, reverenced, and submitted to with perfect and complete subjection of act and thought, as occupying the place of Jesus Christ. Putting into a dozen sentences as many damning facts about the Papacy—in one of which reference was made to the fact that a medal was struck by the Pope to commemorate the massacre of St. Bartholomew—Mr. Guinness, in closing, uttered these words: "A fulfilment of prophecy, so detailed, so dreadful, so complete, a fulfilment historical, geographical, chronological, political, ecclesiastical, religious, stamps the Papacy as the dark and bloodstained power foretold, and stamps the wondrous Book which has foretold it as the Word of the living God."

Rev. Dr. Hanna, of Belfast, in expressing his gratitude for Mr. Guinness's lecture, said many would be glad if some arrangement could be made by which lectures so well calculated to enlighten the people as to the true character of Roman Catholicism, could be delivered in various parts of the country. We understand there is every probability of this suggestion being carried out. It has already been arranged between Mr. Guinness and the Protestant Educational Institute (under whose auspices, in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A., these lectures are being delivered) that soon after Easter, Brighton and other places where Ritualism abounds shall be visited for this purpose.

MRS. GINEVER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

In a little book entitled "Hitherto," Mrs. Ginever gives a most touching narrative of her twelfth year's work in connection with these Homes. The children are received at any age, are carefully trained until the time comes when they can earn a livelihood, and then situations are found for the girls, who on leaving are provided with a good outfit, and thus have a fair start in life. There are at present 122 children in the Homes, which are situated—that for orphan girls at 3, Manor-road, Holloway; the infant branch at 8, Tremlett-grove, Junction-road, Upper Holloway; and that for crippled and afflicted orphans at Cuthbert House, Granville-road, Broadstairs.

The principle upon which selection is made of those who shall be received into these Homes is well illustrated in some of the cases whose sad stories are told in this little manual. One is that of a little orphan who, without friends or home, was left unclaimed in the North-Eastern Hospital for Children. Another, a little fatherless girl, whose sad case was brought to Mrs. Ginever's notice by some workers at Finsbury Park Hall. Others, and some of these scarcely out of their infancy, have been left behind by parents whom wasting disease has claimed, whom misfortune has impelled to suicide, or, as in one case, by a mother who had been killed by her husband's hand. Said a dying father, who saw his baby-boy for the last time, "I wish his mother in heaven could see him." Our sister who stood by to take the child home with her thought, "The best reward will be the testimony from the Lord that the orphans had not missed a mother's care."

The simple faith manifest in the conduct of the Homes has been abundantly justified, and this evokes a hearty tribute of praise and thankfulness. It is not surprising either that the children should have caught the spirit of their kind benefactress, as exhibited by their having "little arrangements among themselves about praying for" special invalid carriages—a need "only known to ourselves." We should like to have been one of the little praying band. Need we add the children's faith was rewarded, for the carriages were supplied, as was also a piano in the same way. Much else is recorded in this little book, which it is difficult to lay aside, and the whole story is full of pathos and charm. Mrs. Ginever may be communicated with at the first-named address.

For the Young.

A WAIL FROM INDIA.

BY A HINDU GIRL.

I am a child—a girl about twelve years of age. They tell me I was born just twelve harvests ago, when a fearful flood ravaged the country round our village. This is how we generally reckon time here.

I do not think I can rightly tell much about myself, but I am not without thoughts at times, and these my friend will write for me; and, perhaps, if the letter is put into one of these strange post-offices, it may reach some gods or holy spirits above us, and some good may come of it. I can but try.

I am not like most of the children here, although my face is dark, and my surroundings are very much the same as theirs. They play in the dirty puddles just outside our huts, where the pigs and dogs and fowls run and grub for food; they go out to help watch our scanty crops of grain against the black crows, or to drive in the cattle and sheep from the hot, dry fields, or to gather up fuel. I have to go, too, very often; but I am not like them, so wholly thoughtless. Though I am so young, I cannot help thinking that I am in a strangely cruel, evil world. See now, my little brother, a sweet and bright child, well and strong till yesterday, now lies very weak and ill, with great scores branded on his body. Yesterday they did it; held him down screaming, and ran the cruel hot iron all down his breast. Everybody else laughed, and said, "Now the evil spirits and our fearful small-pox goddess cannot get the child." But I went away and cried, and felt that the cruel demons had got the child—had got my father and mother too, and were making them torture my little brother. Ah, those cruel goddesses! I suppose I have escaped because my name is not a nice one, and the goddess overlooked me; but most of the others in this village have felt her anger. They have had small-pox; and a little while ago, she came in a still more fearful form, and killed many of us with cholera—men and women, as well as children. To-morrow is the full moon, and then all night long, our people will do "sambram" to the goddess. How I hope she will be pleased! But no one can tell. I must go and see my father kill the fowl, and pour the blood out on the ground, and watch the movements of the cut-off head. Only so, they say, can we guess whether the goddess is pleased or not. Most of the children laugh and sport over all this cruelty, but to me, somehow, it is anything but pleasing—it is horrible.

Can I read or write? What, like the head-man of the village, who keeps the accounts, or like the priest, who lives in the white and red house, with a tiled roof? Oh, no! girls must not learn to read. My father says they are bold and bad enough as they are, and must never learn to read the things written in books. Besides, we have no money to pay for teaching. Some of the boys of our village go to a school, where they sit on the ground all day long beside a teacher, and learn to write in the dust, and to read from strips of leaves. Some of the things they learn are very good—true and wise sayings—but some are very foolish. I should like to learn to read, but I am fated not to do so.

Am I married? Yes, I was married a long time ago, when I was quite a little child. They made a great feast, and one whole day was spent in carrying me, and the big man who is my husband in a grand palanquin, backwards and forwards, through the streets. Some strange rites were performed, and some priests from another village repeated words which we did not understand. Gifts were also exchanged between our house and that of the son of the wedding. But I was so frightened by the noise, the blaring of the trumpets, and the beating of the drums, and the rude wild antics of the dancers, I don't remember anything more of it. But, oh, this evil man, whose wife I now am! He is rich and so, of course, can do as he likes. Sometimes I have to go to his house, and he—but it is useless to speak. Soon I shall have to go to live with him altogether. Cruel destiny! I could almost wish I might become a widow, only then a worse fate might befall me. Sometimes I think I will run away to another village; but then the people are just the same there, even worse, some of them.

Once a strange man came to our village—one of our "Yelevaru," or rulers. He came into the middle street, with a man of our own country, and the two sang a hymn, which of course we didn't understand. Then they talked to the big people, while we children stood up on some rough stones by the temple, and looked and listened. They were both very pleasant men, and spoke very kindly to us. My father told us afterwards, that they said the goddess and evil powers which we worship were nothing—could do us neither good nor harm. "Why," they said, "when the Ammatalli (the little wooden image standing in the temple) is attacked by the white ants, and covered all over with their red earth, she can't even brush it off! Though she has eyes, she sees nothing; though she has hands, she can do nothing. How then can it do you either good or harm?" He said, moreover, that they told him that there was one true God, who was the Maker of everything, and that we ought to worship and love Him; that He loved us, and had saved us, by dying on our behalf. I wonder if those two teachers will come again!

Very many are poor in this place. My father is a weaver, and we all have to help him do his work. Perhaps he will tell about himself and all our poverty some day. Often we have not half enough to eat. And when my father goes far away to other villages to sell the cloths he has made, and sometimes does not send us any money, we all suffer, and almost die. Just now he is ill with fever, and cannot work. The village doctor gives us medicines and charms for which we have to pay; so we are in great distress.—Missionary Review.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, March 6, Luke xii. 49—59; Monday, March 7, Luke xiii. 1—17; Tuesday, March 8, Luke xiii. 18—35; Wednesday, March 9, Luke xiv. 1—14; Thursday, March 10, Luke xiv. 15—24; Friday, March 11, Luke xiv. 25—35; Saturday, March 12, Luke xv. 1—10.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

The report of last year's work gives several touching illustrations of what a blessing to the souls as well as bodies of the poor is a medical mission. In one case, a man in the last stage of consumption, who at first refused to listen when spoken to about spiritual things, was won by the kindness of the lady nurse, and during the months of subsequent lingering bore bright testimony to the cleansing power of the precious blood.

During the year 4609 new cases have been attended and 12,849 consultations given, while 2925 visits were paid by the medical superintendent to the sick in their own homes. The dispensary is open three days a week. God has been pleased to give marked tokens of his presence and blessing in the brief service which precedes the medical work. Gospel services on Sundays and Thursdays have been well attended. A considerable number of the members of the Bible-class are truly Christians, about half owing their conversion to the class. Coal and clothing clubs prove useful auxiliaries, and the deaconess who conducts these as well as the Bible-class, also visits the homes of the sick poor. The good thus wrought is incalculable. Gifts of clothing, &c., are at all times acceptable. The dispensary is at 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, and the medical superintendent is Dr. Robert Chambers.

HE LEADETH ME.

In pastures green? Not always: sometimes He,
Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows be.

Out of the sunshine, warm and soft and bright,
Out of the sunshine into darkest night;
I oft would faint with sorrow and affright,

Only for this—I know He holds my hand;
So, if in pastures green or desert land,
I trust, although I may not understand.

And by still waters? No, not always so;
Ofttimes the heavy tempests round me blow,
And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.

But when the storms beat loudest, and I cry
Aloud for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispers to my soul, "Lo, it is I."

Above the tempest wild I hear Him say,
"Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day;
In every path of thine I lead the way."

So, whether on the hill-tops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valleys, where
The shadows lie, what matter? He is there.

And more than this; where'er the pathway lead,
He gives to me no helpless broken reed,
But his own hand, sufficient for my need.

So where He leads me I can safely go;
And in the blest hereafter I shall know
Why in his wisdom He hath led me so.

DR. TALMAGE on the REVIVAL.

To-day Dr. L. W. Munhall, the evangelist, and Prof. and Mrs. Towner, the Gospel singers, conclude a series of six weeks' meetings in Brooklyn Tabernacle. Between two and three thousand people have professed conversion; upwards of six hundred have already joined the church of which I am pastor. But the service was cosmopolitan, and many have gone to connect themselves with other churches in this city, and other cities and other lands.

The work has been characterised by quietude, solemnity, profound conviction of sin, and positive decision for Christ, leaving no doubt as to a regenerated heart. Dr. Munhall has, with tremendous power, enthralled the attention of the people from first to last. His manner and modes are beyond criticism, and acceptable to all. He is a magnetic speaker, and, in a good sense, dramatic, and always evangelical. When he opens his Gospel batteries, loaded with exegesis, argument, illustration, and anecdote, the hearer must either surrender or retreat into hopeless obduracy. Though we have had but three days of pleasant weather since the meetings began, the church has been thronged with great audiences, and at his Sabbath preaching multitudes have been unable to get inside the building. About six hundred splendid young men between the ages of twenty and thirty years have professed conversion, and I believe have enlisted for a life-time of Christian service, of whom quite one hundred and sixty have united with this church.

Professor and Mrs. Towner have mightily helped by their singing. The Professor has a voice like a band of music, and his accomplished wife must have sung many into the kingdom. As these honoured evangelists leave our church they take with them the benedictions of all our people, and I throw this palm branch in their way.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.—In our issue of Jan. 13 we stated that a gentleman of Canada had offered a prize of £50 for the best essay on this subject, and "What it implies when considered in relation to our obligations to God and the light of the nineteenth century." An important alteration has since been made as to the number of pages of which the essay is to consist, which has been reduced to "about 100 to 150 pages of 250 words each." Any information can be obtained of Rev. Dr. Withrow, Editor Canadian Methodist Magazine, Toronto, Canada.

LETTERS FROM ROME.—2.

Having so lately heard Professor Delaunay on the catacombs of Rome, I was the more interested in the extensive and remarkable cemetery—the Campo Santo—at Genoa. As in the catacombs, the dead are laid on shelves, one above another; the form of inscription is often similar; and now and then we find a tomb expressing the true Christian hope. A mother is weeping for the loss of her child, and an angel stands at her side, pointing upward. Some tell out the love of their hearts in beautiful language, as "dead to earth, not to our love." One monument represents the prophet Ezekiel standing in the valley full of bones, and crying, "Ossa arida, audite verbum Domini!" and the dead are coming out of their graves at his word. High on the hill is a mausoleum, with an inscription from the Vulgate on each of its four sides. One is, "An end is come, the end is come; it watcheth for thee: behold it is come" (Ezek. vii. 6). And on the front façade, "I am the Resurrection and the Life." But none struck me as more tender than one on a tomb, where a female figure sits holding a cross, with the words, "Here sleeps in Christ, expecting the eternal day...His widow and daughter, in the hope of re-embracing him, where there is no more death, have placed this memorial."

THE SALVATION ARMY IN ROME.

Shortly before leaving London I received the following letter from Rome:—

Dear Sir,—As a subscriber of many years' standing, and a constant reader of The Christian, I take the liberty of drawing your attention to the coming of the Salvation Army to this city. The Army two years ago began a little work amongst the poor Italians in London under the charge of Staff-captain Vint and his wife. Their efforts resulted in constant conversions of ones and twos, and many of these converts are standing to-day in London, and others too in Italy, where they have since returned. Anyone can see these Italian converts of London by going to Saffron-hill and Eyre-street-hill, where they live. The meetings take place daily, and these men are well known by the inhabitants of the colony to have given up drink, tobacco, cards, &c., and have stood firm in their faith, in spite of much persecution, for the last two years.

My wife and I have offered General Booth a small hall in Rome for the commencement of a similar work, and Captain Vint was sent to Rome the other day to take possession on behalf of the Army. The very first night two young Italians gave their hearts to God in our house, and Captain Vint is full of hope for the success of the work amongst the poorest classes in Rome.

Letters, &c., can be addressed Staff-captain Vint, Esercito della Salvezza, No. 10, Via Gioberti, Rome, Italy.

From what I have seen of the work in London, I feel that it is thoroughly deserving of the sympathy of those who desire the good of the poor neglected classes in this the city of the Cæsars.

I remain, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,
John Henry Gordon.
50, Via Macchiavelli, Rome, Jan. 27.

Public meetings were commenced by Mr. Vint, his wife and her sister, with the assistance of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon, on Sunday night, February 20. About five and twenty were brought in one by one, chiefly being buttonholed on the pavement by Mr. Gordon. The room is up a passage, off the street, and is thus at a disadvantage; but on the other side it has an entrance (now closed) directly abutting on the street. This will probably be opened, and attract more people. The work has been begun in an unostentatious and tentative way, and the Captain and his helpers are very suitable persons to have been sent to Italy.

Capt. Vint is a good example of what a young man may do if he tries. He had at school a taste for languages. He picked up Italian by talking to the waiters in Italian coffee shops, and studied the language at home. When converted he visited the organ-grinders in Saffron-hill, as described by Mr. Gordon, with good success. He speaks Italian fairly well, and has issued a small hymn-book, almost entirely of his own composition. His perseverance in teaching the choruses to the rough men who form his audience is rewarded not only by their learning to sing them, but also in winning their interest and confidence. Capt. Vint accompanied the General as his "Staff-Captain" on his recent visit to Canada.

JEWS' MEDICAL MISSION.

Dr. Young, formerly of Florence, is well known to many friends in England. He spends part of the year at Redhill, where he has a practice, and part of it at Rome, where, during the season, he is also very much engaged. He gives, however, Tuesday and Saturday mornings to the Medical Mission among the Jews. Two young ladies, Miss Macgregor and Miss Smith, who were formerly for some years at Constantinople, assist in dispensing, as does also Miss Morgan and several other ladies.

It is an interesting and valuable agency. Many are evidently convinced that Jesus is their Messiah, but are afraid to confess Him. Now, however, the Ghetto (the Jews' quarter) is being taken down, and the people scattered. This has reduced the number coming for advice; but it will also make them more independent of each other, and so remove a great obstacle to their acknowledging their faith in Christ.

Dr. Young is in the habit of inviting Christian workers in Rome to spend an evening occasionally in CONFERENCE ON EVANGELICAL WORK.

On Monday evening, February 21, in addition to the speakers, there were present Dr. Grey (Scotch Church), Rev. J. Wall (Baptist), Dr. Vernon and Dr. Gay (American Episcopal Methodists), Rev. J. Eager (American Baptist), and other ladies and gentlemen, who are all doing gook work for God in Rome.

Dr. Prochet, Waldensian pastor, speaking of the special difficulties of evangelisation in Rome, said:—The people here are not like those in England and America, who know the Gospel. We have to bring Christ to those who look on us as emissaries of the devil. Suppose a Buddhist or Mahommedan were to try to induce you to abandon Christ—this is like the view the Roman Catholics take of us. People in England may ask why we do not go from house to house, as city missionaries do there. The circumstances and habits of the people are different, and we cannot do so. In 1871 we had 1800 Church members, and they contributed 9000 francs; now we have 4000, and they contribute 70,000 francs. We have 40 organised congregations, 39 mission stations, and 130 places occasionally visited.

Not many converts go back to Romanism, not many are disciplined and dismissed, but many remove to other places; e.g., two-thirds of a congregation in Sicily emigrated to New Orleans, and though there they are lost to the Waldensian Church in Italy, they have founded a small church in that city.

A second difficulty is to make the Romanists believe that the Bible is the Word of God. Infidels smile with contempt; the indifferent prefer the newspaper. Those who have any conscience are told by the priests that it is not the Word of God. The people do not know that the difference between us and the priests is not that we disbelieve the Bible, but what man has added to it. A lady sent for me to see her servant, a Waldensian girl, who was ill. Having paid my visit, the Signora would like to see me—a very polite lady. She wanted to ask me about my religion. "You do not believe in Jesus Christ?" "Oh, yes." "Then is it the Holy Ghost you disbelieve?" After some other questions I told her in few words that we believe all that holy men wrote by inspiration in the Bible, but not what the Pope has added to it. She asked in astonishment, "Is it really so?"

Last year a literary man of great ability and influence, who believes in God, said to me, "Now, it's time Roman Catholics and Protestants should unite, for infidelity is swallowing up the nation." I was rejoiced to hear him so alive to the spread of infidelity, and said, "If we do not unite it is not our fault; but that of the people who curse us." "Oh, that is all past; that was the sixteenth century. If you give way a little in this and that, the Pope would be agreed with you. After all, is not the difference that between Constitutional government and Republicanism?" Yet that man is looked up to as one of the first luminaries in Italy.

Three weeks ago, in a railway carriage, an evangelist told a fellow-traveller he was going to preach the Gospel. "So you believe in God?" he asked, in astonishment. "Oh, yes; and in the ten commandments, and in Jesus the Son of God." "Pray send me a Bible;" for which he paid, and gave the address to the Prefettura of a city in Northern Italy.

The Bible Society may make up its mind that many of the 800,000 Bibles they say have been bought in Italy do not now exist. The priests do all they can to destroy them. But some know how to give a shrewd answer to those who would take them away. A woman went to her neighbour who had a Bible, and asked why she would endanger her soul by keeping it. She replied that if that was not the true word of God, she would keep it till the priest gave her one that really was so.

In a town of 25,000 souls a man two years ago used to go to Mass in the morning and to an evangelical service at night. At last at confession he asked, "Padre, how is it that you only give the bread to the people, when Christ gave both the bread and the wine?" "It was our Mother Church, understanding that one might be disgusted to drink out of the same cup after another; so she keeps the cup for the priests?" "Was Jesus Christ the Son of God? and was He as wise as God?" "Yes, certainly." "Then how was it He did not know there might be some people who would be disgusted, and had to be corrected by the Church?" "Ah," said the priest, "you know too much to continue a Roman Catholic. Go to the evangelical church; and when you go, do it thoroughly and truly." This shows that some priests—yes, many—are awakening to the truth; and many would come to us if they could. Many applications are made from priests to become evangelists; and many more who say Mass do not believe in it. They think they are obliged to remain because they can do nothing else. One offered to be my house-servant. If they knew how to secure a living anyhow, they would come out; but since they were eight years old they have been prepared to be priests. If any class needs our prayers more than another it is such priests. They are as miserable as a man can be, doing wrong with other men's consciences in defiance of their own. If I were rich I would make an experiment with these men; by giving them an opportunity of showing their sincerity, and their ability to enter upon evangelistic work.

Rev. Henry Pigott, for many years the Wesleyan minister in Rome, and a man of gracious and unsectarian spirit, like those I mentioned in my last, said:—One of our great difficulties is to awaken a sense of sin in the conscience of an Italian. He confesses sins, and gets absolution, but has little conscience of sin. Therefore he receives the Gospel in a very superficial way. The sincerely Roman Catholic population are a most hopeful class, though barred up from us by prejudices. Outside the churches there are many people in country districts and villages who have received the Gospel. In one village, reached by a zigzag path, which not even a donkey can ascend, about eight have found the Lord, and are holding the truth amidst persecution. A travelling knifegrinder, a man of considerable force of character, had found Christ; and used to distribute tracts on his journeys. He won a mountain stone-cutter of similar backbone. One Sunday they were in front of a church as the people came out. The priest had been denouncing such men, and the people observing them assaulted them. The stone-cutter received a severe blow, and leaped for joy, at being counted worthy to suffer for His name.

There is a little town in North Italy, seldom visited, where a dozen Christians meet over a greengrocer's shop, and the town councillor conducts the service. Another case is that of a solicitor who became soundly converted; finding he could not carry on his business without doing it on the Lord's day, he sold it, and gave himself to Christian work.

The children are our hope. Hundreds are being taught in evangelical schools, who will grow up, if not all converted, at least in sympathy with evangelical work; and the benefit will be reaped in years to come.

It is impossible to estimate the good Signor

Capellini is doing among young men who pass through his hands. Many return to their homes faithful to the trust received. A young soldier went home, and his brother, then his father, ultimately the whole family, were converted. They were travelling vendors, and scattered tracts from village to village. I visited the place, and the Syndic kept the door during the meeting. All this through one soldier converted by means of Signor Capellini. A leader of the Liberal party went to discuss and interrupt the meeting, but was so impressed that he received the truth, and rejoiced in the favour of God.

Notwithstanding the disadvantage of early influences, our Italian ministers are becoming trustworthy. About twenty-five remain to us after much sifting. They are godly men, and relieve us of much anxiety.

Mr. Pigott closed with a reference to the very remarkable conversion of a parish priest, particulars of which I may be able to give in a future letter. R. C. MORGAN.

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM

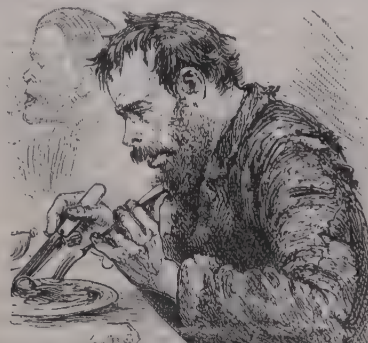
AT THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE."

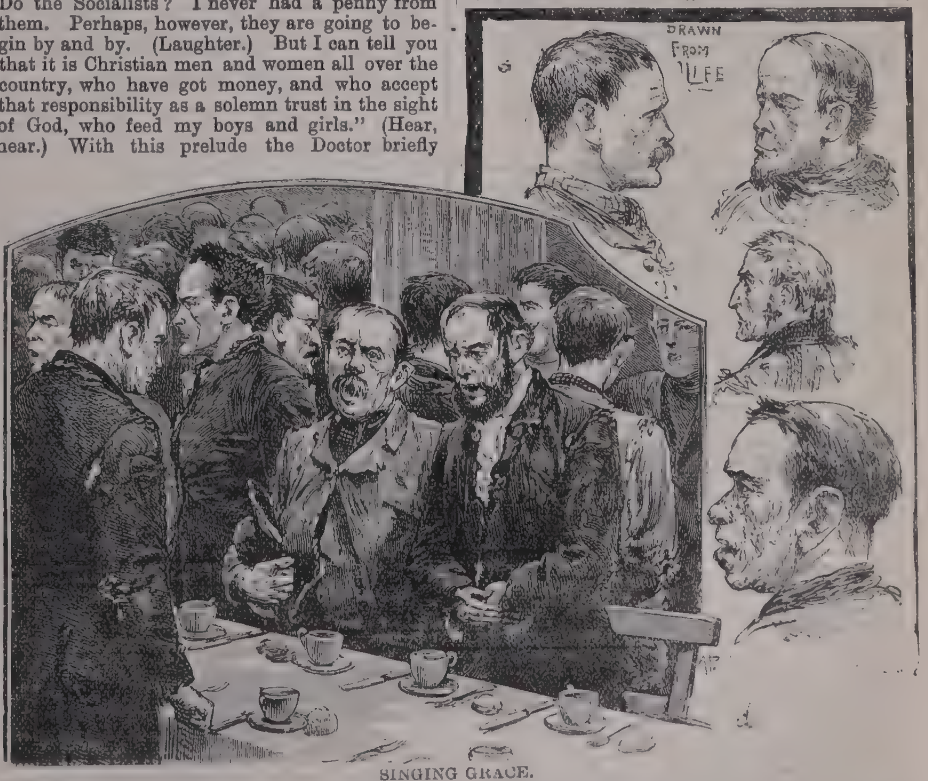
LAST Thursday morning our frequent friend, "the social reformer," if he had been there, might have seen something worth thinking about in the neighbourhood of the East-end dock gates. He might have begun with the desperate rush of humanity which besieged St. Katherine's Dock at the first "call," at half-past eight—hundreds of men, wedged tightly, with strained muscles and anxious faces, bracing themselves for the struggle which should follow the foreman's demand for men. He would see the older men rudely thrown aside by young fellows with stronger muscles; he would see the agony of heart-sickness on many a face, as the lucky few left the unfortunate many standing "outside the gate," either to rush with faint expectation to another gate, or to lounge, listless and hungry, till the next "call" offered another chance of a fractional day's work, at fivepence an hour.

But on this Thursday, after the first "call" had left its hundreds heart-sick, our friend would have seen another rush, almost as fierce and wild, surging round the persons of two strangers, whose energies were over-taxed in the effort to distribute certain tickets among the crowd. If he had made some inquiries, he would have learned that a hot dinner was to be given that evening in Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle to some 1400 of the unemployed, all of whom had to qualify by being "disappointed candidates, rejected at the dock gates the same day." The old dock hands had heard of it, and for the 1400 tickets there were between four and five thousand applicants. Young men under twenty-five were not invited; but the competition for the one night's meal and entertainment among the older hands was fierce and saddening. "Here, guv'nor, I've a wife and six of 'em starving at 'ome." "Ain't done a turn for six weeks." "It'll be my first meal to-day." And the tickets were scrambled for amidst exclamations like these, with a vehemence that meant hunger if not starvation.

So, too, in the evening the Edinburgh Castle was surrounded by hundreds of the unticketed; and when the great hall was full and brimming over, a vast crowd was left to surge aimlessly for an hour or more round its portals before they realised the weary truth that admission was impossible. The long rows of guests, waiting for dinner, wore an undeniably drab and dreary look under the blaze of the electric light. Many were elderly men, on whose bowed backs and wrinkled faces a hard life had left its imprint. Toil and monotonous days had set their seal on their countenances, and their range of interest was obviously narrowed down to slender limits. Intense interest, however, manifested itself when dinner appeared. A contingent of "overflow" diners had been accommodated in the Iron Hall, and after these had filed in, the programme announced of "singing and short addresses" was at once proceeded with. The singing was well catered for, the Edinburgh Castle choir, the Boys' Home Band, and the Little Handbell Ringers all being called into requisition, besides the services of Miss Goodhew, Mr. J. T. Page, and other soloists. "Beats the Music 'All, mate," observed one guest to his neighbour, sotto voce, and the continuous applause appeared to endorse this verdict.

Dr. Barnardo touched a practical note at the very outset of his little talk. "Out of work," was, alas! a common complaint in the East-end. Socialists told them that they could make a better world of it if they had matters in their hands for twenty-four hours. But, happily, they hadn't got the chance, so what was the use of talking? Let them face the present necessity as sensibly as they could. They did not really find that it was the Socialists who did most of the good in the world. He himself now had a pretty big family of his own, about 1900 off and on. (Laughter.) He could show them to-night eighty-four of his elder sons. Whereupon the waiters, a band of fine-looking youths, from the Labour House, stout, smart, ruddy-faced, stood up to be stared at. "Do they look starved?" continued the Doctor. "Somebody feeds them. Do the Socialists? I never had a penny from them. Perhaps, however, they are going to begin by and by. (Laughter.) But I can tell you that it is Christian men and women all over the country, who have got money, and who accept that responsibility as a solemn trust in the sight of God, who feed my boys and girls." (Hear, hear.) With this prelude the Doctor briefly glided into a pithy exposition of the emigration solution of the labour difficulty. He knew, he said, something about emigration. In Canada alone there were twenty-four hundred millions of acres of good land, almost as large as the whole of Europe. Three-fourths of this was not yet taken up, waiting to be possessed, and to be tilled, so as to "give seed to the sower and bread to the eater." To all who were honest and industrious, and of sufficiently robust health, Canada afforded a boundless field, for with all its vast area there was only a population there equal to that of London! He had had prepared a paper for emigrants which would supply to all complete information as to colonial emigration, showing among other things the various societies and individuals who would assist intending emigrants. He was sure it would be of use to some, or many, of the guests present. The papers were then rapidly distributed by the lads, and the majority appeared at once to give earnest heed to their counsel.





SINGING GRACE.

An address by Mr. James Manning succeeded, in which the three R's of the Gospel were earnestly pressed home upon the consciences of the hearers. Rev. Mr. Chancellor, vicar of Brockley, at once secured the ears of the guests by the hymn he sung, "Oh, what a Saviour," the chorus of which, "Verily, verily I say unto you," was taken up by the choir and the audience. Mr. Page's song of "The Little Hero" was irresistibly encored, and it was a curious sight to behold many of these hardened men quietly wiping away the tears which the words called forth. In his second piece his hearers supplied the chorus with a heartiness that did one good to hear. Miss Goodhew had a warm welcome, as her sweet soprano sounded forth, "Behold Him standing at the door," and the succeeding efforts of the choir, organist, and handbell ringers were appreciated to the full.

It was late before Colonel Dru Drury rose to administer, as he humorously said, a "little powder in the jam." Spite of his pleasant manner and telling style, and spite, likewise, of Dr. Barnardo's appeal and remonstrance, the gallant Colonel had hardly a fair opportunity of pointing the Gospel moral of the story which he began to tell, but which turned out to be like the Norse fairy tale, a "story without an end." A few further minutes on Gospel Temperance were occupied by Mr. W. Groves, whose earnest, powerful words made a deep impression, and the choir brought a long and successful evening to a close at a late hour by very tender words, sweetly sung.

Out into the night these hard-handed sons of toil wandered, carrying memories not soon, we hope, to die away, of loving words, of generous and hospitable care, and of an unselfish ministry of Christian brotherhood, which making a feast had not called those who would recompense again, but "the poor"—"for they cannot recompense thee."

Letters to the Editor.

REV. EDWARD WHITE ON CHURCH CREEDS.

Sir,—You have somewhat missed the drift of my reference to "Creeds and Formularies" in the "address to Medical Missionaries" which you noticed last week. The object was to persuade the missionaries to teach the Christian religion to the Chinese in the words of Christ and his Apostles, as nearly as these can be represented in the Chinese language, leaving out of use the largely extra-Scriptural diction of European formularies, which have grown up through many centuries as the result of clerical conflicts with heretics.

I said nothing whatever against the use of creeds in Europe for those who like them; simply protesting against the importation into China of European phrases which are not found in the Bible, and for this I deserve to be praised and not censured, I humbly submit.

With thanks, I am, yours truly,
Edward White.

THE PRINCE-ITE DELUSION.

Sir,—I find that one paragraph in my "Warning" has been mistaken by some. Will you allow me to state that I have not seen Mr. Pigott since he has embraced this awful error. I said in my warning, "And now he comes to me as the accredited representative of Mr. Prince," &c. I think that this is not an unusual figure of speech, denoting an advance by letter, or pamphlet, or public teaching, and does not necessarily imply a personal interview. The threatened denunciations were taken from a volume in the British Museum, which emanated from the Agapemone. My warning words were more than needed. The foundations of this heresy were laid in immorality and profanity of an appalling kind, and the obstinacy with which those who embrace it shut their eyes to this fact, refusing even to weigh evidence that would be accepted in any Court of Justice in England, is to my mind one of the strongest proofs of its Satanic origin. Prayer is the only weapon with which it can be successfully attacked.

Yours faithfully,
Daniel Bell Hankin.
St. Jude's Vicarage, Mildmay, N.

Sir,—For many weeks I have felt constrained to write to you concerning the remarkable similarity of the so-called spiritual manifestations exhibited amongst the followers of Mr. Prince, and of those who once followed Mrs. Girling, the head of the Shaker community in the New Forest. Alas, I was one of those who was for a time misled into joining the Shakers, and, therefore, my remarks have this value concerning her—that they are facts I can personally vouch for.

I believe that in early life Mrs. Girling was, like Mr. Prince, leading a very devoted life, and what seems to have misled both was a thirst for some fresh revelation from God after the manner of apostolic days. It was this that led me to join the Shakers. Professedly under the Spirit's power I beheld what I thought was one speaking in an unknown tongue, and then another by the Spirit interpreting into English the unknown utterance. Then I heard professed prophecies, and I felt "Oh! that I, too, possessed such a gift, that I might know plainly and without doubt the things of the Spirit of God!" But, alas! after joining this community I found these prophecies were utterly unreliable, and the professed gifts of the Spirit of God were mainly used to puff up Mrs. Girling. So I find it is now with the followers of poor Mr. Prince. These prophets mainly testify of him (the same may be said of Mr. Wood and his followers), but the testimony of the Holy Spirit is mainly concerning Jesus. I know that these prophecies greatly contribute to spiritual pride, for at last Mrs. Girling proclaimed herself to be Jesus Christ, and even professed to show the marks, in her hands, feet, and side, of his crucifixion.

How was it that I escaped at last from this delusion? By reading my Bible. I never gave up this, although studying it was not encouraged, for "the Spirit" was said to be always greater than "the Word." And when Mrs. Girling's teaching did not agree with Scripture she held that preference was to be given to her teaching, because it was of the Spirit. The followers of Mr. Prince will soon find, if they read their Bibles, that these "revelations" are very different to any recorded in Scripture.

But the worst of all is that, although such contradictory revelations are made, still credence is given to these utterances. Soon after I joined Mrs. Girling's faith, our "prophet" testified that there was to be another messenger besides her; but she said that the young man who so prophesied spake this "by temptation," so as to keep herself at the head of the sect. I have heard fearful denunciations "in the Spirit" of those who should ever leave the community, or live a married life, as one of the tenets of the Shaker faith was, that unless men and women remained unmarried, they could not inherit the kingdom of God. I could give many instances of prophecies and denunciations which never came to pass; but I beseech my dear brethren or sisters who have been tempted to join Mr. Prince to "prove all things," and, if I can be of any service to any so misled brethren, or if these words should stay others from being deceived, I shall be thankful.—Yours faithfully,

An Ex-Shaker.

THE NEW CRUSADE.

The path of the social reformer has ever been an upward and toilsome one; if it were not for the strength that comes from a consciousness of right, and of having God's approving smile, heart and flesh would often faint and fail. Among the far-seeing and heroic souls whom no discouragement can daunt, and no opposition can turn aside, is Mrs. Josephine Butler. She has again taken up her powerful pen in defence of the oppressed. The New Crusade, in which she is leading the van, has for its aim the abolition of the licensed and regulated iniquity that still flourishes in so many of the British Colonies and dependencies. In a trenchant pamphlet, "The Revival and Extension of the Abolitionist Cause" (4d. Dyer Bros.), Mrs. Butler sounds the alarm, and gives detailed references to the extent of the evil in many places under British and so-called "Christian" rule. The array of facts thus brought together is sufficient to make the name of Britain stink in the nostrils of the nations.

In this month's Sentinel there is the first of a series of articles from Mrs. Butler's pen; it gives a wide view of the subject and clearly sets forth the deep responsibility that lies on British Christians at this crisis in the history of the Empire. She shows how the "civilised" vices of the West have always followed the track of our conquering and colonising forces in Eastern lands. The following words deserve to be weighed seriously by every professed Christian:—

> I would desire nothing better than to have the honour of being allowed to consecrate my poor remaining powers and days to the service of any heathen subjected races however low in morality, as against their far viler "Christian" conquerors. I know that it is possible to throw back in our faces the horrors of heathen morality, the sensuality of Mohammedanism, &c. I would ask, however, which are the more guilty before God—the followers of the false prophet, and those who, having no prophet or teacher at all, become assimilated to the fetiches which they worship—or those who, under the teaching of Christianity, with the light of instruction and education, and the traditions (not quite forgotten) of the ethics of the Sermon on the Mount, go out to these heathen, and while too often adopting their vices, introduce new and unheard-of immorality, endorsing both alike by law and by ordinance? There is no question about it. These peoples will rise up in the judgment against us, as Sodom against Chorazin, concerning whom our Lord said, that if the former had had the light which the latter had, "they would have repented long ago."

As citizens of this Empire, and each responsible, in our measure, for its government, let us awake to our present duty. We cannot better prepare ourselves than by a careful study of the facts and arguments that our devoted sister is thus focussing for our enlightenment and information.

LADY DUFFERIN, it is stated, is paying the expenses of several persons studying in America for mission work in India.

MRS. HENRY WOOD, editor of The Argosy, and authoress of various popular works of fiction, was, says Footsteps of Truth, a generous contributor to the funds of the Evangelistic Mission, particularly in the Relief Department; so that in her decease many of the poor will lose a true friend.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. George C. Needham has returned from the Western cities, and will labour for the present in Philadelphia. He closed at Cleveland with an audience of 3000 persons. There were many professed conversions both there and at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Needham hope soon to revisit the South.

Field Lane Refuges.—Mr. and Mrs. C. King have been conducting mission services at these institutions, of which Mr. Peregrine Platt is the secretary. Mr. King made grateful allusion to the fact that when a wanderer he thankfully sat down to one of the Sunday morning free breakfasts held at the Refuge.

Glasgow Thieves at Supper.—Mr. Ned Wright has been conducting a fortnight's mission in Glasgow, one incident of which was the inviting of one hundred and fifty thieves to supper in the Tolbooth Hall. The supper proved an enjoyable meal, and all remained and listened attentively to the addresses which followed.

Rayleigh, Essex.—A fortnight's mission has just been conducted here by Mr. George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society. Preceded by a week of prayer, in which the churches of the town united, the services were found to be most stimulating and helpful. Several instances of blessing were announced, and the commencement of a good work in the town inaugurated. I. B.

Chicago.—When Rev. Sam Jones closed his meetings in Chicago last spring, it was understood that the West Side Churches should engage him to return for a campaign in that section of the city. But when the outcome of his meetings proved so unsatisfactory, the arrangement was abandoned. Mr. Moody has been holding meetings there instead, with better results.—Chicago Standard.

Mr. H. Thorne has conducted a sixteen days' mission in the Oddfellows' Hall, St. Helier's, Jersey. His soul-stirring addresses have been most fruitful; night after night many manifested their desire to find the Saviour. Mr. Thorne was supported in the work by earnest Christians, prominent amongst whom were two lady workers, Miss Flude and Miss Greenwood, who accompanied the evangelist to Jersey.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith during the past three weeks have been conducting a mission at the Nottingham Tabernacle. The power of Christ has been manifest at every meeting. Not a night has passed without some prodigal starting to his Father's home. Mr. Fullerton has spoken night after night with a holy fervour and zeal in his Master's cause. On Tuesday week a Conference was held, when Mr. Smith gave his "Life-story." The men's meetings have been very successful. Mrs. Fullerton has addressed the women. B. F.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has lately been evangelising in the State of Massachusetts, first in North Attleboro, and then in East Boston. A writer in The Christian Witness speaks in very grateful terms of the work at the former place, and says, "many young people have been hopefully converted." A like blessing seems to have attended the Boston meetings. From there Mr. Hammond was to proceed to New York, in the upper part of which city a mission had been arranged.

A work of deep interest has been going on in the First Reformed Church of Albany, N.Y. Rev. W. W. Clark, of Staten Island, has been giving a series of Bible Expositions, which have been largely attended. Mr. Clark gives addresses to Christians each afternoon, and preaches directly to the unconverted in the evening. The services were made additionally interesting by the presence of Mr. Sankey, who sang some of his most effective solos, as well as taking a share in the speaking. Much interest was manifested by Christians of all denominations, and a great blessing was granted.

Dr. Guinness at Exeter Hall.—Young men at the West have availed themselves as freely of the opportunity of hearing this powerful and sympathetic speaker, as did their brethren in the neighbourhood of Aldersgate-street. On the two Sundays on which Dr. Guinness has spoken at Exeter Hall, there have been large attendances, while at the "talk," on the first week evening, upwards of a thousand were present. The subsequent Gospel addresses were "with power," of which there was evidence, not alone in the number of those who, by coming to the front, expressed their desire henceforth to live for Christ. The subject on Sunday evening last was "Lot," and the course of addresses was brought to a close on Monday.

Rev. W. Haslam will be engaged during March as follows:—5—15, Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent; 19—29, St. Saviour's Church, Manchester

THE JUBILEE HOME of INDUSTRY.

Beloved Friends,—For many years we have been waiting to remove to a quieter street, and one more in the midst of the masses in Bethnal-green. A year ago a large warehouse was erected at the corner of Club-row, almost on the spot where Dr. Elwin and Reginald Radcliffe held the first prayer-meeting in the centre of Bird Fair. Since that revival of twenty-five years ago, how much blessing has followed for the East of London. Still there is need for more witnesses among the thousands of Jews and foreigners, more antagonistic work against the drink traffic, and more definite efforts to save the thousands of youths who are being demoralised every Lord's Day in Bird Fair.

For years we longed to rent a shop, and open it nightly for the Gospel, followed up by young men's classes, &c. But no shop availed, and our longing deepened, as the crowd was ever growing denser, and as our workers increased our faith grew also, till at length we asked of God this newly built warehouse.

The conditional lease of our present house, in Commercial-street, was drawing to a close, when a personal friend was taken ill, and, in three days, gathered home; one of her last efforts was to distribute her money amongst those she had frequently visited and cheered in her days of health. This legacy was at once dedicated to the need long felt. Another lady, a widow, found out the secret burden, and then another, and each of these offered a thousand pounds. Then a man of business, who had visited Canada, and loved the work of emigration amongst the young, sent us another thousand pounds. Thus, day after day, answers came to our united prayers, teaching us continually to praise the Lord. Our counsellors also each shared the responsibility of this new step.

There are some who grieve at leaving this house of blessing, but, by removing to the next parallel street, we shall be even more in the midst of the poor people amongst whom we are labouring. We hope to have the new house simply furnished and worked economically, thus adapting it to the needs of every member of the family, by means of Bible-classes for fathers and mothers, sons and daughters of different ages; and by bringing a larger number of youths under Gospel influences. Increasing opportunities will be afforded to young workers, before they go forth to home or foreign fields, to find out whether they are led of the Holy Spirit, and have gifts for definite practical work.

Our next party of youths will be our fiftieth band, and, in memory of God's faithfulness vouchsafed to us, and to the 4230 already taken to Canada; of his preserving care in all these yearly voyages amid many a storm, and once with the ship on fire; for no death hitherto among these precious children at sea; for a good hope of those who have died; for enabling us to rejoice over two hundred virtuous marriages; and for workers who have aided us who are now doing true work in China, Africa, India, and America; for all these mercies we joyfully add the word Jubilee to the "Home of Industry."

Through the goodness of the Lord we have been enabled to purchase the new building, and we ask all fellow-workers to join us in praise and prayer that, in this removal to a house with increased accommodation, we may "cast the net on the right side of the ship," and that from the multitudes in Bird Fair hundreds may be gathered into the Saviour's fold.

Yours in the Master's service,
Annie Macpherson.

RESCUE WORK.—An effort is being made in Holloway and Islington to reach and save the numerous sisterhood who nightly walk our streets. Well-attended midnight meetings have recently been held. More were found willing to abandon their life of sin than could be accommodated. A suitable house has been taken, and help is needed in furnishing the rooms. Mr. F. Geller, 172, Park-road, Crouch End, is one of the secretaries.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

The mission work carried on at this place, the direct outcome of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit in 1883, has again been fruitful in blessing. The weekly prayer-meeting is well attended, and at the men's Bible-class there is an average attendance of between fifty and sixty. Evangelistic services are held in some of the lodging-houses, and many of their habitués and others have been attracted to the hall by an occasional free tea. Many cases resulting from this effort have excited the deepest gratitude.

The work of the Mission is essentially undenominational, and no public services are held on Sunday mornings, so that workers may identify themselves with some of the congregations in the neighbourhood. During the year more than four hundred and fifty meetings were held, and the work of the Mission is evidently developing. Mr. W. M. Seaman, Tower House, West-hill, Putney, is one of the secretaries.

TRAINING SERVANTS.

The Institution for the Training of Respectable Young Girls for Domestic Service (63, High-street, Clapham) was established in 1850. It is strictly undenominational, and, since its commencement, has received between 400 and 500 girls. Only children of respectable parents are admitted, and each girl must be nominated by a member. They are admissible immediately on leaving the Board Schools, and while they are yet too young for service, thus preserving them from falling into idle habits, or from forming undesirable companionships.

They generally remain for two years, during which time they are instructed in all the various departments of household work (laundry work included), and at the end of the term of training, suitable situations are found for them, as under-housemaids, under-nurses, kitchen-maids, &c. After having been nine months in "the Home," they are allowed to go out by the day, week, or month, at a moderate charge, to assist in the families of subscribers. The demand for these young servants is each year larger, showing how much the public appreciate the training which they receive, but unless the committee can obtain a larger number of annual subscribers, the Institution will have to be closed.

Yours faithfully,
(Miss) F. L. Raines.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

The King's command, "Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in," has been carried out many times in this Mission during the last few months. When the snow has been deep, and the winds piercing, we have found hundreds at the dock gates vainly looking for work. These poor fellows gladly accept of our cards of invitation to a dock labourers' free tea, kindly given by a Christian gentleman. There is a good supply of hot tea, with plenty of bread and butter, and there are willing hands and hearts ready to assist in any way.

We have given about 2000 free meals to dock labourers on Thursdays, and lodging-house men on Saturday nights. Gospel addresses have been delivered at these meetings, and some practical Bible readings by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, also from students of Mr. Guinness's Institute, Bow. The power of God has been manifest at these gatherings, numbers staying to the after-meetings for prayer and counsel; many have professed to decide for Christ. One man, well connected, fell through drink, left a good situation, was arrested at a meeting; and is now restored to his family. Altogether the work has been very manifestly of God. I would express my deepest gratitude to many readers of The Christian, who have helped and cheered us with their prayers and means.

THE BRETON MISSION.

Pastor Lecoat, of Tremel, Côtes-du-Nord, France, thus writes:—

Our work has never been so encouraging as now. The whole country seems to be awakening at the sound of the "Good News," and I am desirous of being able to overtake some of the many opportunities now open to us. Recently one of our country magistrates was sent to prison for ten days for a political offence. Thinking he would find the time hang on his hands, he bought a New Testament. His incessant reading of it led the wife of the chief warder to ask him to allow her to look at it. She read a portion which struck her much, and she begged him to leave it with her, as she said the colporteur never came there. So this "New Book," as the Scriptures are called, is read, prized, and loved, and we have seen in the proportionally large additions to our little evangelical church, by public baptism, the blessed outcome of its teachings upon the hearts of our poor Bretons.

Even the children are beginning to understand that hitherto sealed book. A little one was present when his father was paying for some property which he had bought, and seeing the simple instrument, which under the French law suffices for the best of titles, and noting the large sum paid for it, expressed his astonishment that so much should be paid for a title to property, when a title to everlasting life can be had for threepence. With this he introduced the New Testament, which he had learned to value so highly. Several Christian friends have lately visited us, and cheered us much. Our day-schools continue to increase both in numbers and efficiency, as the Government examinations show, although we get no help from the French Government, as we insist upon using the Bible as our great Book.

WORKHOUSE VISITATION.

By Lady BRABAZON.

I can fully endorse the remarks in a recent number of The Christian as to the need for greater interest in our workhouses. Sympathy flows out freely towards hospital patients, but many are unconscious or forgetful that, in workhouse infirmaries, sufferers are to be found who have equal, if not still greater, claims on our compassion.

Here, hopeless cases may be seen, for whom there is no likelihood of relief from pain until death comes as an angel of mercy to release them. Not only do those who are sick deserve our sympathy, but some might well be bestowed on the aged, who are fated to end their days in the workhouse. It is pitiful to see men and women in the infirm wards with nothing to do and nothing to think about. A scheme for employing those whose infirmities debar the authorities from giving them occupation has been for the last few years successfully worked by a band of ladies at St. Mary Abbotts, South Kensington, and other London workhouses. It has proved a great boon to those who were unwilling idlers. Music is also a great pleasure; indeed very little suffices to please those who have scarcely any enjoyments.

In one workhouse, where I sometimes visit, the master collected £6 or £7 to purchase a harmonium, which can be taken from ward to ward, and great is the delight of the patients when ladies volunteer to sing with them. One Sunday afternoon, when I had helped to lead the singing in an infirm ward and had also read out part of the evening services, one of the women sent for me and with tears in her eyes thanked me for what I had done. She said, "Sunday after Sunday comes, and there is nothing of the Sabbath in it." She was completely crippled and consequently unable to attend the chapel attached to the workhouse. There are doubtless thousands of patients in the same position as this poor woman. Could not some of your readers minister to their spiritual necessities, and render their own Sunday more blessed by endeavouring to bless it to others?

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. Wylie, of Edinburgh, the veteran author of "The History of Protestantism."

We are familiar with the saying that saving faith is not a hereditary possession. It is well to remember that neither is unbelief hereditary. We learn from a transatlantic contemporary that "a son of the philosopher Hegel, and one of Schelling, and a daughter of Schleiermacher are not only orthodox, but deeply interested in the progress of religion."

The Inland Revenue authorities have been aroused to some business-like effort of late in the summonsing of publicans for adulterating beer, a large number of fines having been exacted, in sums varying from £10 to £30. But publicans urge in defence that, with the enormous number of drinking shops which exist, it is impossible to make a living without such adulteration. If this is the case, as it undoubtedly is in some localities, why are so many licences granted? It is absurd for two branches of the same Government to act diametrically against each other like this. We do not condone adulteration, but we do condemn the incessant multiplication of such licences.

A correspondent informs us that, having written to the Secretary of the London General Omnibus Company respecting the statements contained in one of our recent issues, he has received a reply denying their correctness. The Secretary encloses "extracts from the rules and regulations printed on the back of a ticket on which the conductor has to make up his daily accounts." One of these rules is as follows:—

> The Conductor is forbidden, on pain of instant dismissal, to pay any fees, gratuities, or monies of any kind to Drivers, Horsekeepers, or any other person in the service of the Company, or to have any money transactions whatever with any except the Collecting and Pay Clerks, but he must pay in to the Company the whole amount of the fares taken throughout the day without any deduction whatever; any deviation from this regulation will constitute a fraud, and be treated as such according to law.

This, of course, is satisfactory so far as it goes; but the existence of a rule is one thing, and its strict observance is another. However, it is with Rev. Freeman Wills, and not with us, that the Company have to reckon, as we merely reproduced some of his plain and categorical assertions. If his statements are not true, as the Secretary now asserts, we presume the Company will adopt our suggestion, and bring an action against their reverend accuser, for libel.

Approbation before death, says an American contemporary, is more important than probation afterward.

Most of our readers will have seen in the daily newspapers full accounts of the calamitous earthquakes last week in South France and Italy. A special correspondent of The Daily Chronicle telegraphed on Wednesday the following description of his experiences on the occasion of the first shock:—

> Half-dressed I rushed down stairs, making for the Place de la Liberté, where I found a terrified and screaming crowd of women and children. Among the crowd also were a number of maskers, still wearing their fancy dresses, worn out with the night's dissipation, and looking hideous and bedraggled in the daylight. Some of them, strangely enough, held the banners which they had gained as prizes in the Battle of Flowers and for balcony decorations. At this moment the church bells rang, and I followed the panic-stricken mob into the little Church of Our Lady of the Vow, erected by the Nice people in gratitude to the Virgin for the escape of Nice from the visitation of cholera. The scene within the church almost baffled description. Women were wailing, strong men praying, and crowds were besieging confessionals, while even within the sacred edifice was to be seen the everlasting Pierrot of last night's masquerade. Being Ash Wednesday the service seemed to have a terribly dramatic interest, as the lines of people walked up to the altar rails to receive the customary sprinkling of ashes and the reminder which accompanies it. During this service the second shock took place, the time being then a quarter past eight. As the tremor of the earth became perceptible the terror depicted on the faces of nearly all the congregation grew into one of agonised fear.

We have received letters from Mr. R. C. Morgan, who is in Rome, dated Friday last, but as the chief centres of disturbance were considerably distant, probably the details of the panic created and the damage caused had not then reached that city.

Sir R. Fowler has the courage of his convictions. He has addressed a letter to Canon Gregory, in reply to an invitation to a meeting in support of the Church House, declining to accept it, as it is an object he is unable to support. In this letter Sir Robert makes the following very sensible and practical remarks:—

> I have always felt that what we require is not costly buildings, but devoted men, who will go among the masses and bring them to a knowledge of the truth. When their labours are blessed churches will be required, but the plainer such edifices are the more likely are they to attract the poor, who think the meanness of their attire a hindrance to their attending public worship. Hence I have always had more satisfaction in contributing to the support of clergymen than to the building of churches. I believe it will be more useful, and it will certainly be more satisfactory to myself, to give towards an institution which seeks to relieve them.

While we may deplore the growth of "Socialistic" doctrines, we must not forget one cause of this grave and menacing danger to society. The war spirit, which has seized the European nations, is taking men from industrial pursuits, making taxes high, and living full of poverty and distress. Men's passions are becoming inflamed, and rancour enkindled. Very timely has been an appeal sent by the Society of Friends to British ministers of religion, inviting them to consider whether they are not too silent about this spirit of war. Timely also has been the protest of John Bright upon the subject. Truly, as he said, "All other questions sink, by the side of this, into comparative insignificance."

An ex-Austrian Cabinet minister computes that the total war force of the four leading Continental Kingdoms approaches 6,000,000 of men, and shows that a European war would be so tremendously costly as to bring universal bankruptcy. If rulers do not pause, a crisis of unheard-of retribution must come.

In an able paper on "Caves," read last week before the Victoria Institute, the Woodwardian Professor of Geology, Cambridge, made a suggestive admission. Dr. Buckland, he remarked, saw in cave-deposits evidence of a universal deluge, and identified these with Noah's Flood. Since Dr. Buckland's time such a view has been contemptuously discarded. Mr. McKenny Hughes, among the very first English geologists, does not adopt this theory, but says, "Buckland's view was, I believe, far more nearly in accordance with facts than the views of those who have argued for the pre-Glacial age of some of these caverns," i.e., more in accordance with facts than the view which has been largely dominating speculative opinion during recent years.

The report of the Oxford House in Bethnal Green says:—

> The true solution of this East-end question is rapidly rivalling the Eastern question in its complicated and momentous issues. For the problem is how to make the masses realise their spiritual and social solidarity with the rest of the capital and of the kingdom; how to revive their sense of citizenship, with its privileges which they have lost, and its responsibilities which they have forgotten.

Such a sentence emphasises the appeal by a party of the London clergy, which we print in another column.

The good news reaches us from Monte Carlo, that the suppression of the gambling establishment there may come to pass by the potent influences of pounds, shillings and pence upon the mind of the directors. Profit is paramount, reports a correspondent of The Times, and the purse-strings are at present kept so tight that so important a matter as the drainage of the place has been allowed to go wrong. There is an evident want of harmony in the management, and it is hinted that by internal dissension, the much to be desired consummation may be reached.

In an editorial note on Ocean Gambling the New York Independent says:—

> The officers of these steamers profess that they have no law to stop this gambling. That is all nonsense. They can make their own rules, and can stop the most of the gambling if they wish to. It ought to be done, and we believe that the first-class line that should abolish the evil would find that it gained in patronage.

In this month's Sword and Trowel, Mr Spurgeon expatiates with great force on the evils of gambling both on sea and on land. As to the former he says (and we commend his weighty words to the attention of the owners of steamers):—

> To cross the ocean has now become an affliction to Christian men. They can scarcely get out of the way of the drink and card-playing. On shore these evils have their own quarters and hours; but on ship-board, in the best ships, they are winked at, and in others they are encouraged. Some men, who frequently cross the ocean, regard the period as one of unbroken play; and it is said that there are beings who frequently make these voyages for the sole sake of the plunder which they obtain by gambling. Think of our great companies tolerating this sort of thing! Owners of floating palaces, they call themselves; but in truth they are promoters of steaming-hells. Let them take note of this.

The great Cunard Company, some of whose officials seem to be the worst offenders in this matter, surely cannot afford to ignore these frequent remonstrances.

No reasonable person will question the propriety of the course which the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company are taking with regard to their servants and the temperance question. It has become known that the engine-driver of their train which lately met with such a terrible accident was under the influence of drink. Their employés are now asked to pledge themselves to abstain while at work in the Company's service. Such a plan might be adopted on English railways without waiting for a catastrophe to hasten it.

The First Commissioner of Works has some regard for a certain portion of the Sabbath day, for which we are duly thankful. The hours devoted to public worship should not, in his opinion, be used for pleasure, but some degree of liberty, he thinks, may be taken with the rest of the day. So he has given permission, after two o'clock on Sundays, for boating on the lakes of the London parks. But we are not satisfied with the infallibility of this official, and we enter our earnest protest against this uncalled-for decision.

> Take every opportunity you can get of being shot, if you wish to get on. Some of course will be shot; those who are not are sure to receive notice, and secure promotion.

We are thankful that Lord Wolseley, who gave this advice the other day to the cadets at Woolwich, speaks so plainly with regard to the profession of the soldier. Christian parents may now thoroughly understand the nature of the work to which many of them are too ready to devote their sons.

But John Bright's opinion about war may not be overlooked, and the wise words he uttered last week upon the wars waged by Britain during the last fifty years deserve to be studied in every English household. He claimed very high authority for his opinions. "Every man," said he, "must make up his own mind about war, and if anyone desires guidance I would recommend to his study a book that says a good deal about it; it is the New Testament."

With regard to the classes of English Society from which the army draws its largest supplies, Mr. Bright made a statement which we would hope is not so true as he believes it is.

> There is no class of men in the country, of equal number, who provide so many sons for the army and navy as the clergy of the Church of England.

Surely he does not mean to imply that the clergy do not study the New Testament.

The conversion of the large brewery concerns into public companies represents certain phases in the drink question which temperance reformers will have to reckon with. The great circle of wealthy shareholders in the higher ranks of society will now be obliged by self-interest to enter the ranks of the enemies of the temperance cause. Like the artificers of Ephesus, they will stand by their craft.

The Municipal authorities of Paris have solved a question which has for some time been exciting sympathy in our own metropolis and elsewhere, in providing public warming places, or shelters, in various quarters of the city. Seven have already been built, and others are in course of erection. Each one is capable of sheltering about five hundred people, one side being appropriated to men, and the other to women. They are open from eight o'clock in the evening till five in the morning, and are attended by one or two policemen, whose duty it is to look after the fires and maintain order. Several large close stoves, heated by coal, are placed in different parts of the hall. No cooking is allowed or food provided, only warmth, shelter and rest. But to those who otherwise would be in the streets the places must constitute an inestimable boon, and the idea is well worthy of adoption on this side of the Channel.

A correspondent, himself a clergyman, sends us the following, and adds:—"Alas, how far off seems the answer to our Lord's petition, 'that they all may be one;' and how different is this from the apostle's spirit, who could say, 'Grace be to all them who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.'"

> In the Lower House of Convocation last week, Canon Hole presented the following gravamen et reformandum:—"That certain priests of the Church of England accept from time to time invitations to preach from those who are not in communion with that Church, in places which have not been consecrated according to its use, and in which its doctrine and its discipline are avowedly contradicted and opposed; but we are warned in the Holy Scriptures to mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which we have learned, and to avoid them; and that all bishops at their consecration, and all priests at their ordination, are solemnly pledged to banish and drive away all such strange doctrine; that in the constitution and canons ecclesiastical, which are asserted to be binding on the clergy, all authors of schism, and maintainers of conventicles, are censured as deserving excommunication: we, the undersigned, while duly acknowledging the charitable motives and intentions of those who accept the invitations referred to, desire to express our conviction that they are not only acting illegally, but are hindering rather than promoting the unity of Christian people."
> Reformandum: "That their lordships the bishops be respectfully requested to take such steps as may be in their power to prohibit and suppress an innovation which is becoming a great scandal in the eyes of many devout Church people, and is detrimental, in consequence, to the spread of true religion."

The British and Foreign Arbitration Association, whose name explains its object, according to a preliminary prospectus is supported by many influential persons in this and other countries. Its founders say:—

> We have been actuated by a strong conviction that the enormous and increasing armaments of Europe place in peril all the highest results of civilisation; that they are fatal equally to the prosperity of nations and to the happiness and well-being of the people, and that they largely increase the danger of war.

If the great European nations would agree to a code of law, to be administered by an international tribunal, for the peaceful settlement of international difficulties and disputes, it would be a triumph indeed for the cause of humanity. We wish the Association the fullest success in its efforts to bring about so desirable a result. All information can be obtained of the Secretary, Palace-chambers, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, S.W.

The address lately given by Sir Henry Acland to the General Medical Council suggests very gratifying reflections. During the fifty years of the Queen's reign the advance of medical science in its care for the individual and for the masses has been unprecedented. Workhouse hospitals have been rearranged; Boards of Health formed; medical officers, and inspectors of nuisances have been located in cities and hamlets; public analysts appointed; hospitals constructed on health conditions; the profession of skilled nurses originated; and medicine made at once more curative and more preventive.

"So far as I know," said Bishop Moule the other day to an assemblage of four hundred members of the Oxford University, "there are no Oxford men in the China mission-field at present." Having laboured for thirty years in China in the service of the Church Missionary Society, the Bishop may be considered an authority upon the subject. We trust the implied rebuke will stir up some Oxford men to imitate the example of "the Cambridge seven."

A very readable sketch of "A Curate's First Year," by Rev. E. C. Dawson, of Edinburgh, appears in The Churchman for March; it is evidently a leaf out of the writer's own experience. His words about preaching to the unlearned villagers are worth the attention of all young preachers, as well as those of maturer years:—

> The curate soon felt that when the audience is a rustic one the sermon-paper is a very iceberg for chillness and opacity. For polish and ornament, whether in building or sermon, the working man and his wife care next to nothing; for light and warmth in both they care much. If a church is not good to hear and see in, they will perceive no beauty in it, though it be a gem of mediæval art or the masterpiece of a Pugin or Gilbert Scott. They will then infinitely prefer the four bare walls of the little Bethel where they can at least see to read their Bibles and hear distinctly what the preacher has to say. It is the same with a sermon. The only kind of preaching which has any attraction for him is that which he can understand. The sermon which can influence him must be clear; it must be simple, for he cannot readily take in more than one idea at the same time; but, above all, it must be direct—it must come all hot from the heart of the preacher if it is to excite any warmth at all in his own labour-dulled heart. Hence the too frequent triumph of the speaker in the barn-like Rehoboth over the studied rhetoric which flows from the fluted pulpit of the parish church.

This article, otherwise excellent, is somewhat marred by unworthy and ungenerous remarks about the Nonconformist church in the parish.

The Prison Commissioners, in their annual Blue-book, call attention to the vast saving of public money which the great falling off in the criminal ranks represents, there having been in 1885 a decrease of 23 per cent. in the number of persons sent into penal servitude, although the number for 1884 had been lower than any previous year. Upon this statement The British Weekly lately based an argument in favour of liberal support being accorded to Mr. George Hatton, upon whose noble work in St. Giles' we have so often commented. Is there any reason, we may justly ask, why, seeing that the work so unselfishly done by Mr. Hatton, Mr. Wheatley, and others, is productive of such benefit to the State, our authorities should not recognise it in the practical way of contributing to the cost?

BATH.—A House of Rest has been opened at 1, Brunswick-place, Bath, for Christian workers of all evangelical denominations who need a few weeks' rest and change. Applications by letter to the hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. E. Lawrence Hamilton, Belle Vue, Beacon-hill, Bath, should give two referees that the applicant is a true believer in, and a consistent follower of, the Lord Jesus, and that he or she has been occupied in some definite work for Christ. Terms: 15s. to 30s. per week. A fund is being started so as to help those who are unable to pay so much as 15s.

A HAPPY GATHERING.

Sir,—Christian friends may take some interest in hearing of a meeting we have had in our house annually for the last four years, and may be inclined to try the same way of giving and receiving pleasure and profit.

It came about in a simple way. I asked my good servants if they would like to invite a few friends to tea. They told me they did not care to have a party where some might wish for other than quiet pleasures, and said that if I would allow them instead to invite a few members of a Mission, in which one of them is specially interested, they would all like it more. This Mission is chiefly worked by men and women who, after their daily toil, go night after night to work among the careless and outcast. We gladly consented; and the account of last week's gathering is a sample of all the rest.

Being all working people they cannot be with us till half-past eight, but between that and nine o'clock thirty-two assembled. When all arrived, having been previously invited by card, they came to the drawing-room, where we and our children received them along with our minister and his wife. After hearty singing and prayer my husband gave them some words of welcome. Our minister spoke shortly, and then asked the friends to give us some details of their work. For nearly an hour we were interested and delighted with simple and touching histories. One told of his work chiefly in speaking on the street. Another of his Sunday-class; a third, who is a baker's man, gave some striking accounts of the ways of usefulness opened to him amongst servants when he hands in the daily bread. A fourth touched us greatly by an account of the restoration of a poor girl to her father and home.

Thus the time fled away most happily, and the power of the Gospel was marvellously shown. Two more hymns, more words of hope and cheer, and prayer closed this part of our evening; then our guests went to the kitchen, where able and willing hands had laid out a supper—I need scarcely say teetotal—for our friends. When this was over they were loth to go, so another meeting was held, and, though I was not present, the accounts given were that it was "even better than upstairs." The prayers offered for us and our children were enough to make us feel that we received more than we gave. One thanked the Lord for "this green spot in their lives." It is from a feeling that many others might so easily open their houses, and give these dear workers a little cheer and sympathy, which is so precious to them, that I give this brief account. One very delightful incident is that, both last year and this, one friend was asked, not a decided Christian, and opportunity was given for a quiet talk. In each case it was blessed, and the two are now rejoicing in the Lord. C.

VIVISECTION.—A memorial to the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons protesting against any further advances in this country in the practice of vivisection is in course of signature. Copies, with sheets ready for signature, may be had of the Secretary of the Anti-Vivisection Society, 1, Victoria-street, London, S.W. All who desire that the horrible deeds of cruelty which disgrace the laboratories of the Continent should not be permitted in our land, ought to join in this protest.

MR. D. C. JOSEPH, who has for twenty-nine years laboured as a missionary to the Jews in the East of London, shortly intends leaving for Palestine. On the 16th inst. he conducted two meetings in Leicester, one in Melbourne Hall, the other, a drawing-room meeting, at Roseneath, at which he gave a very interesting account of his late visit to Jerusalem, and also of the proposed mission to his brethren in that city. He purposes building a mission hall in Jerusalem, and spending the remainder of his life working there among Jewish refugees. A valedictory service will be held at the Hebrew Christian House of Industry, 394, Hackney-road, E., on Friday afternoon, March 18, when all friends will be cordially welcomed.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

If special seasons of revival are to be greatly blessed there must be much work before, and much work after the meetings. In the coldest seasons when frost and snow have bound up and covered the earth, the prudent farmer is engaged in selecting his seed-corn; his machinery and farm implements are looked over and put in order, and everything is gotten in readiness for the first soft day in spring that announces the frost out of the ground and ready for the plough. The intensely active work is confined to a few months or weeks of the year; but then, the whole year beside is spent either in preparation for the harvest, or in garnering and thrashing it.

God's husbandry needs similar forethought and careful preparation. There are few churches that are ready for special evangelistic services when they are appointed and begun; the result is, that the fruit is meagre or weakly come by, just as a harvest hastily planted and poorly cultivated (because the farmer was not ready and had to do things in a hurry) is never a good harvest. It is as apparent in churches as it is in the farms of two farmers where the farm of one man betokens what we call "careful farming," while that of the other is characterised by "careless farming." This is our greatest mistake: lack of careful, forehanded, all-the-year-round preparation for special efforts.—New York Independent.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Promise for March 10 (Ezek. xxxvi. 37):—"Thus saith the Lord God: For this, moreover, will I be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock."

TO BE SUCCESSFUL AS A MISSIONARY, says Dr. Ashmore, himself an experienced worker in the foreign field, a man must have positive convictions, and those convictions he must preach with postiveness. A weak tendon, which people cannot see, will produce a halting gait, which they can see.

COSTERMONGERS' MISSION.—For three consecutive Sunday evenings at six o'clock, a free substantial tea has been given to the street hawkers (men and women) of the City and others, at the Costermongers' Mission Room, Vinegar Ground, City-road, and will be continued should funds permit; the Gospel is also preached to these hitherto neglected ones. The services are conducted by various Christian friends. Good results have already followed.

IRISH DISTRESS.—It is well known that many ladies and others once in comfortable circumstances have been involved in the poverty and misery resulting from the prolonged crisis in Ireland, and that not a few are in the greatest need. An effort on their behalf is to be made, under distinguished patronage, on Tuesday and Wednesday next, when a sale of work made by distressed Irish ladies will be held in the Queen's Gate Hall (close to South Kensington Station). Contributions of work and flowers (the latter to be sent to the hall on days of sale) will be thankfully received by Miss Phillips, 72, Mildmay Park, N.

INTOXICANTS IN WORKHOUSES.—A paper read recently by Dr. Norman Kerr at a meeting of the British Medical Temperance Association shows that there has of late years been a remarkable and gratifying decrease in the use of intoxicants in workhouses, amounting in fact to more than 25 per cent. during the last four years, and of more than 45 per cent. during the last fifteen years. The annual expenditure in some cases is summed up in pence! That the sum total of £44,820 for 1885 might be very considerably reduced is, however, clear from the fact that, whereas no intoxicating liquor was used at Lambeth, no less than £687 was spent on the same at St. Pancras.

DUBLIN PRISON-GATE MISSION.—This Mission was established eleven years ago, and in that time has aided no less than 6000 persons. Commenced in a little ruinous dwelling, the Mission buildings will now accommodate some seventy inmates, and a considerable industry is carried on—laundry work and weaving carpets providing employment for many. The last two years have been years of special trial, many of the old supporters having been removed by death. An extension of premises is now urgently needed in order to meet the necessities of the case, and this is the more important, as these industries are only a means to an end, and this the rescuing of the fallen from paths of sin and want and wretchedness. The treasurer is Mr. Wm. Hayes, 12, Grafton-street.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY.

Sir,—Your readers will be interested in the accompanying note written by Mrs. Boyce, of Bordighera, twenty-four hours after the earthquake. Above forty children and the whole staff of her Asilo must be rendered homeless at least for a time; and extensive repairs will evidently be needful at the Asilo as well as at her own house. I feel sure that many will wish practically to express their sympathy with her who is so highly esteemed for her noble work for Italy. The hon. sec. of her committee in England is Miss Kennedy, 4, Onslow-crescent, South Kensington.—Yours faithfully, C.

[EXTRACT.]

February 24, 1887. 7.15 a.m.—The Lord has mercifully preserved us in the midst of a great danger. You will have seen in the newspapers the account of the terrible earthquake. We fled out of the house at 6.20 yesterday morning. The house is much damaged, and it will not be safe to sleep there at present. We spent the night which has just passed (oh, how long it seemed!) in the little lodge at the Asilo. During the night their were several more shocks, but very slight ones on the whole. What cause we have for thankfulness, when we think of some who are houseless, and that poor old Aporio and his eldest son are buried under the ruins of their house, which is a complete wreck. They have dug out the body of the poor old man, but the son is still there. The carbonieri stopped the digging. It was too dangerous for the living, and there was no hope for him. You will think of us in your prayers and in your praises too! All are well at the Asilo, but the house is too much damaged to be slept in.

"BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS."—Rev. J. S. Almy, Baptist minister, writing from Brixham, says that the trawling fleet will shortly be leaving for the Irish and North Seas. For years he has been able, by the kind help of our readers and others, to place on board each vessel a packet of Christian literature. He is anxious to do the same this year. His address is Vectis Villa, Brixham, Devon.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following missions:—Rev. F. C. Spurr, at Black Torrington, Devon, for a week, commencing March 7; for blessing on a united mission of Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., Harrogate, by Mr. W. Spencer Walton, March 2 to 14; for blessing on the Young People's Service Mission, Carr-street, Ipswich, during the month of March, conducted by Mr. E. W. Gilbert.——For blessing on the parish of Hillsborough, Sheffield.——Praise for much blessing in answer to prayer, on meetings held in Banbury, during Y.W.C.A. "Week of Prayer."

BROCKENHURST, HAMPSHIRE.—This is one of those neglected villages, whose condition is awakening anxiety at the present time. The prevailing deadness as to spiritual things is accentuated by the presence of four public-houses close to one another, though the village is quite a small one. A Sunday-school is held here, the number attending which has increased lately from eighty to one hundred and thirty. For this better accommodation is urgently needed, and it is proposed to put up in the garden adjoining an iron room. Towards the cost of this, £60, the poor people who attend the chapel have contributed £30, and Mr. John Morley had promised £10.

HOW TO PREVENT STRIKES.—Mr. N. O. Nelson, a prominent manufacturer of St. Louis, Mo., who has had nearly a year's experience in profit-sharing with his men, expresses the opinion that it is decidedly the best plan for the prevention of strikes, and for the maintenance of good feeling between employer and employed. Last March he began profit-sharing in the factory of the Nelson Manufacturing Company, where between fifty and one hundred men are employed. By the agreement with the men, they were to work fifty-five hours per week, receiving full pay, and at the end of the year, after allowing seven per cent. on the capital invested, and paying himself a salary for his own services, the remainder of the profits was to be divided equally upon the total amount of wages paid and capital employed. This programme has been faithfully carried out, and recently a dividend on salaries of five per cent. was declared.

The Book World.

Memoir of Robert Carr. By J. F. Howard. 2s. Baptist Missionary Society, 19, Furnival-street. We have here the record of a life of singular strength and beauty. These characteristics were manifest in early years, and attained a rich development in later life. Whether in England, which he left when thirty years of age, or in India, where he spent the last thirty years of his life, Robert Carr was earnest, conscientious, full of reverence for God, and of zeal for the salvation of souls. This brief sketch of one who did so much in the cause of true religion and of temperance in India cannot but be useful.

The Homilist. Edited by Revs. David Thomas, D.D., and J. J. S. Bird, B.A. Vol. lvii. 7s. 6d. Houlston & Sons. Few magazines reach, in these days of keen competition, the length of a fifty-seventh volume. The fact that "The Homilist" has done so says much for the ability with which it has been conducted, and the important service it must have rendered in the course of its long career. We are glad to note that many of the features which made it useful in the past still survive. The senior editor is a leading contributor, and his expositions flash light on hidden meanings in texts. The homiletical hints are numerous; the illustrations, as a rule, really illustrate; and the germs of thought open up new lines of thinking.

The Fulness of Redeeming Love. By Forbes E. Winslow, M.A. Skeffington & Son. Under this beautiful title Mr. Winslow gives us a beautiful book. The headings of the three discourses, "A Full Salvation," "A Free Salvation," "A Present Salvation," prepare the reader for a rich feast of Gospel dainties, and none will be disappointed. In simple, yet well-chosen, language God's wonderful glad tidings are proclaimed in the sinner's ear. The fears and doubts that trouble the seeker are lovingly, but boldly dispelled by clear Gospel promises. With true pastoral wisdom Mr. Winslow puts himself in the anxious sinner's place, and tells how all his own fears were quieted, his own burdens loosed, his own longings satisfied by the very words of God he so sweetly re-echoes. We believe the Holy Spirit will greatly bless to many an empty sinner "the fulness of redeeming love."

AMERICAN PERIODICALS.

Dr. Pentecost's Words and Weapons for Christian Workers is an armoury in which soldiers of Christ can find weapons of offence and defence. Its "Bible Studies" are specially valuable.—The Watchword is a monthly magazine devoted strictly to the word and work of the Gospel. The fact that it is edited by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, will be to our readers a guarantee of its worth—The Brooklyn Magazine must be a welcome visitor at many firesides on the other side of the Atlantic. It has something to interest both old and young.—The Laws of Life is a family health journal, in which medical advice is given to parents. Some of its hints, if carried out, would make homes happy as well as healthy; the two, in spite of the popular proverb, do not always go together.

God's way of Holiness. By Mr. Edward Dennett. G. Morrish. 3d. This will prove an admirable corrective to false views on the subject of holiness. The author ably and exhaustively reviews the Scriptures bearing on the subject.

The Bag, the Bottle, and the Book. By Rev. John Dunlop. 2d. John Snow & Co. With a brief description of these figures, drawn from the customs of the people, the author shews how they illustrate God's dealings with his people.

The Shadow of a Coming Danger. 6d. per dozen. 337, Strand. In this envelope booklet Lady Jane Ellice, in view of the approaching Jubilee celebrations, and the danger lest strong drink should mar its happiness, earnestly pleads for prayer and effort that its flow may be restrained, and its influence checked; that, instead of rioting and miscalled gaiety, there may be sober joy, and a sanctified thankfulness.

The "Queen's Health." By George W. M'Cree. 2d. 337, Strand. This is another voice raised in earnest protest against the custom, more honoured in the breach than in the observance, of drinking to the "Queen's Health," and against lavish expenditure on strong drink.

Words from the Waves. 6d. John Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row. Under this title we have a new edition of the delightful memoir of Clement L. Layton. Dedicated to God from his birth, he was early imbued with the spirit of Christ, this being manifest in his life and conversation. Of this he gave incontestable testimony in his last moments, when, having spent the afternoon in reading the Bible on a rock exposed at low tide, and, retreat being suddenly cut off, he was drowned, he wrote on the fly-leaf, "In danger I now declare that I do trust in Jesus as my own Saviour."

The Dark Homes of East London. By Rev. W. Evans Hurndall. We have here a glance at some of the causes that make thousands of homes so dark and miserable, and at the same time an account of earnest and successful efforts to bring light and cheer and comfort to them. Copies from the author, 16, College Grove, Bow, E.

The Westminster Teacher. 2½d. Presbyterian Publications Committee, 18, Paternoster-row. There is plenty of value in this monthly, containing thirty-two pages of closely printed matter. The articles are full of teaching, and the international lessons exhibit much depth of thought and spiritual insight.

The March number of The Quiver contains a sermon preached on the accession of Queen Victoria, by the late William Jay, of Bath, a noted preacher of his generation. This is the first of a series of hitherto unpublished sermons by Mr. Jay that has fallen into the editor's hands, and will appear in the course of the Jubilee year.

The Romish Doctrine of Intention. 3d. Twenty Contrasts Between the Mass and the Lord's Supper. 1d. The True Church. 1d. These three pamphlets, published by John Kensit, dealing with different doctrines of the Romish Church, should be effective helps in opening the eyes of people to the absurdity of the pretensions put forward by this corrupt and persecuting Church.

The Power of the Word. 1d. Partridge & Co. In this missionary sermon, by Dr. Gregg, Bishop of Cork, there is a comparison between the rapid spread of the Gospel when "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word," and our own time. The preacher shows that the setting forth of Christ—of the story of his life and death and resurrection—was the secret of success then, and that, unless there is this, there cannot be success now.

Incidents in the Life of Abraham. 3d. By Rev. David Davies. Outline Lessons on Genesis (3d.), and A Brief Review of the Life of Abraham (3d.), by Annie B. The Book Society. These handbooks, the first and last for senior and junior scholars, and the second for teachers, will be very helpful in preparing for the Sunday-school examination on March 25. In the first especially there is much that is of interest, and valuable in relation to the call of Abraham and his wanderings, which are further explained by a map.

Parish Registers in England. By R. E. C. Waters. 5s. Longmans, Green & Co. The extracts from old parish registers here given are most interesting, and let in a flood of light upon the habits and customs of the people of the land in the sixteenth century and onwards. Many illustrations are also to be found of the horrible barbarities practised in the name of religion. These, as well as the accompanying notes and suggestions as to the manner in which such old records may be best preserved, are most valuable.

Bread-street and Beer-street. A very effective poster with this title has been issued. On the one hand is represented a street in which prosperity and happiness reign. The reverse presents a terrible contrast. Alongside the public-house are the pawnshop, the workhouse, the gaol, and the fruits of strong drink are seen in the groups of men, women, and ragged children in the street, some fighting and requiring the intervention of the running policeman. The significant question, "Where do you spend your money?" runs along the bottom. The poster may be had at The Joyful News Book Depôt, 152, Drake-street, Rochdale.

Y.W.C.A. Monthly Journal. This is a new two-penny journal, intended chiefly for Y.W C.A. secretaries and workers. Added to a handsome appearance, there is much valuable and helpful information in the first issue, in regard to the work. Details are furnished as to the business agency, the employment agency, the branch for scattered members, the restaurant branch, the total abstinence work, &c.; the development of the work in Scotland and Ireland; and a report is furnished of the recent conference at Brighton. The new paper has certainly made a good beginning, and we do not see why its circulation should be confined to secretaries and workers. The office of the paper is 316, Regent-street, W.

A HOUSE OF REST.—At 2, Avenue-terrace, Hythe, Kent, Mrs. Dyer purposes to open, at Easter, a new House of Rest for Christian workers. The situation is pretty and healthy, and close to the sea. Prayer, sympathy, and help are asked for this humble effort to provide, at moderate cost, a temporary home for open-air preachers and their wives, and other Christian workers. For particulars apply to Mrs. Dyer as above.

YOUNG MEN AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The monthly meeting of the Young Men's Missionary Society at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Friday evening last, was well calculated to stimulate those who have the grand work of preaching the Gospel amongst the heathen, on their hearts. Mr. A. J. Malcolm and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson (two members of the deputation from the London Missionary Society) appealed earnestly to young men to take up the cause of missions. Rev. Charles Phillips wrought the meeting to a fine glow by his description of the work in the Samoan Islands. Of the 27,000 inhabitants 7000 are Church members, and there are at present 3000 candidates for membership. Two hundred native pastors minister to the Church, and asking for money or collections is unknown; the people are eager to give.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE McALL MISSION.—The correspondent of The Record states that a gentleman has undertaken to pay the cost of the Corsica Mission.

THE MORMONS.—The anti-Polygamy Bill has been passed by Congress. It contains stringent provisions to stop polygamy among the Mormons.

PARIS, says the correspondent of a daily paper, is honeycombed with clubs nearly all of which are gambling hells of a more or less clandestine nature.

DR. PHILLIPS BROOKS has been conducting Sunday evening services in the famous Faneuil Hall, Boston, for the non-church-going masses of the North-end of the city.

HAMBURG TRACT SOCIETY.—During the past year nearly two and a half million tracts were sold, at less than cost price, and more than half a million given away by colporteurs.

CANNES.—The mission work amongst coachmen and cabmen at Cannes, initiated by Baron Turckheim, has celebrated its anniversary, the Baron presiding. A similar work is carried on at Marseilles, Roubaix, and Lyons.

MOROCCO.—Mr. G. F. Packer, late of Y.M.C.A., Peterborough, has gone to Tangier, whence he desires to visit some interior towns, with a view to settling in Morocco for missionary work, at the same time supporting himself by his profession as an architect.

REVIVALS.—Some Christians at Lausanne interested in the much controverted question of religious revivals, have decided to offer a prize of 500 francs for the best practical and scientific essay on "Revivals in French-speaking Countries." Manuscripts to be sent in, before Dec. 31, 1887, to Pastor A. Vautier, Valleyres-sous-Rances, Vaud, Suisse.

M. HENRI MONOD, brother of MM. Theodore and Gustave Monod, has received the appointment of Director of Public Assistance to the French Home Secretary, in the place of M. Cazelleo. It is significant that this post, which carries with it the control of the public hospitals, casual wards, and other works of State charity in the French capital, should be bestowed upon an ardent adherent of the Evangelical faith.

A VOICE FROM ITALY.—This little periodical of the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy reports many facts which show that true religion is making a steady advance amongst the people. Signor Capellini's work amongst the soldiers in Rome has been very fruitful. In Florence, the Medical Mission is the centre of a number of beneficent agencies. From various other parts of Italy there are encouraging accounts. The office of the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy is at 118, Pall-mall, S.W.

BROOKLYN DEACONESSES.—The work of the Deaconesses connected with the Deaconess House in Brooklyn is literally to do the things spoken of by our Lord: Feed the hungry, clothe the poor, visit the sick and those in prison; beside the especial care and instruction of the neglected children of the poor. We could fill pages with thrilling accounts of the Deaconess work. How few of the rich and well-to-do Christians, men and women, who have read these pages, have ever, or seldom, visited the bedside of the sick, the homes of the squalid poor, the prison cells of the vicious and drunkard, as a matter of service to Christ.—Words and Weapons.

CHINA.—The Romish Church has now in China twenty-five bishops, of whom seventeen are French, twelve Spanish, three Belgian, and one Dutch, with 565 foreign and 544 native priests. The number of converts is reckoned at half a million. The Evangelical Church, represented by thirty missionary societies, has 200 foreign missionaries and 100 native pastors, its converts being about 60,000. In addition there are sixteen hospitals and twenty-four dispensaries, under the direction of medical missionaries. It is only about forty years ago that Protestant missionaries were authorised to preach the Gospel in the Empire, while the Romish priests have been established there many centuries.—Témoin de la Vérité.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—Mrs. Birt is preparing a band of fifty boys to sail next Thursday, March 3, for Canada. She will be glad of the prayers of our readers for their safe voyage, and guidance in settling them into their new homes in Canada. She has a band of girls also preparing for Canada later in the spring.

CROYDON Y.M.C.A.—The annual meeting of this Association, held last week, was of a very enthusiastic character. The report referred especially to evangelistic services held in the tent in the grounds, and to the blessing which had resulted therefrom. An evangelistic mission conducted by members in the Gloucester--road have also been full of encouragement, and the services in Gordon Hall, Ashburton-road, continue to be full of interest. Bible-class and other work has been very successfully carried on. Revs. Burman Cassin and A. N. Mackray addressed the meeting. The latter, referring to the "Amplius" which Michael Angelo wrote underneath a figure on the canvas of a brother painter, said there was no "Amplius" for young men out of Christ, but rather deterioration, shrinkage, starving, and the husks of the swine. Mr. J. P. King said the Association was taking young men off the streets, and engaging them in Christian work.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 6.—PSALM XXIX.

The point of contact with the last Psalm appears in the subject of this one being, "the voice of the Lord," which the Psalmist had prayed to hear, saying, "be not silent to me," lifting up his hands towards his "holy oracle," or place where God speaks to his people. God's voice is now heard, and its majesty and grandeur is described in language taken from the figure of a thunderstorm, which, setting in from the sea (ver. 3), sweeps over the whole land of Israel from Lebanon (ver. 5) to the wilderness of Kadesh.

From the Psalm being appointed for the day of Pentecost, it would appear that Jewish tradition connects it with the giving of the law, which that day commemorates, and, as the law was given amidst "thunderings and lightnings," the connection is obvious. When God first speaks to a soul, it is generally by recalling "the voice of words; which they that heard intreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more" (Heb. xii. 19). For "by the law is the knowledge of sin" (Rom. iii. 20), "I had not known sin but by the law" (Rom. vii. 7). But when the storm-clouds have passed, when "the rain is over and gone," from out of the throne on which "the Lord sitteth King for ever" (ver. 10), comes forth the still small voice of Gospel grace with which the Psalm closes—"The Lord will bless his people with peace."

2.—Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.—The word for "beauty" is thought to be an allusion to the priestly garments, or rather to the "adornment of holiness" of which they were typical.

7.—The voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire.—Better in R.V. margin: "Heweth out flames of fire." The allusion is to rapidity of the lightning flash.

MONDAY, MARCH 7.—PSALM XXX.

"The occasion for which the Psalm was written is announced in the title: 'A Psalm and Song at the dedication of the house of David." The house is clearly the house of God, the Temple; and the title indicates that the Psalm was sung at the dedication by David of the site of the future Temple, as recorded in 2 Sam. xxiv., 1 Chron. xxi."—Hengstenberg.

2.—Thou hast healed me.—This seems to imply that David himself had been struck down by the plague, and it is not impossible that it may have been so, as he expressly prayed, "Let thine hand, I pray Thee, be against me" (2 Sam. xxiv. 17); but, if so, in answer to prayer, he was quickly raised, and this may be the personal deliverance celebrated in the Psalm. But the language may imply no more than that, as a king, he identifies himself with his subjects, and intercedes for Israel as representing them. He who could say "These sheep, what have they done?"—"even I it is that have sinned" might well take the cessation of the plague as an answer and deliverance to him personally.

6.—In my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.—This would describe the pride of heart which led him to number Israel.

11.—Thou hast put off my sackcloth.—Compare 1 Chron. xxi. 16, "Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces."

TUESDAY, MARCH 8.—PSALM XXXI.

This Psalm seems more the utterance of Christ mystical (i.e., the Head and the members) than of Christ personal (i.e., the Head alone). It is true the fifth verse was the dying utterance of the Lord Jesus; but, as Kay well points out, it has been the dying utterance also of a long list of well-know Christians from Polycarp to Huss, Luther, and Melancthon, "representing how many millions of unrecorded cases!" From the tenth to the fourteenth verse, it strongly resembles other distinctly Messianic Psalms, but not so that the language is inapplicable to those who walk "even as He walked." It is best to regard it as the language of the Head, so far as union with his members involved Him in trouble and misery for their sakes; and also as the language of the members, so far as union with Him gives them firm ground for the language of confidence and hope with which the Psalm closes.

5.—Thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth.—These words have a peculiar interest, following, as they do, the last words of the Lord Jesus on the cross. They are anticipative of the Resurrection, that forcible deliverance of which this verb "to redeem" is often used (Deut. xxxi. 8; 2 Sam. vii. 23; Hosea xiii. 14). The tense of the verb does not necessarily refer to a past action. Professor T. K. Cheyne renders it "Thou settest me free, Jehovah, Thou God of truth."

13.—For I have heard the slander of many.—This is quoted by Jeremiah (xx. 10, 11) under circumstances which throw light upon the meaning of the context. As applied to Christ, it is important to know why He was "a fear to his acquaintance," so that "they that did see Him without fled from Him." Jer. xx. 8 explains the cause, and Christians who follow Christ find that, in proportion as they are faithful in making known his word, a somewhat like experience will be theirs.

21.—In a strong city.—See Is. xxvi. 1. The utter loneliness of the sufferer (in verses 11, 12) is now changed for citizenship of the city of God.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9.—PSALM XXXII.

The mention of "the strong city" in the closing part of the last Psalm suggests (as in Rev. xxi. 27, and xxii. 14) that the qualification for admission should be considered. The latter text is now rightly read in R.V., according to the most ancient authorities, "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may…enter in through the gates into the city." This blessedness, and the way of attaining it, form the subject of this Psalm.

1.—Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, &c.—The three words used here for sin, which is forgiven, covered, not imputed, are first, "transgression," the Hebrew word for which presents rather the positive aspect of sin, "rebellion." The second, the negative, "missing the mark," and the third, the legal aspect of both, "guilt." These are met in God's salvation by being borne (sacrifical aspect), "covered" (suggestive of clothing), and "not imputed" (judicial aspect). This last privilege, as revealed in the Gospel (Rom. iv. 11), becomes more than the negative non-imputation of sin, "righteousness is imputed to them also." See Rom. iv. 11, v. 2.

3.—My roaring.—Better rendered, "my groaning," as the human cry is meant.

5.—Mine iniquity have I not hid.—It is the same word rendered "cover" in ver. 1. An old writer says, "Uncover your sins to God, that He may cover them."

6.—Everyone that is godly.—Literally "that receives mercy." In a time when Thou mayest be found.—Literally, as in margin, "in a time of finding." See Isa. lv. 6, and 2 Cor. vi. 2. In the floods of great waters.—Ever since the Deluge, floods of waters have been the type of coming judgment. This the believer has passed through in Christ. Hence the meaning of baptism (Rom. vi. 3, &c.).

8.—I will guide thee with mine eye.—Literally, "I will give counsel; mine eye is upon thee." So nearly R.V. The thought is not so much of looking to the Lord's eye for guidance, as of taking the counsel which He gives, knowing that his eye is upon us, and therefore He can rightly advise.

9.—Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, &c.—The latter part of this verse is better rendered in R.V., "Whose trappings must be bit and bridle to hold them in, else they will not come near unto thee." The point of the exhortation is, Draw near to God without his having to use bit and bridle to compel you to do so.

THURSDAY, MARCH 10.—PSALM XXXIII.

If there is blessedness (or happiness) in sin forgiven, there is joy and rejoicing in righteousness imputed; and, as this blessing rests upon the Word of the Lord, which the believer credits (as Abraham had done of old. See Rom. iv. 18, "according to that which was spoken"), so this Psalm calls on believers to rejoice, especially in "the Word of the Lord" (4, 6), and in the security of his promise ("He spake, and it was done," ver. 9). The Psalm closes (20—22) with the contemplation of the name under which God revealed Himself to Abraham (Gen. xv. 1): "I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward."

4.—All his works are done in truth.—Better as in R.V., "In faithfulness," i.e., faithfulness to his Word. What his Word speaks, his work does. "What He had promised, He was able also to perform" (Rom. iv. 21).

10.—Bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought.—"Of the nations," R.V. "The nations" are the Gentiles, as contrasted with the Israel of God, "the nation whose God is the Lord" (ver. 12). The nation of Matt. xxi. 43.

20.—He is our help and our shield.—The blessing of Abraham (Gen. xv. 1).

21.—According as we hope in Thee.—"Who against hope believed in hope…according to that which was spoken" (Rom. iv. 18).

FRIDAY, MARCH 11.—PSALM XXXIV.

In 1 Sam. xxi. 10—15 will be found the circumstances referred to in the title, which formed the occasion of the writing of this Psalm. "The 56th Psalm also refers to the same occasion: there we have the prayer which David addressed to God in his extremity, and here his thanksgiving for deliverance."—Hengstenberg.

5.—They looked unto Him and were lightened.—"His own personal experience is generalised into an experimental truth expressed in a historical form, 'they look unto Him,' &c., i.e., 'whosoever looketh unto Him is lightened.'"

6.—This poor man cried, &c.—He means himself.

8.—O taste and see that the Lord is good.—Quoted, in 1 Pet. ii. 3, as applicable to personal appropriation of Gospel salvation. This Psalm was a favourite one of the Apostle Peter. He quotes five verses further on (12—16) in 1 Pet. iii. 10.

17.—The righteous cry.—There is no word for "righteous" in the Hebrew, and it is a mistake to insert it, even in italics. It should be "They cry unto Him," i.e., whosoever crieth unto Him (as in ver. 5). This is better than to connect it with "them that do evil" of the previous verse, as some suggest. It may, however, have been purposely put next the previous verse to show that even the evildoers are not excluded from the hope of salvation involved in the promise to those that cry "out of a broken and contrite spirit," as described in ver. 18. "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

21.—Shall be desolate.—Better in R.V., "shall be condemned."

SATURDAY, MARCH 12.—PSALM XXXV.

A special occasion for this Psalm is suggested by Hengstenberg in the declaration of David to Saul (1 Sam. xxiv. 15). "The Lord, therefore, be Judge, and judge between me and thee, and see and plead my cause, and deliver me out of thine hand." But he adds, "David speaks in the person of the righteous, and the truly Righteous One appropriates this Psalm to Himself (John xv. 25), an application which led many of the older expositors to give it an exclusive Messianic exposition." Whatever may have been the occasion of the Psalm, it is best to lose sight of David, and see here Christ only.

17.—Rescue my soul from their destructions, my darling from the lions ("my only one," marg.)—This throws a flood of light upon the previous imprecations, from ver. 4 onwards, which have been a difficulty to expositors. Christ here speaks of his Church, "my only one" (see Ps. xxii. 20), as her with whom his soul was bound up. Those that persecute Him are those that persecute her, and seek her destruction. Well may He pray that God would confound their plots, and deliver the people whose salvation depends upon Him.

18.—I will give Thee thanks in the great congregation.—The parallelism with Ps. xxii. 22, where the "darling," or "only one," had been just spoken of (ver. 20) is striking.

19.—That hate me without a cause.—Our Lord applies these words, not only to his personal enemies, but also to those (John xv. 25) who, after his departure, would persecute his people, in fact, to the world as such (see John xv. 18).

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN. THE JUBILEE YEAR, and further efforts to SAVE FRIENDLESS GIRLS.

THE NEW PREVENTIVE HOME.—As soon as the Architect declared the building fit for occupation, it was at once furnished for 50 Inmates, and more than thirty Young Friendless Virtuous Girls are already housed in it.

The importance of the Work to be carried on in this Home cannot be over-estimated.

It is Christian Mercy which prompts the reclamation of the Fallen, but it is infinitely MORE IMPORTANT TO RESCUE FRIENDLESS YOUNG GIRLS when in moral danger. In illustration of the urgent need of such work the following are the three first registered cases:—

Case I.—A girl whose Father was a Convict, and who was deserted by her Mother in a very heartless manner.

Case II.—Father was a Police Sergeant: received fatal injuries in the discharge of his duty: Mother obliged to break up the home and go to Service.

Case III.—Mother died some years ago: Father such an infamous character that it was found absolutely necessary to remove his three daughters out of his influence.

Among those in the Home are many rescued from such surroundings that had they been left, humanly speaking, demoralisation and destruction would inevitably have followed.

The definite objects sought in all the Homes are:—

1st. Christian Instruction, and Spiritual Conversion.
2nd. Industrial Training to fit Girls for Domestic Service.

OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE.

Since 1867 more than Thirteen Thousand poor Young Women and Girls have been sheltered. Large numbers have been saved for time and eternity.

The kind-hearted City Merchant who promoted the formation of this Refuge by his gift of £100, has long since passed away, but the Lord has raised up other friends and helpers, who have sustained the work, and during the present auspicious year an important extension of this branch is anticipated.

£500 towards the Amount Required has been already provided, and the READERS of THE CHRISTIAN are invited to subscribe for the accomplishment of this object.

Donations to aid the above objects, or current expenses of this growing work (Daily £12 10s.), will be thankfully received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, "The Christian" Office, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.; or 200, Euston Road, London. EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

RESCUE ALL-NIGHT WORK.

This is the third year that we have opened for a Night Shelter our Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, for destitute and homeless men; with an average picked up from the streets of from 100 to 150 each night, when open. The men were given a good breakfast, and a religious service held in the morning, when they have been faithfully dealt with. Work has been secured for some, and a great deal of other help given in deserving cases.

Besides this, lodgings for destitute women and children. Bread and tea tickets are given to several every week, to meet the terrible distress of this severe season.

To sustain this heavy work, besides the general expenses, help is urgently needed, and asked for. Donations in money or articles suitable for relief, will be gratefully received by the Secretary, as under. The Editor of The Christian will also receive donations.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

John Kirk, Secretary.

- THE LABOURER CALLED ASIDE.
- THE LABOURER IN THE SUNSET OF HIS SHORT DAY.
- APPENDIX.

"In 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' Dr. A. Bonar finds a theme almost as congenial to his pen as Robert Murray McCheyne. Glasgow, the theatre of much evangelistic effort of the best kind, has known no more devoted or successful labourer among her lowliest than the subject of this memoir. A greater testimony to the worth of this ardent young spirit than Mr. Moody's friendship and commendation is the fact that no fewer than 30,000 people lined the streets on the day of his funeral, while the procession alone numbered 6,000. The memoir is in every way an inspiration to the love of man and the service of God."
Nonconformist and Independent, Feb. 3, 1887.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a touching tribute to one who filled up a short life with bright and blessed service. The volume is entitled, 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. A rich encouragement this to the 'elders of the church' to use their office well! Who shall tell how many James Scotts are just ripe for such influence as theirs?"—British Messenger.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of LONG-STANDING ASTHMA —Mr. W. JOHNSON, now of PINSWELL, COLESBOURN, Cheltenham.

This patient, then residing in South Wales, wrote me particulars of his case. From four years old he had suffered from Cough, following on Inflammation of the Lungs. After thirty years of age, the Cough got worse every year, till he could scarcely walk for the difficulty of breathing and pains in the left side. These became constant; there was also blood brought up frequently in the morning. For two years he had been gradually losing flesh.

In three months after commencing my treatment he writes:—"I am like another man. I can walk with comparative ease." In six months he was fairly well.

Referring to his case in a recent letter (January), he says:—"I have left South Wales some time. I should like to testify to the wonderful effect your medicine had upon me. By the time I had taken the second bottle, I could walk up these Welsh hills as well as most people and since then I have not been laid aside a single day I have read a good deal that has been written on behal of your medicine, but not one-half has been written tha it deserves. My friend of whom I wrote you last (thi man was fast going into a decline) is still improving The other friend of mine is also improving wonderfull under your treatment."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, a Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS
NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM,
AUTHOR OF
"Christ our Light," "The Highway of Holiness," etc., etc.

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural."
The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel, and will do anyone good who reads it."
Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny book."—Penuel.

REBECCA JARRETT.
By JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

Superior Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.
☞ Special Cheap Edition, 1d.

A LIBERAL ALLOWANCE ON QUANTITIES FOR DISTRIBUTION.

A Few of the Opinions of the Press.

"With all the power of a devoted heart and a practised pen Mrs. Josephine Butler pleads for a just judgment on behalf of Rebecca Jarrett; every one should procure a copy of her sketch of the life of this poor woman."—Sentinel.

"Much light is thrown upon the past life and character of Rebecca Jarrett, and it must call forth the sympathy of all who read it for the one now undergoing punishment. The writer, in a most earnest and devoted manner, lays bare many incidents of Jarrett's history. On the one side we have her early and sinful associations. On the other hand her new life and religious earnestness. The finger of scorn will not be so ready to point at this weak woman after a perusal of Mrs. Butler's well-timed vindication of the latest phase of her life's character and work."
Erith Times.

"The interest centres in the explanation given by the Author of the conduct of Jarrett while under cross-examination. . . . Jarrett appears to have been a woman of deep affection, who cheerfully performed revolting offices in rescue work. . . . Mrs. Butler has loyally stood by her humble helpmate; and for that she deserves the thanks of every honest man and woman."
Hastings and St. Leonard's News.

"In this pamphlet Mrs. Butler defends Rebecca Jarrett in vigorous terms from the cruel aspersions cast upon her during the late trial. . . . Truly Mrs. Butler's defence is a heart-stirring one, and places the poor woman in a much more favourable light than she is generally regarded. . . . Those who peruse this story will find it of great and pitiful interest."

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The number of children under the care of the Church Central Society for Providing Homes for Waifs and Strays is now 682.

Church Army missions have been recently undertaken at Rochdale, Bedford, Eastbourne, Bradford, Birkenhead, Cheetham, Eastnor, Loughton, and other places.

Rev. E. W. Moore, incumbent of Brunswick Chapel, Marylebone, has been appointed incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, vacant by the death of Rev. Clarmont Skrine.

The Ven. George Francis Popham Blyth, late Archdeacon of Rangoon, has been appointed to the vacant Bishopric in Jerusalem and the East. His jurisdiction will extend over Egypt, Baghdad, Syria, and Cyprus.

At the suggestion of Bishop Moorhouse, it has been resolved to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee by raising a sum of £30,000 for the superannuation of clergymen in the Manchester diocese, who, from age, are prematurely disabled.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. A. C. Murphy, of Crouch-hill, is to be the biographer of the late Dr. Fleming Stevenson.

Mr. George Clarke commences a mission in Dr. Fraser's church, at Marylebone, on March 6, and Rev. Neville Sherbrooke, incumbent of Portman Chapel, has offered to assist at the same.

CONGREGATIONAL.

An eight days' mission has been conducted by Rev. W. Courtnall, of Sudbury, in the chapel at Alderton.

On Sunday, February 20, Rev. R. Balgarnie commenced a mission at Francis-road Congregational Church, Edgbaston.

The following additions to church membership are reported:—Gosport, 160 in eighteen months; Emmanuel Church, Bootle, 75 during the year.

A mission work in connection with Rev. J. W. Ellis' Church, at Walthamstow, will, it is hoped, grow into a self-supporting working men's church.

During the less than four years' pastorate of Rev. J. Ossian Davies at New Court Church, Tollington-park, the membership has risen from 390 to 900, and is still rapidly increasing.

Rev. W. A. Elliott has delivered in several chapels a lecture upon mission work in Matebele and Zululand, afterwards exhibiting a large number of South African curiosities. Mr. Elliott intends to return to his field of labour in August next.

BAPTIST.

In the two schools connected with Belle Isle Mission Chapel, there are 1225 scholars, with about 75 teachers. Many of the scholars have joined the church.

During the five years' pastorate of Rev. J. E. Barton, at Ebenezer Church, Burnley, 200 have been admitted to church fellowship; 71 during the past year.

The number added to the fellowship of the church at Highgate-road (Rev. James Stephens, pastor) during last year was seventy-five. Over £700 was contributed for foreign missions in the same period.

Rev. D. J. Henderson, in a paper on "Religious Life in the Queen's Reign," says that Baptist chapels can now accommodate 44 persons out of every 1000, as against 20 at the beginning of the century. In the last twenty-five years, their Sunday scholars have increased 93 per cent. The income of the Baptist Missionary Society is six times what it was in 1837.

On Lord's Day, February 20, Mr. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, announced that the following day would be an annual thankoffering day, in which all who had reason to praise God that the Tabernacle was ever built would have an opportunity of giving to the Lord an offering. For thirteen hours the offerers on Monday averaged over one per minute. The sums varied from 2d. to £25. By the close of the day the offering amounted to £409 1s. 2d.

SALVATION ARMY.

It is the intention of the Army to send a mission to the aboriginal blacks of Australia.

The Army had a great day in Oxford on Monday week, and set apart twenty "Hallelujah Lasses" for the conversion of the city.

A correspondent in Banff, N.B., writing to us with respect to the Army, says:—"There have been many remarkable and genuine conversions. Some have fallen away, and some have left the Army; but still it goes on."

An ordained minister of the Gospel in South Africa writes that a grand and noble work is being done by the Army in that country. Souls are being continually saved, and not a few of the worst characters are now faithful preachers of the Gospel.

The Army is spreading rapidly in Canada, says a correspondent of The Presbyterian Messenger, and growing in favour with the people. Even the Indians on the Grand River Reserve, Ontario, are joining the Army, where they have a corps of 100 red men, who meet in the council chamber by permission of the chief. Nineteen corps are reported from Nova Scotia, and twenty-five corps in New Brunswick. In Prince Edward Island there are three corps. They are spreading also throughout the North-West Provinces.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

An adult school is being successfully worked at Sydney. Old scholars from England are welcomed, and find "a home from home."

Mr. J. Grubb Richardson, of Moyallen, one of the best-known and most highly esteemed members of the Society of Friends, has been elected President of the Irish Temperance League.

The adult schools at Bristol, Colchester, Croydon, Halifax, Ipswich, and Norwich are increasingly prosperous. Bible knowledge and temperance principles are taught, and the philanthropic and self-help institutions connected with them exercise an incalculable influence for good.

METHODIST.

Many converts have been gathered into the Church as a result of a ten days' mission at Crewe.

Messrs. Okell and Welsby's mission to Mexboro' has been blessed to the salvation of fifty adults and scholars.

During a fortnight's mission at Dewsbury, over a hundred have found the Saviour, and decided to join the Church.

Upwards of thirty new converts have boldly testified for Christ during a mission at Hitchin, many were remarkable cases.

At Easlington-lane, Houghton-le-Spring, there has been a glorious revival, led by Mr. B. Cawood, the singing evangelist, of Newcastle.

A most successful mission for women only has been conducted at Newtown-road Chapel, Birmingham, by Miss Emily Wood, of Southport.

During a mission at Mutley Wesleyan Chapel, Plymouth, over forty persons recorded their names as trusting in Jesus for full salvation.

Fourteen former students of Headingley College, Leeds, are now in foreign mission fields, while thirteen more are preparing to work among the heathen.

The mission at Alfred-street Chapel (Primitive Methodist), Nottingham, conducted by Mr. James Flanagan, has resulted in a number of additions to the Church.

Thirty-five new members have been received into the Church (Methodist New Connexion) at Mirfield, where a week's special services have resulted in great good.

Mr. Christopher Furness, of West Hartlepool, has offered, in celebration of the Queen's Jubilee, to provide a library for the united Sunday-schools of that circuit.

Special services have been held with great blessing at Portland-street, Bristol, Bensham-road, Gatehead-on-Tyne, Fenny Compton, Snaith, and Bold-street, Warrington.

A remarkable mission has just closed in the Wesleyan Chapel, Gravel-lane, Manchester. Hundreds have signed the pledge, and many have obtained mercy from the Lord.

Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of Manchester, has recently conducted a successful mission in the Abbey-street Chapel, Dublin. The ground had been well prepared, and great blessing resulted.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has been conducting a twelve days' mission at Swindon, and many have joined the Church. The names of over three hundred adult inquirers were taken.

Some of the most reprobate characters in Sharrington have been converted. Men who were ringleaders in sin came voluntarily forward, knelt at the penitent form, and found peace in Christ.

Mr. Josiah Nix has conducted special services in the new mission hall, Lytham-road, Brixton. Over one hundred professed conversion; many striking cases being those of working men.

Miss North concluded a most cheering mission last Thursday evening in the Free Methodist Chapel, Parade-street, Penzance. She has consented to visit Penzance again at some future time.

The anniversary of the mothers' meeting in connection with the Lycett Memorial Chapel, Mile End, was recently held, when about thirty stood up to intimate their decision for Christ and their desire to lead a new life.

United services have been held at Wallsend, in the New Connexion, Wesleyan, United Methodist Free Church, and Presbyterian places of worship. Ministers of these various denominations are taking part together in these services.

During the mission at Billinghay, drunkards, backsliders, parents, young men and women came night after night seeking the Saviour. Over sixty above twelve years of age, and nearly as many under have come to the Saviour for shelter.

Rev. Harvey Field continues the Friday dinner-hour services at the Long Eaton railway siding, giving half an hour to each of the two men's rooms. A good work is going on amongst the men, and some have lately given themselves to Christ.

Clergy Convalescent Rest.—This Home was opened in November last by the widow of the late chaplain of Christ Church, Madras. The present Home must be vacated in April, so that guidance and help are urgently sought just now. All particulars can be had of Mrs. Lockwood, 95, Marine Parade, Worthing.

Feeding the Hungry.—Dear Sir,—Our doors have again been besieged by hungry crowds of unemployed men and famishing children at Millwall and Bow Common. To continue these free meals we have now spent our last sovereign. We wish it were possible to say the distress had diminished. Strong men fight like furies to get a ticket, a sight that makes one's heart ache to witness, while the stories of the children, confirmed by our visitors' inquiries, are afflicting to a degree. If help may be forthcoming, we should be heartily glad to continue to serve these poor ones a few weeks longer. —Yours truly, W. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

"LOOK UP!"

O weary souls! if of this world ye tire,
Turn from its empty joys, and look up higher!

O sin-stained heart! long bound with Satan's chain,
Look up to Christ, thou shalt be loosed again.

Look up, poor soul! look up, and thou shalt see
The Lord Himself looks down with love on thee.

Look up! each day, each hour, each moment too,
In prayer, that Christ may send his grace to you.

Right up to Jesus' throne that look ascends;
With countless other cries for help it blends.

Look up! as to an "Elder Brother" dear;
If Jesus guides thee, nothing needst thou fear.

Look up, look up! in thankfulness and praise;
Your heart from earthly thoughts and feelings raise.

Look up! for see, Redemption draweth nigh;
The King of Peace for men has deigned to die—

For us has deigned to drink that bitter cup;
Once more revive! thou fainting soul, look up!

Cecil Henry Martin.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. Justice Hawkins says that 90 per cent. of all crimes are due, directly or indirectly, to drink.

Mr. Coad has concluded a successful temperance mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Gorton, Lancashire.

In affiliation with the Liverpool Band of Hope Union, there are 124 Bands of Hope and Temperance Societies.

At an influential conference of farmers at Yeovil, recently, payment of wages in beer or cider was strongly condemned.

Mr. Whittaker, J.P., Scarborough, condemns the dual basis of the C.E.T.S., and says the plan greatly hindered the early progress of the temperance movement.

In connection with the Manchester City Mission during the year covered by the report now issued, 1717 drunkards took the pledge, and 628 were known to be standing fast.

The Secretary of State for Scotland has promised to meet representatives of Scotch temperance associations, in Edinburgh, to discuss the liquor question, and Mr. McLagan's Bill.

At the meeting recently held in the Mansion House, it was stated that during last year the agents of the London City Mission had been the means of reclaiming 2240 drunkards.

The Gospel temperance mission conducted by Mrs. Reaney and Mrs. Ormiston Chant in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, has been very successful. More than 400 pledges were taken.

Rev. G. Gregson has returned from India. His temperance work in the army received commendation from the highest authorities, and, as a recognition, he and his family had a free passage home.

A movement is on foot among the members of the Liverpool Temperance Association for presenting the Queen with a Women's National Jubilee memorial, asking Her Majesty to use her influence to bring into force a Bill for Sunday closing of public-houses. Doubts having been expressed as to whether such a petition could be accepted, Her Majesty has been communicated with, and she has replied to the effect that she will have much pleasure in receiving the memorial.

FOREIGN.

Chicago legally lynches the breeders of anarchy, and legally licenses its feeders.

In a number of districts in Queensland the Direct Veto has been adopted by large majorities.

Writing to The Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Grant Allen says the Scott Act in Canada is a failure. This is in the teeth of reliable evidence.

UGANDA.—The last Zanzibar mail brought letters containing news from Uganda down to Sept. 9, a fortnight later than the departure of Mr. Ashe. Rev. W. J. Smith, speaking at Nottingham recently, said that Mr. Mackay in his letter declared that "two or three petty European traders, by flooding the country yearly with old rifles, revolvers, and Belgian muskets, do more damage to the peace of the whole interior than all the good effected by all the missionary agencies at work." The native Christians of Tinnevelly have sent to the Church Missionary Society a letter expressing their sympathy with the Uganda Christians in their sufferings, and enclosing a remittance of £80.—Record.

WEST AFRICA.—The King of Popo (Dahomey) writes to Rev. Bryan Roe, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society: "Since my accession to the throne of my fathers, I have always had it in mind to confer with you regarding the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ which your committee in England have sent to this country, and which myself and the sons of my people have joyfully accepted... I have granted a piece of land to the Wesleyan Mission, and on it I intend myself to build a church for the above Mission and for the glory of God in this country. This subject is the foremost one in my mind amidst the storms of difficulties I am called upon to pass through, and by God's grace I will do it."—Missionary Review.

EDINBURGH CASTLE, Limehouse, E.—Sun., March 6, at 11 and 7, Dr. Barnardo; 3, Rev. Henry Bright.

BETHSHAN HALL, 10, Drayton-park, Highbury.—Missionary prayer-meeting, Fri., March 4, at 7. Address by Mr. C. R. Hurditch.

OPEN AIR MISSION (West London Auxiliary).—Quarterly meeting at Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, Edgware-road, March 7, 8 p.m.

HOME OF INDUSTRY, 60, Commercial-street, Spitalfields.—Monthly meeting for Christian workers, Wed., March 16, tea at 6, meeting at 7. Mr. Gawin Kirkham on "The Man of God completely Furnished" (2 Tim. iii. 17). The Jubilee (fiftieth) party of children for Canada will be present to say farewell.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE, May 31 and June 1 and 2.—Communications should be addressed to Rev. F. Baldey, St. Simon's Vicarage, Southsea.

THE CONGO.—The Board of the Société des Missions de Paris have resolved to undertake a mission in the French Congo as soon as the necessary resources are found.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—When Dr. Colin Valentine arrived at Agra he found nearly forty applications from native Christian young men wishing to be tried as medical evangelists; and there are at present thirty-five native Christian women who also have the same desire. Thirteen scholarships have been provided by friends in Britain and in India for the support of students at the medical training institution, of which Dr. Valentine is the head.

CAIRO MEDICAL MISSION.—Miss M. L. Whately writes to us that an interesting movement has begun among Arabic Jews who attend the Medical Mission, where the Scriptures are read and expounded. The Medical Mission is doing good work. The dispensary is at a great distance from the Jewish quarter, or more of the poor Jews would attend, for they suffer with the eye maladies of Egypt even more than natives. A branch dispensary, within reach of that quarter, is much needed.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, February 26, 1887.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

FATHER HYACINTHE (says a correspondent of The Daily Chronicle) is making arrangements to hold his services in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Avenue de l'Alma. As a religious reformer, Father Hyacinthe's career is finished, but the writer predicts for him some success as a religious lecturer, unattached to any particular creed.

DROUGHT IN BECHUANALAND.—South Africa is a dry and thirsty land, and settlers and natives alike are often in great straits for water. Rev. William Ashton, of Barkly, says in a recent letter:—"After a succession of dry seasons, this is the driest we have had for a very long time. It is now nearly mid-summer, and we have had no rain yet. I hear from Shoshong that the drought, and consequent scarcity of water there, is very great. Oxen are dying all round about, and of course there has been no ploughing this season, and consequently produce is rising." As we go to press, however, says The L. M. Chronicle, tidings of a plenteous downpour have arrived.

SPIRITUAL AWAKENING OF YOUNG HINDUS.—Rev. G. M. Bullock, of the London Missionary Society, tells of a remarkable religious movement in Benares. "I have had," he writes, "the unspeakable pleasure of coming across quite a number of young men lately, who seem to be experiencing an awakening, and are passing through terrible spiritual throes. As a sign of the reality of this, I hear that the Brahmos have begun a second church in a thickly-populated part of the city. At first Brahmoism seems a fitting resting-place for some of those anxious spirits. Only yesterday morning I met an old pupil on the platform of the railway station who seemed greatly dejected. On entering into conversation with him, I found that for several months he had been enduring what he called inexpressible torments, longing for spiritual rest. During this time he had read the Bible through three times, often sitting up all the night in the exercise. I earnestly pointed him to Jesus, and pleaded much with him, and silently entreated the Holy Spirit to show him the things of Christ; but I had to leave him still apparently in hopelessness. Oh, tell us, brethren, how these dear young men are to gain the courage to confess Christ! May we not take these as premonitory symptoms of a mighty upheaval which is beginning to work under the hard and firm ground of Hinduism?"—L. M. Chronicle.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 101 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

GEE-STREET MISSION, Goswell-road. Voluntary workers earnestly solicit funds to carry on the work of doing good to the poor. Subscriptions thankfully received by the Treasurer, ROBERT BAXTER, Esq., 6, Victoria-street, Westminster: the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, 54, Lombard-street; A. J. VIEWEG, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside.

DUBLIN CITY MISSION.—This Society employs men truly Christian to read the Bible amongst the people, with prayer and conversation. There are about one hundred families visited daily. Poor Protestants, who otherwise would be swallowed up in the surrounding mass of Romanism, and cases of mixed marriage, whilst Roman Catholics, when opportunity offers, are also included. Mothers' and Children's Meetings are held weekly, besides Gospel and Prayer Meetings. Funds are greatly needed to employ more agents. Donations received at 9, Anglesea-street, or by T. P. LAW, Esq., Q.C., 48, Stephen-street, Dublin.

THE UTMOST ANXIETY IS FELT for the welfare of one of the most time-honoured Children's Missions in London. For 85 years a glorious work for Christ has been carried on in Castle-yard, among the very poorest children in Southwark.

Sick Children have been visited, Gifts of Clothing and Money made to necessitous cases. Summer Excursions, and numerous other benefits conferred.

All these useful operations are now threatened with collapse, through want of means to restore the greatly dilapidated building. For nearly two years the Teachers have been fervently praying for help against such a calamity, but the much-needed aid has not yet come.

Will every reader who has a heart to sympathize, and a few shillings to spare, generously come to the rescue, for the poor children's sake?

An urgent appeal has appeared in these columns for two weeks, without adequate response. The reader is therefore implored to help this time-honoured work in its present hour of need.

Contributions most gratefully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN.

Treasurer, Rev. ROBERT TUCK, B.A.; Bankers, London & Westminster Bank, No. 1, St. James's-square, S.W., account "Castle Yard Mission."

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College Avenue, Hackney.—Blind children are admitted from 2 years of age. Orphan and destitute cases free. Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss S. RYE, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT. Several children waiting admission.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.; undenominational. Ladies trained for Medical Mission work. Non-resident Students received. Partial board if desired. Miss Mills, £10; Miss Page, £5; R. C. L. Bevan, Esq., £25.—Treasurer, G. J. GREEN, Esq., London & County Bank, Victoria-street, S.W.; Hon. Sec., Dr. GRIFFITH.

REV. J. W. ATKINSON, 308, Old Ford-road, E., acknowledges with thanks:—Anon. (Edinburgh), £5; A Reader of THE CHRISTIAN, 2s. 6d.; Scotus, £5; Richard Sharpe, 10s.; N., £1; M. H., 1s. 6d. Further help much needed. 400 destitute families are being assisted weekly, but funds are nearly gone. Every shilling sent provides a substantial plain food parcel. All gifts acknowledged promptly by above.

CONVALESCENT HOMES, at Bournemouth and Sandgate.—For particulars apply to Mr. JOHN JAMES JONES, Director of the London Samaritan Society, 98, High-street, Homerton, London, E.

FAITH-HEALING and Power for Service.—Meetings conducted by the Rev. JOHN ALLEN or his workers. Bishopsgate (32, Spital-square), Tuesdays, 7.30 p.m. Camberwell Gate (The Hall, Horsley-street). Tuesdays, 7 p.m. Hackney (Trinity Church, Triangle, Mare-street), Sundays, 3 p.m.; Mondays, 7 p.m.; on Fridays, Baptism of the Spirit, 7 p.m. Railway Mission Hall, Leyton House, Major-road, Stratford, Thursdays, 7 p.m.

MATTHEWS, Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, London, E.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

PROPOSED CESSATION OF SUNDAY POSTAL DELIVERY.—Immediate and General Petitioning.—A Motion to this effect will be discussed in the House of Commons on Tuesday, March 22. It should be largely supported by petitions from all parts of the United Kingdom. Forms of Petition may be had on application as below.—JOHN GRITTON, D.D., Lord's Day Society, 20, Bedford-street, Strand.

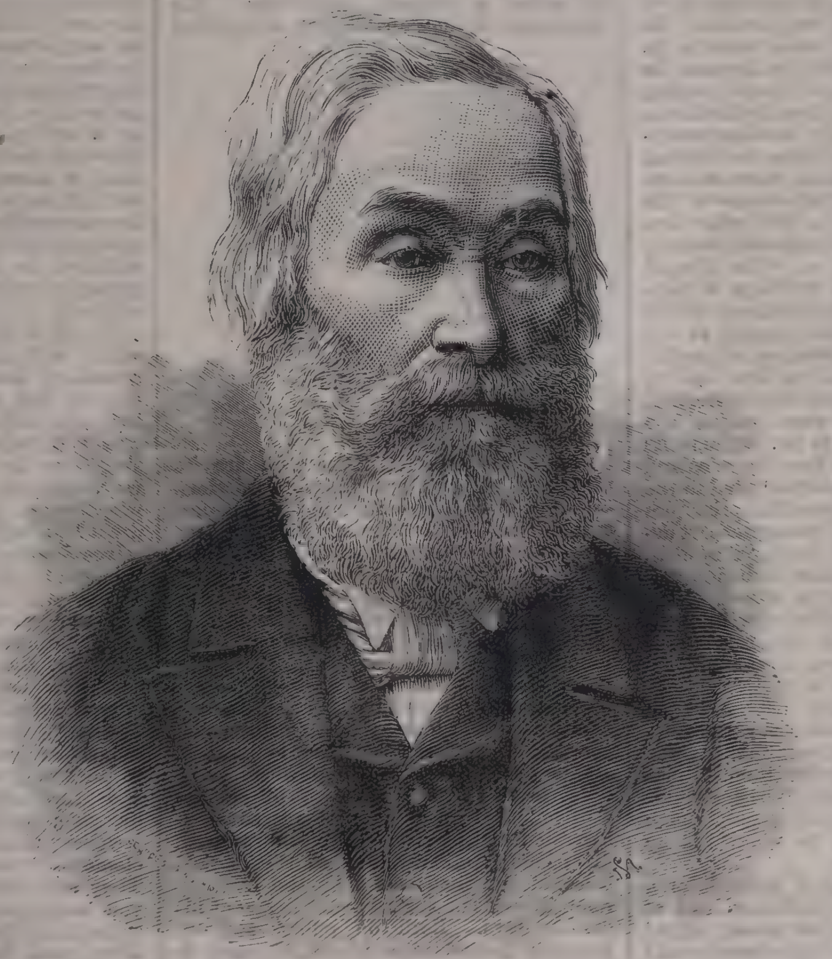
REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.

THE quiet hamlet of Kirriemuir, in the uplands of Forfarshire, is little known to fame. But it has produced some notable men, of whom two now living may be instanced—Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, and one of his elders, the subject of this sketch.

JAMES AITKEN WYLIE was born on August 9, 1808, so that the venerable Doctor, though his natural force is scarce abated, is now in his seventy-ninth year. He sprang from a Seceder stock, of which there is a trace even in his name; for James Aitken, of Kirriemuir, his minister and namefather, was one of the most godly and esteemed leaders of what was called the "Antiburgher" branch of the Secession. These "Old Light" Seceders did a great service for Scotland at a time when the religious life of the country had sunk lamentably low, and young Wylie owed much to his nurture in such a school of robust, primitive piety.

As a boy, he was a voracious reader. We have heard him say that the two books over which he was wont to pore most earnestly in these early days—next to the Old Testament histories and the Psalms—were the "Scots Worthies" and Bunyan's "Pilgrim." His taste for history was even then appearing, and his singular power of graphic narration was being already enkindled, as he sat by the ingle nook of his rural home. His education was begun at the parish school of Kirriemuir, and continued in a curriculum of four years at the University—the first three at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and the fourth at St. Andrew's, where it was his privilege to study moral philosophy and political economy under Dr. Thomas Chalmers. At that time, he showed great aptitude for Natural Science, and, while yet in early manhood, he gave scientific lectures in the Mechanics' Institutes of Alloa, and of Dunfermline, Forfar, and Arbroath. In 1827 he passed to the Original Secession Divinity Hall, in Edinburgh, and while there caught the inspiration of the famous biographer of Knox, Dr. Thomas M'Crie, whose bust still looks down upon the Doctor in his study.



(From Photograph by Mr. George Shaw, Edinburgh.)

Comparing his two great teachers, Dr. Wylie said some years ago, in a letter to the present writer:—

> Dr. M'Crie had less splendour, more intensity. Chalmers was the orator, M'Crie the prophet. Chalmers blazed like a conflagration, like a mountain on fire; M'Crie shone with concentrated brilliance, like an electric light. With a few touches he could paint a character, and, beyond all men I ever knew, give dramatic form to an event. When he kindled, his whole person became transformed; he grew taller; his big eyes burned like two lamps; his voice acquired a strange power that thrilled you. Of the two men, I think I profited most from M'Crie. I watched by his bedside when he was dying, and I was the last to whom he addressed mortal speech.

Mr. Wylie was licensed in 1829, and preached his first sermon at Midholm, in the South of Scotland. He was ordained at Dollar on April 20, 1831, and afterwards married the daughter of a co-presbyter, Rev. Thos. Gray, of Kirkcaldy, by whom he had two daughters, still living with their father. His Dollar pastorate lasted fifteen years, and in its course he wrote such works as the "Modern Judea" and "Scenes from the Bible," which have retained public favour and reached many editions. A sad domestic bereavement—the death of his beloved wife—concurring at the close of that period with an invitation from Hugh Miller to join him as assistant-editor of The Witness, Mr. Wylie, in 1846, transferred himself to Edinburgh. For ten years he continued to write the alternate leading article in that eminent journal, which did so much to mould the religious sentiment of Scotland, both before and after the Disruption.

It is a noteworthy coincidence that his coming to Edinburgh and the coming of Pio Nono to the Papal chair occurred on almost the same day. The two men's lives seemed to lie far enough apart; but stirring events towards the beginning of the new Pontificate greatly excited public interest and apprehension, and in the joint editor of The Witness the country found what it much needed, a trenchant and reliable teacher on the subject of the Papacy. In articles which attracted considerable notice, Mr. Wylie unfolded, as it had probably never been disclosed before, the true nature of that religio-political system, and the blighting effects everywhere attendant on its supremacy.

It was owing to no predilection of his own, but under the manifest leading of Providence, that Mr. Wylie came to make Popery his life study, and to render in this connection a service which may be fairly described as not great only, but unique. His influence had been making itself felt in Scotland before then, but it was in 1851 that he rose into the position of the leading Protestant authority on the Papacy in English-speaking Christendom. This position he has since maintained; and he has had the satisfaction of hearing the echo of his own sentiments coming back to him from many a platform, and through many a publication. It was the appearance in the year named—1851—of "The Papacy: its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects" that first brought its author into cosmopolitan notice. In this masterly treatise Mr. Wylie stood first among a large number of gifted competitors for the Evangelical Alliance Prize; and the ample recognition of its merits appeared not only in the eulogies of friends like Hugh Miller, but in the savage attacks of Roman Catholic critics both at home and on the Continent.

From that day it may be said that Mr.—soon Dr.—Wylie (LL.D. of Aberdeen, 1856) had his career mapped out for him. He had other abundant and varied work to do. For eight years (1853-60), for instance, he was editor of The Free Church Record, having, with the majority of his Seceder brethren, joined that Church in 1852. Besides preaching frequently, he found time for issuing various publications, which were well received. Among other engagements of this sort, he broke a lance in 1857 with Rev. Joseph Parker, and other talented writers, in a competitive essay on "The Gospel Ministry: the Duty and Privilege of Supporting it," in which the minister of the City Temple made an able second to the Scotch Divine. Other avenues of usefulness would have opened to him had he chosen. But in 1860, when the Protestant Institute of Edinburgh was founded, the country naturally turned to Dr. Wylie as its first professor; and since then, by voice and pen, his life has been mainly devoted to the lucid and fervent exposition of the principles of the Reformation, with the counterpart delineation of the errors of the Papal system. Well nigh 2000 students have in the interval passed through Dr. Wylie's classes, many of them carrying his influence with them into important spheres of labour. In 1868 he was one of six witnesses examined before the House of Lords on the Ecclesiastical Titles Act and Canon Law. He has spoken on numberless platforms with effect, often with a genuine eloquence that covered certain drawbacks of delivery which detract from his spoken as against his written style; while the audience he has addressed through the printed page may be numbered by hundreds of thousands.

Dr. Wylie has published upwards of a score of works, most of which have been of considerable note. He has never lacked for readers. His magnum opus may be said to be his great "History of Protestantism" (Cassell & Co., 3 volumes), which has attained a circulation of some 70,000 copies, apart from an edition in German, now in course of publication. Perhaps priority may be ultimately given to his, as yet uncompleted, "History of the Scottish Nation," the first volume of which equals, for philosophic insight and graphic power, anything he has yet produced, and the second volume of which is just announced.

In December, 1881, at a representative gathering in Edinburgh, Dr. Wylie was presented, on the occasion of his jubilee, with his portrait and other tangible souvenirs, along with a cheque for 300 guineas, to fulfil his early dream of visiting Egypt and Palestine. Of this journey he has given a vivid account in his "Land of the Pharaohs" (1882), and his "Over the Holy Land" (1883). It was only one of many foreign expeditions that Dr. Wylie has undertaken. The powerful descriptions with which his histories abound are often inspired by what he himself has seen in Italy and Spain and the other historic lands of Europe. It may be added that the Doctor is a great pedestrian. Early every morning, while most people are still asleep, his spare, but erect and wiry figure may be seen issuing from his home on the South Side of Edinburgh, for his "constitutional" round Arthur's Seat; and, on a moderate computation, it may be confidently affirmed that, in his long and active life time, he has walked at least as much as four times the circumference of the entire globe!

In fine, Dr. Wylie is a man of simple habits, unostentatious piety, and mellow Christian character—earnest, but anything rather than morose. To virile strength he unites a woman's sensibility. His detestation of the Papal system is equalled by his tenderness for those who are its mistaken votaries and unhappy victims. You cannot be long with him without perceiving that he is a lover of Christ, and of all good men. A greater mistake could not be made than to fancy in him an acrid, self-assertive, one-idead controversialist. He is one of the best informed, most genial, and sympathetic of men; and the humility of true greatness is one of his striking characteristics. His hair grows hoary, and his frame is getting old, but his heart is ever young, and his conversation is so rich and sparkling, that there is both education and enjoyment in an evening with him by his hearth. With an entire absence of egotism, his fund of anecdotes is so inexhaustible that, as all who are favoured with his friendship know, one of the raciest books of our time would be the Doctor's reminiscences of the men and things of his earlier days. Both on public and on personal grounds the prayer of many is that he may long be spared—"Serus in cœlum redeat!"

THE PAPACY.—We learn that the Council of the Evangelical Alliance are making arrangements to send the admirable address of Dr. Wylie upon "The Present Position, Policy, and Prospects of the Papacy," to every Protestant minister in the United Kingdom. The sending of 30,000 or 40,000 copies of the pamphlet through the post involves, of course, a large outlay, but it is gratifying that the appeal on behalf of the special fund which the Evangelical Alliance are raising for this purpose, is being liberally responded to by several Christian friends. Doubtless many of our readers will be glad to help in this important matter. The address of the Alliance is 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

CHRISTIAN WORLDLINESS.

At the present day one can hardly take up a good religious paper without finding in it an earnest appeal to Christians to be more devoted, more wholly given up to their Master's service. Urgent arguments are brought forward, and the blessedness of such a life dwelt upon, till one's whole heart responds to the call and the earnest cry goes up, "Here am I, Lord, send me!" But yet how little real work is done, compared with the number of Christians whose hearts are thus stirred!

It has just struck me forcibly, after reading one of these articles, Does not the hindrance lie, largely at least, in our mode of living? Are there not so many obstacles to entire devotion and active service in the whirl of social and domestic duties (?) that only a few who are specially strong, both mentally and spiritually, have the courage to rise above them and strike out a path for themselves?

Now the question arises, Is the present mode of living, in most Christian families, the best? Is it well to spend so much time on our houses; to give so much thought to dress; to make such a point of having everything in good style? Are these social gatherings (parties) so common amongst us a really profitable way of expending time and money? Do they afford the best kind of recreation, and do they increase our influence for good. Is it enough to live outwardly just as the world lives, and, after all its pressing claims have been satisfied, to give what remains of time, money, thought, and strength to the Lord's service?

Would it not be better to content ourselves with plainer homes and furniture, a mode of dressing requiring less time and money, and a perfectly simple style of living? And, if we wish to gather our friends together, would it not be more consistent to do so in an openly unworldly way, without any costly or troublesome preparation, either in house, table, or dress? Should we not thus secure ourselves double or treble the time for devotion and for service?

I know that there is a very great difference of opinion among Christians on these points. Some, the greater number, maintain that the former mode is the wiser; that it is healthier and more rational to have the mind taken up with a daily round of earthly cares, and not always engrossed in one subject; also, that it is only right to encourage commerce by costly houses, and furniture (of course within one's income); and by handsome dress and jewellery; and to cultivate the social element by means of parties and dinners. They urge that you lose influence unless you keep up your position by going into society, and living according to your means. They plead for unweeded, general reading as being variety for the mind, and also on the ground that, unless well "up" in all the current literature, you have nothing to talk about in society; and they stigmatise as "very narrow" any who venture to hold up a narrower path as the "more excellent way," and more in accordance with the self-sacrificing love of Christ.

Now, if we are really sincere in our desire to do the will of God at any cost, let us consider prayerfully which is the higher and more Christ-like, and the more productive, life.

Most of the luxuries and pleasures in which Christians indulge nowadays may be said to be lawful, but are they expedient? Is it not a higher life to deny ourselves voluntarily, for the sake of helping others, many things, which, had we fewer outside claims, we might legitimately enjoy? I know that many of those lives in question are most beautiful and unselfish, so far as domestic and social tyrannies will let them be; but the point is, if our one aim in life is to be good and to do good, let us hamper ourselves as little as possible with needless earthly claims. An ungrudging hospitality, not so much to congenial friends as to those who need it, will keep our domestic and social graces from rusting, and, no matter how we curtail our style of living, there will always be enough of the "daily round, the common task" to furnish us "room to deny ourselves;" the "road to bring us daily nearer God" will still point upwards, straight from the hallowed sanctuary of home. Whatever is our duty will always help us heavenward, no matter how engrossing or commonplace or even drudging it may be.

As regards general reading, every intelligent person must know what is going on around him in the world of thought, or he will be unable to speak with his enemies in the gate. Then all the grand thoughts in the highest literature of our own and other lands are of God, the "Father of lights," from whom cometh down "every good gift and every perfect gift." But light, trashy reading unfits us for hard mental work; the Christian worker needs a well-trained, well-exercised mind, and therefore such reading is bad. The best fighting weapons for the soldier of Christ, be his adversary formidable as Goliath, are the "sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God," and the pebble and sling of David's faith.

As for variety there is enough of it in real faithful Christian work, good reading, and family life, to keep the most one-sided mind well balanced.

That view of life cannot justly be termed narrow which leads us to simplfy our own needs in order that more of our thought, time, and money, may go to the needs of others. Christ's life has always been held up as a typically great one, and He "left us an example that we should follow his steps." Is it necessary that there should be such a marked difference between his life and ours? Every day He "went about doing good," and the whole tenor of his teaching was that we should not lay up treasure upon earth, nor encumber ourselves by our surroundings, but be free to do as He did. He gently reproved Martha for her "much serving," though it came of love, and reminded her that Mary's was the "better part." Ah, many hearts would leap for joy could they but see their way to simplifying life so as to be less detained from the Lord's service.

It can be done, though, no doubt, all who resolutely begin to do it will encounter difficulties at the outset. But if we plainly tell our friends that we have seen more clearly the meaning of full consecration, and intend henceforth to carry it into practice, all whose friendship is worth having, will respect our motive, whether they approve our action or not. But we shall double our difficulties unless we make a decided stand at the beginning.

Conformity to the world is our great bane; our influence will increase tenfold if we really came out from it and are separate; our conscience, freed from its frequent controversies with God, will be at perfect rest; we shall be able honestly to "rejoice" because we have "offered willingly unto the Lord," and his "joy will be our strength."

Oh, let us determine now, by the power of the Holy Ghost, to make straight paths for our feet, so that what is lame in us be no more turned out of the way, but rather be healed. A great and effective door is opened before each one of us for service. Let us no longer block the way to it by self-imposed, needless, time-wasting relations with the world in any of its forms. The power of God will be with us in our effort to break loose, obstacles that now seem insuperable will vanish into thin air when boldly dealt with. The Saviour is calling us again into this sacred narrow path of whole-hearted consecration, and many of us are longing to go. Who will lead the way? H. W. G.

FISHERMEN AND SHEPHERDS.*

It is worth our while attentively to study the figures by which the only-wise God conveys his thoughts to men. There is a wide difference between the qualifications necessary to a fisherman and a shepherd. The aim of the one is to get, of the other to keep. The fisherman's is an exciting, adventurous, roving life, and boldness, hardihood, and tact in adapting himself to his ever-varying circumstances are amongst the characteristics conducive to his success; while qualities of another kind—gentleness, quietness, patient and watchful care, are indispensable to the shepherd. Some qualities, however, are essential to both, as, for example, a love of their several callings, a knowledge of the creatures with which they have to deal, and wisdom and skill in the application of such knowledge.

It would be easy to trace a similar contrast between the evangelist and the pastor; and if it be intelligible to us that a good fisherman would often make a bad shepherd, and a good shepherd a bad fisherman, it will not be difficult to understand why the Holy Ghost has broadly distinguished between gifts of evangelists on the one hand, and of pastors and teachers on the other.

There is a tendency in our nature inclining us to the exciting and adventurous and changeful, so that the exclamation, "I go a fishing!" will almost insure the response, "We also go with thee!" when a thrice-repeated command may be needed to "Feed my lambs." There is an éclat about preaching the Gospel (especially in the good days on which we have fallen), which does not attach to pastoral care; and the evangelist has an immediate joy in seeing men struggling in the Gospel net, while the feeder of the flock must have long patience to await the result of his labours. Yet the unknown and patient shepherd has a reward peculiarly his own in the growth and development of his flock, and when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, he, as well as the laborious and hardy fisherman, shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Ye servants of the Lord,
Each in his office wait,
Obedient to his heavenly word,
And watchful at his gate.

We would not overstate the contrast we have drawn, for the gifts of evangelist and pastor have been combined in many disciples of the Lord. We are taught to covet earnestly the best gifts.

He whom grace has made wise to win souls may justly ask of God wisdom to train and feed them; and the scribe instructed into the kingdom, who brings out of his treasury things new and old for the enriching of Christ's little ones, will not ask in vain for power to preach the Gospel of God.

With regard to the exercise of these gifts. The men of Galilee let down their net at the bidding of Jesus, and with earnest labour, all hands helping, they brought their freight to shore. How strange it would have been if, having enclosed that great multitude of fishes, they had made no effort to drag their net to land. What should we think of a fisherman who was extremely nice in his method of casting his net, and scrupulously exact as to the time he occupied in drawing it through the sea, but took no pains to know whether he had enclosed any fish, or positively objected to drag them to land? Yet, if eternal realities are superior to the shadows of time, how much stranger is it when preachers whom Christ has sent to catch men for whom He died, are precise in the terms they employ, and scrupulous as to the length of their discourses, but are at no pains to inform themselves as to the results, and neglect or refuse to lay hold of those who have been lured by such a bait as the good tidings concerning the Son of God. If Jesus came to the shore and said to his commissioned fishermen, "Bring of the fish which ye have now caught," how many would have to answer, "Lord, we let them go again"!

One word to pastors and teachers. The Chief Shepherd is exceeding pitiful, and they who have drunk into his Spirit thus speak:—"We were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children. So, being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us."

Nursing fathers, and nursing mothers, must be kings and queens, ruling their own spirits, by bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ.

To all who occupy till He comes, in whatever way He may appoint, the Master when He comes will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." M.

Mr. Spencer Walton at Fairlight.

After many years of sowing and much prayer, we have at last been blessed with a remarkable reaping time. The first three meetings of Mr. Spencer Walton's mission were specially for Christians; they were both searching and humbling—a good preface to the revival which followed.

A wonderful breaking down commenced on the Sunday night, and was manifested at all the following meetings, when many long prayed for were brought to decision for Christ. The interest increased as the meetings continued, many of the people coming from long distances. The closing meeting we can never forget, when many stood up joyfully to express before their mates and neighbours that they were now on the Lord's side.

Mr. Walton's addresses were most earnest and solemn, and he seems to have a special gift in gaining the confidence of those who are anxious. We are most thankful for his visit, which God has so greatly blessed.

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

MR. GRATTAN GUINNESS'S LECTURES.

IV. THE PRE-REFORMATION VIEW.

Having in the previous lectures surveyed the scope of the prophetic Scriptures, in their bearing on the Romish question, Mr. Guinness last week proceeded to inquire into the verdict of post-Scriptural times. To condense into ninety minutes' speech the opinions of men of light and leading during fifteen centuries, seems no easy task. Yet the speaker succeeded in doing so with a lucidity and impressiveness that showed his close acquaintance with the subject. The final paragraphs of the lecture, which we quote in full, were grandly eloquent, both in matter and in delivery.

How has the Christian Church understood and employed the Scriptural predictions relating to Antichrist and the Man of Sin? If these prophecies have proved to be a mighty power in the history of the Church, in preserving her faith, inspiring her courage, and supporting her martyrs in the hour of trial, we cannot lightly esteem the interpretation which has produced such results. We should naturally conclude the view of the victorious witnesses against apostasy to be correct, in preference to the view of those who composed that persecuting, tyrannical, and apostate Church. The two views will, of course, be antagonistic, and, as a matter of fact, they have been. The "historic" method of interpretation, Mr. Guinness asserted, has been held by the larger part of the greatest and best religious teachers for 1800 years. The "futurist" view, on the other hand (which would relegate the fulfilment of these prophecies to a mere fragment of time at the close of the dispensation), is chiefly represented by teachers belonging to the Church of Rome.

Proceeding to expand and enforce these central arguments, the lecturer maintained that the historic method of interpretation, which is condemned by Rome, gradually grew up with the course of events; and, while its details were slowly modified under the illuminating influence of actual facts, its foundation principles remained unaltered from age to age. "It was defended by a multitude of earnest students, and faithful expositors, and it shaped the history of heroic struggles, and of glorious reformations." Mr. Guinness divided his review of the first fifteen centuries of the Christian era into three sections: (1) the period from Apostolic times to the fall of Rome Pagan in the fifth century; (2) on to the pontificate of Hildebrande, the founder of the Papal theocracy in the eleventh century; (3) to the Reformation.

THE VERDICT OF THE FATHERS.

The following eight points were advanced as to the views of "The Fathers:"—(1) They interpreted the four wild beasts of prophecy as representing the four empires—Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome. (2) They held that the ten-horned beast of Daniel and John are the same. (3) They held the historic interpretation of the Apocalypse. (4) They held that the little horn of Daniel, the Man of Sin foretold by Paul, and the revived head of the Roman Empire predicted by John represent the same power, and that power is the Antichrist. (5) They held that the Roman Empire was the "let" or hindrance (2 Thess.) which kept back the manifestation of the Man of Sin. (6) They held that the fall of the Roman Empire was imminent, and therefore the manifestation of Antichrist close at hand. (7) They held that the Man of Sin or Antichrist would be a ruler or head of the Roman Empire. (8) They held that the Babylon of the Apocalypse meant Rome. Mr. Guinness fortified his position as to these averments, by liberal and specific quotation from the writings of Hippolytus, Irenæus, Victorinus, Origen, Jerome, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Justin Martyr, and Cyprian; making a consensus of view that is of essential weight in estimating the bearing of this question. None of the Fathers held "the futurist gap theory," which makes the Apocalypse overleap nearly eighteen centuries, and apply merely to the last half dozen years of the dispensation. They held, it is true, that the Antichrist was an individual man, but their early position sufficiently accounts for this: they could have no conception that the Church was for nineteen centuries to pass through prolonged and bitter persecution under a succession of nominally Christian, but apostate rulers, filling the place of the ancient Cæsars, and emulating their anti-Christian deeds.

As to the second period, from the fall of Pagan Rome to the full development of the Papal theocracy, Mr. Guinness contended that the interpreters of that time were also of the historic school, making the prophecies embrace the whole course of events, from the first advent to the final consummation. The authors quoted in support of this were Primasius, the venerable Bede, Ansbert, Haymo, Andreas, Arethas, and Berengaud. A copy of the Commentary of the Venerable Bede, who lived in the north of England at the close of the seventh century, was one of the goodly pile of ancient-looking volumes that covered the table by Mr. Guinness's side. These mediæval interpreters, no doubt, spiritualised and explained away a great deal of prophecy. They even supposed they were then living in the millennium; and, while they were expecting that the Man of Sin would be revealed in an outbreak of evil at its close, that very Man of Sin stole unperceived into their midst, and usurped the place of Christ over his unwatchful flock. It was but gradually that the true character of the Papacy dawned upon the Christian Church of this period.

Coming to the third epoch, the lecturer said that the accession of Gregory VII., or Hildebrande, was the great landmark in the development of the Papacy, when the Pope dropped the mask of shepherd, and exchanged the crook for the sceptre and the sword. Gregory's successors went even further. Hallam, the historian of the middle ages says:—

> As Gregory VII. appears the most usurping of mankind till we read the history of Innocent III., so Innocent is thrown into the shade by the supreme audacity of Boniface VIII.

Some lines from the poet Dante, written in the thirteenth century, were given by the lecturer with great vigour and effect. The poet saw in the Papacy the usurping Man of Sin, and in the Church of Rome the Babylon of the Apocalypse:—

> Woe to thee, Simon Magus; woe to you,
> His wretched followers, who the things of God,
> Which should be wedded unto goodness—them,
> Rapacious as ye are, do prostitute
> For gold and silver.
> Your avarice
> O'ercasts the world with mourning; under foot
> Treading the good, and raising bad men up.
> Of shepherds like to you, th' Evangelist
> Was ware, when her, who sits upon the waves,
> With kings in filthy whoredom he beheld,
> She who with seven heads towered at her birth,
> And from ten horns her proof of glory drew,
> Long as her spouse in virtue took delight.
> Of gold and silver ye have made your god,
> Differing wherein from the idolator,
> But that he worships one, a hundred ye?
> Ah, Constantine, to how much ill gave birth,
> Not thy conversion, but that plenteous dower,
> Which the first wealthy Father gained from thee.

In his poem on Paradise, Dante says:—

> In shepherds' clothing greedy wolves below
> Range wide o'er all the pastures. Arm of God
> Why longer sleepest thou?"

In the end of the poem he refers to the Apostle John as

> The seer
> That, e'er he died, saw all the grievous times
> Of the fair bride, who with the lance and nails
> Was won.

These lines plainly recognise the historical interpretation of the Apocalypse. What Dante saw, the Albigenses and the Waldenses saw. A graphic description was given by Mr. Guinness of the fair lands occupied by these heroic and faithful witnesses to the truth, and of their cruel persecution. He read Milton's famous sonnet:—

> Avenge, oh Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
> Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold.

Then followed a brief account of the Bohemian persecutions, and of the part played by Wycliffe, the English "Morning Star of the Reformation," who translated the Scriptures into the English tongue, and waged war against the errors and abominations of Rome. He, too, interpreted these prophecies historically, as did the Waldenses. After a touching reference to the trial and martyrdom of Lord Cobham, who was burned at the stake in St. Giles, about a century before the time of Luther, Mr. Guinness closed his deeply instructive lecture by a magnificent outburst, which we may term an

APOSTROPHE TO IMMORTAL TRUTH.

They were burned, these blessed men of God! Huss was burned. Jerome was burned. Lord Cobham was burned. Even Wycliffe's bones were dug up forty-one years after his death, and burned. Savonarola, who preached with trumpet tongue that Rome was Babylon, was burned. All these were burned before the Reformation; and thousands more. They were burned, but their words were not burned! Their testimony was not burned! It lived on! Fire could not scorch it. Chains could not bind it. Gags could not silence it. Gaols could not stifle it. Swords could not slay it. Nought could destroy it. Truth is immortal. Truth is unconquerable. Imprison it, and it comes forth free! Bury it, and it rises again. Crush it to the earth, and it springs up victorious: purer for the conflict; nobler for the victory. The truth, to which these confessors witnessed, sprang up again a century later, and rolled over Europe the tremendous tide of the Reformation.

And whence came this testimony which no one could repress? Whence came this testimony trumpet tongued, that Rome in all its myriad-handed might was impotent to silence or arrest? Whence came it but from that sacred volume, writ in gloomy prisons, in lands of captivity, in scenes of exile, for the guidance, the preservation, the support of God's suffering saints, and faithful witnesses in every age. Daniel the captive; Paul the prisoner; John the exile — such were its inspired authors; men whose piercing vision looked down the long vista of the Church's conflicts, marked her martyrdoms, and saw her triumphs from afar.

O Word of divinely given prophecy! O wondrous volume whose seven seals the Lamb has loosed and opened, to meet the moral and spiritual needs of the suffering Church He loves so well; how have thy solemn utterances, thy mysterious symbols been scanned and studied by earnest saintly eyes; how hast thou been pondered in prisons, remembered on racks, repeated in the flames! Thy texts are windows through which the light shines from the third heaven down into the darkest depths of earth's conflicts, mysteries, and woes. O sacred and sanctifying truth! How have thy words been watered with the tears of suffering saints, steeped in their griefs and sorrows, and dyed in the copious streaming of their blood.

Precious are the lives which have sealed Thee; precious the truths those lives have sealed! Thy words have been wings by which the persecuted Church has soared from the wilderness, and the battlefield, into the pure serene of everlasting love and peace! Like a bright angel thou art heaven descended, and leadest to the skies. By thee has God guided to their glorious consummation the noble army of saints, confessors, martyrs, shining round his throne like the everlasting stars. They are gone into that world of glory—for ever gone—but the light which led them there remains behind! We cannot touch them. They have vanished from the sight of men, like the prophet whose chariot to heaven was the wingèd flame! We cannot hear the music of their harpings, or the thunder of their song! But we still grasp the book they loved, which made them all they were, and all they are. Ye Waldenses from the lonely blood-stained Alps; ye nameless victims of the dreadful Inquisition; ye noble Protestants before the Reformation—Wycliffe, Huss, Jerome, Cobham, Savonarola—we have the holy pages which ye pondered, the words of truth and life ye sealed with martyrs' blood! Be those words to us what they were to you; let them be our inspiration and our testimony, and the testimony of our children after us; till the hour when truth, emancipated from all trammels, shall shine through the world in its unclouded splendour, and error, and superstition, and falsehood from its presence shall for ever flee away!

Dr. Miller, Q.C., who presided, said, in a few remarks at the close, that he knew of no cause half so worthy at the present time as the spread of good, sound Protestant truth.

LEAMINGTON Y.W.C.A.—The "Young Dressmakers' Home, at Stanhope House, 14, Regent-street West, Leamington, has, during its twelfth year, been of incalculable benefit to numbers of young people, many of whom, but for its kindly shelter, would have had a bad time of it at changing seasons. The number (77) who have availed themselves of the benefit of the Home has been larger than in any previous year. As the report says, "We have no hard and fast lines, and count it a pleasure to be able to help those who from any cause may be in trouble or need." It is not surprising to learn that there is a strong bond of affection between the inmates and the matron, Miss Craggs. Eight Bible-classes are held every Sunday afternoon, the attendances at which number nearly 600. The evangelistic work, which is of a very direct and definite character, has been fruitful in spiritual blessing, and some of the inmates have gone forth to the Lord's work.

CHURCH WORK IN GLASGOW.

SIR,—In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN you give extracts from two correspondents of the Glasgow Daily Mail, bearing on the work of churches and ministers in this city. The tale told by both these correspondents is certainly doleful enough, and is fitted to leave the impression that our churches are ceasing to be the centres of vigorous and successful aggressive work, and that the best work in Glasgow is done by outside organisations.

Now, Sir, is it so? Are clergy and congregations allowing the work to slip out of their hands? No one, indeed, will for a moment deny the noble service to Christ rendered by such agencies as the United Evangelistic Association. But there is another side, of which the writers you quote seem totally unaware. I trust you will grant me a portion of your space, in order to present some facts connected with purely congregational effort, which will be interesting to all in sympathy with thorough-going spiritual work. The facts I am to mention, I may say, are drawn from reports furnished by Congregations, and submitted to a Presbyterial Conference recently held in the city. The information, therefore, is in everyway reliable.

STEADY GROWTH.

(1) As to the healthiness and steady growth of congregations. One says:—"The work of the congregation has gone on with not a little encouragement during the past year." Another, "We have many zealous workers, who are untiring in their zeal, and going on to new enterprises as occasion offers." Another, "Our usual agencies are in full and active operation, and our workers are resolute and hopeful." "The standard of church life is rising." Another, "There has been an increase in the attendance at the services on Sabbath...also a considerable increase of attendance at the weekly prayer-meeting...a warmer interest, too, is taken in the whole work of the congregation." Others speak of weekly prayer-meetings with an attendance of several hundreds. Others tell of work among the young so growing as to overtax the accommodation supplied by church premises. Again and again are we told of persons drafted into church-membership, as the fruit of missionary effort. It is not unusual for anxious inquirers to seek conversation with the minister at the close of the ordinary church services. Many speak of growing communion rolls, and of deepening interest among old and young. One congregation, started three years ago with no membership, has now a roll of nearly five hundred.

(2) I would refer to the manifold agencies in operation in congregations, such as open-air services, where the Gospel is sung and spoken night after night, wet or dry; evangelistic services in the churches, which during the past winter have been remarkably blessed in the hopeful conversion of multitudes; Gospel temperance meetings, especially on Saturday evenings, where testimony is often given by reclaimed drunkards, of the power of Divine grace in delivering them from the bondage of strong drink; medical missions among poor and sunken; domestic missions, having for their object the establishment of kitchen meetings, mothers' meetings, &c.; tract distribution; district visitation, &c. In short, congregations seem to leave nothing untried which sanctified ingenuity can devise, in order to bring the Gospel to bear on the people and win souls to Christ.

SOME OF THE FRUITS.

(3) The results of such varied instrumentality have, through the blessing of God, been most cheering. Speaking of a series of evangelistic meetings in his church, one minister says:—"I solemnly believe I saw more direct fruit of my ministry that fortnight than during the past years of my work in Glasgow." It is well known that a remarkable time of blessing has been and is still being enjoyed by districts in the west end and suburbs of Glasgow. No doubt, the services of "laymen" have been very prominent and greatly owned of God in this movement. Still, it has been essentially a Church movement, guided by ministers, and conducted on Church lines. The meetings were held in churches, and the happy fruits are now being reaped by churches. One minister connected with the work says:—"Our Young Men's Christian Association has been considerably increased (by the movement), both in numbers and mission enterprise. All our home mission agencies are more vigorous than they have ever been, and now we have no vacancies in our home mission staff, though our mission district contains about 5000 souls."

A second minister, equally prominent in the movement, testifies:—"The impulse received by us has been felt this winter in every department of Christian service, alike in respect of the number of workers, and in respect of the hearty character of their work. I have been distinctly sensible of a generally pervading spirit of earnestness in the congregation. And this has been not only felt, but seen in various ways. At the beginning of the season we had more volunteers for Sabbath-school and similar work than we had posts to assign. There has been a marked improvement also in the attendance at the second diet of Sabbath worship, at the weekly prayer-meeting, and at the Bible-classes. I have further been cheered in the course of visitation, by finding the prevalence of an unusual amount of susceptibility to religious impression, and of a ready desire to converse about personal religion."

Another minister, whose church has lately been the scene of similar work, writes:—"The attendance at our meetings from first to last showed an unusual amount of interest in the great question of salvation. On one Sabbath evening there would be no fewer than about 1300 present."

But it is not only of large audiences we have to speak. Impressions, deep and solemn, were made, as was shown by the large numbers of young men and women who remained to the second meetings. The results have been very blessed. At one communion, which occurred at the close of one of the series of meetings, the attendance was not only larger than usual at that season of the year, but the experience of many was that they never enjoyed a communion season like it. More sat down at the Lord's table for the first time than ever before at the winter communion, and nearly all of these young people professed to have made an out-and-out surrender to Christ. The attendance at the prayer-meeting has nearly doubled, some now attending whom I never saw at the meeting before. Considerable additions have been made to the Sabbath Morning Association, which is at present in a very vigorous and healthy condition. Scarcely a day passes but I am brought face to face with most blessed results. I discovered when visiting, that young men who have got a blessing are praying for the conversion of relatives. In short, these meetings have, by the blessing of God, produced practical and permanent results, and given a decided stimulus to Christian life and work in the congregation."

A MODEL WORKING CHURCH.

Permit me to give one more quotation, which I take from the report of a minister who labours in the midst of one of the most populous and most sunken districts of the city. I may mention that his church is open for Christian work every night, all the year round. "We have seen," he writes, "children of tender years enter the kingdom—youth, frivolous, thoughtless, cruel, debauched, incidentally listening to the Word of God, meeting with the Saviour, and repenting; mature life—lost, depraved, unchained, almost hopeless—recovered and saved; men and women, who were mad upon their idols, are now sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in their right mind. We have seen the wicked forsaking his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts at the Gospel call. We have witnessed the unclean, the impure, the drunkard, and the despairing experiencing a new power—a being transformed by the renewing of their minds. We have known the criminal's cell emptied, the felon leaving the penitentiary, the suicide turning his footsteps from the gates of death, and even the murderer, respited to be saved, and all of them now living and working for the Lord that bought and saved them. We have been many nights on the watch, but not one without the light of God's countenance. We have had many souls in one night, but never a night without a soul......In spiritual results we may say that upwards of one thousand souls have been added to the fellowship of our congregation in the past nine years."

Now, Sir, such stories of work speak for themselves. They are told by ministers in all humility, and with a profound sense of how insufficient every effort made by them and their people has yet been to cope with the needs of this great city. God knows, its needs are clamant and pressing. There is much all around us fitted to appal and sadden. But, from such brief sketches as are given above, is it not obvious that many churches and ministers are striving to do their part in rousing the dead and gathering in the perishing? If the correspondents of The Mail, whose words you have cited, will extend their observation, they will discover that there is hardly a corner of this city where some congregation, with its earnest pastor and devoted workers, is not busy, casting forth the net of earnest Christian activity. And their labours have not been in vain.—Yours, &c., J. B.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie at Inverness.

WE have had a visit from this evangelist, who for three weeks past has laboured with much success and blessing. He came by invitation of the United Evangelistic Committee, composed of ministers and workers from various denominations who have joined with hearty sympathy in the work. As the meetings progressed it was seen that the Lord was working by his Spirit in awakening and saving power. The after-meetings had a quiet solemnity that was deeply impressive, as the workers dealt with the anxious, and the seeking souls found a seeking Saviour.

A special feature of the work is the number of boys and girls who profess to have got a blessing. This may be attributed in part to Mr. Scroggie addressing the children of the Scripture Union each Sabbath morning, and on the last Sabbath a special children's service in the Music Hall, at which nearly 1000 of the young people must have been present, besides parents and friends. The extent of the work was best seen in a social meeting for the young converts, held on Monday, February 28, in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, where an opportunity was given to the workers to take their names and addresses. Considerably over one hundred have thus given in their names as having received the Lord Jesus at this time. There were also several cases at that meeting of anxious ones being set at liberty.

Mr. Scroggie has returned home to Haddington for a rest before beginning a mission at Bristol on the 13th instant. C. W.

SUNDAY CLOSING.—The double number for last week of The Sunday Closing Reporter brings forcibly before us the position of this great question. It shows how greatly Scotland, Ireland, and Wales have benefited by the closing of the public-houses on Sundays, and that the canvass of Liverpool, for instance, proves that a considerable majority of the publicans themselves are in agreement with the rest of the inhabitants in desiring to come under the Act. We are reminded also of the scathing remarks of the Archbishop of York at a great meeting at Manchester, in reference to the rejection by the House of Lords of the Durham Sunday Closing Bill. There is, therefore, strong hope that Mr. Stevenson's Bill for total Sunday Closing throughout the whole of England will this year become law, and thus this Jubilee Year will witness the striking off of the drink chains for at

HOW TO DEAL WITH SCEPTICS.

Equally pleasing to the lecturer and his audience must have been the meeting at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, on Monday evening, last week, between the Open-air Mission preachers and Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A. The former, headed by Mr. Kirkham, their indefatigable secretary, and presided over by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, filled the hall, and, if the lecturer caught anything of inspiration and enthusiasm by having such an audience to listen to him, he returned all with interest. Whilst the preachers got many a hint that will doubtless serve them in good stead, any sceptic who may have been present would certainly have felt that, while there was no pretension that every question or doubt could be fully answered, his chosen positions were turned, and his favourite arguments completely undermined.

Mr. Hastings commenced by saying that every out-door worker naturally meets sceptics. We meet them because we go where they are; and there is no better way of catching fish than by going where they are. There are various ways of dealings with sceptics. We have to deal with multitudes of working men of the rising generation, whose minds are being polluted with what professional sceptics are writing and saying. On a single table in a reading-room he had seen 250 publications devoted to the dissemination of infidelity. Infidel literature is being scattered by the hundred thousand, not only here, but in India and every country where English civilisation is going. The question for us is not what is to become of the Bible or of Christianity, but what is to become of those who are living without those comforts, and dying without those hopes which we enjoy. These men we wish to reach, and benefit and save.

But some say, We do not go out to debate. Very true. We are satisfied with our position; and a grand thing it is when a man is satisfied, when he can say with Paul, "I know in whom I have believed." Old John Leland used to preach in certain places regularly, and he used to borrow from the neighbours a chair on which to stand. One day an infidel began speaking about all sorts of things, and Leland sat down on the chair and patiently listened. When the man stopped, he asked, "Have you got through?" "Yes." Then he quietly picked up his chair and walked on. Sometimes that is the best way of dealing with those who will persist in putting all manner of questions. But it is not always a safe or right thing to ignore objections or questions. Sometimes it looks as if the case went by default, and sometimes men are confirmed in their scepticism by a silence which is dishonouring to the Master. Nor is it wise to hold up to ridicule the faults and failings of sceptics. That does not prove anything. Even amongst those whom Christ had chosen, there was a traitor, and that particular type of apostolic succession is to be found in the Church even now. On the other hand, we should stand our ground, and be always ready to give a reason for the hope that is in us. We are to say with the Apostle, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation." It may be the duty of some to imitate the example of Paul who disputed daily in the market place, and talked with as many as would talk with him. When he stood on Mars Hill, he did not revile the people because of their idolatry, but he said, "I see you are a very religious people; you have a good many altars about here, and there is one to the unknown God. Now I will tell you something of Him." So he got on the sunshiny side of their hearts, and preached Jesus Christ to them before he let them go. Our Master understood how to deal with those who continually beset Him with others were constantly coming to Him with questions, but they always got enough of it before they got through. He answered them sometimes with another question, as when He asked, "The baptism of John, whence was it? From heaven or of men?" They saw at once they were in a dilemma, and not liking either horn, replied, "We cannot say." And from that time forth no man durst ask Him any more questions.

The way in which men speak affects very much their testimony. "We speak the things that we know." If a man knows that his own heart has been changed, that he is living a new life, if he feels within him the power of that new life, he will speak from his heart and men will take knowledge of him that he has been with Jesus. A local preacher, when undergoing an examination in theology, was asked, "How do you prove the divinity of Christ?" "By the power of Christ in my own soul," he replied. This was good proof for him and for all who knew him before he was converted. An infidel might say he did not believe such evidence, but after all, infidels do not always say the truth. "It is safe to act on this, that every unbeliever has a human heart, and that he has his full share of the sorrows of humanity. If you believe that a sceptic enjoys peace or rest of mind, I can only say that I am surprised at your credulity. He says he does, but I don't believe it; and I know that many have turned Queen's evidence."

The lecturer then dealt with a large number of the questions that sceptics are so fond of bringing forward. He showed that if they refused to accept the statements of Scripture with regard to some points which, as they say, they cannot understand, it is equally impossible to understand many of the operations of nature. Scripture, also, is grievously mis-quoted by them, and it is always well to ask them to refer to the passage objected to. The story of the Fall is rejected; but pain and sorrow, thorns and thistles, sin and death cannot be got rid of. When our Lord was upon earth sceptics raged about the resurrection; He said, "Lazarus come forth." They railed and murmured: He opened the eyes of the blind and the ears of the deaf, He healed the sick. They sought his life, but the common people heard Him gladly. The Saviour was a teacher, but He was much more. He also said to his people, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Said an officer once when ordered off on some perilous work, "Commander, let me have a grasp of your conquering hand." So should we go every day to our great Captain for a grasp of his conquering hand, and then, strong in his strength, we shall be able to overcome through Him who is more than conqueror.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—A public meeting in aid of this Mission was recently held at Eastbourne. After addresses by Major-General Tulloch and Lady Sebright, Mr. D. Spencer (secretary) spoke of what had been done in that town, where the work is progressing splendidly. The Mission at present reaches between 60,000 and 80,000 of the 367,000 railway servants in the United Kingdom, and at only about 160 of the 36,000 railway stations are its meetings held, so that there is still much land to be possessed. Mr. Spencer appealed to Christians of all denominations to help in extending the work. Over 4000 railway servants have joined the "Railway-men's Christian Association." As to the results, a great many are Christians and total abstainers.

HAM-YARD SOUP KITCHEN AND HOSPICE.—This institution ministers not only to the peripatetic wanderers of the streets, but to the necessities of many requiring help for a considerable time. Families in need are supplied with soup on alternate days during a whole month by a system of relief by recommendation and registration which is found to work exceedingly well. Nearly 3000 families were thus sustained during last year. Coal and other help is also rendered. The soup-kitchen, which can turn out 175 gallons of soup a day, is now working to its utmost capacity. In the Hospice 269 men were entertained, and the average duration of their stay was 15 nights each, while 111 were permanently benefited, either by employment being found for them, or in other ways. The Home is in Ham-yard, Great Windmill-street, W., and the secretary, Mr. H. Seymour

SURE MERCIES.

"I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David."—Isa. lv. 3.

When the stormy winds of trouble
  Round about us loudly roar,
Daily cares their weight redouble,
  Hands are weak and hearts are sore;
See, how brightly shines the promise,
  Which no shadows can obscure,
"I will give you," saith Jehovah,
  "David's mercies sure."

When temptation's fears assail us,
  Doubt and darkness reign within,
Earthly help can nought avail us,
  To redeem our souls from sin:
Hark! for 'tis our Father's promise,
  To the erring, weak, and poor,
"I will give you," saith Jehovah,
  "David's mercies sure."

When our loved ones here are taken
  To the mansions of the blest,
When our own frail tent is shaken,
  Ere we enter into rest;
Then how sweet our Father's promise,
  Which for ever shall endure,
"I will give you," saith Jehovah,
  "David's mercies sure."

MOVEMENT IN BRAZIL.

A remarkable work has all at once sprung up in this province of Rio Grande do Sul. On Jan. 13 there arrived here Rev. George W. Chamberlain, for twenty years missionary of the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions in the province of São Paulo. He came as a commissioner of his Presbytery to organise the Presbyterian Church of Rio Grande. I had requested the Presbytery at their last meeting to take this Church under its care, and to send me a helper, as my health had broken down to such an extent that I was hardly able to speak.

Rev. Manoel Antonio de Meneses, late pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Lisbon, was requested to come and help me. On December 31 Mr. Meneses arrived, and at once attracted the believers by his sound, earnest, evangelical preaching. Two weeks later Mr. Chamberlain arrived, and the next day began his work. We started a daily prayer-meeting to entreat the Lord to go before us.

Mr. Chamberlain is a man of continuous prayer, and of deep reverence for God's Holy Word. He will take a little child in his arms, and teach it a hymn. He will take a poor ignorant black by the hand, and teach him to pray. No wonder that he attracts the attention of the people. He both sings and preaches.

The meetings were held with much success in various places, and I came to the conclusion that God had sent Mr. Chamberlain to this province to do a great work as an evangelist. Mr. Chamberlain will preach this week again in Rio Grande, and then spend some time in Pelotas, Bagé, and Porto Alegre. Brethren, remember us in your prayers; and those who wish to know more about our work please confer with Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, London.

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN SCOTLAND.—In the report of an interview, on his visit to Scotland, given in The British Weekly, Dr. Parker said:—"I was never so deeply impressed with the possibility of union as I was during this visit. Established, Free, United Presbyterian, Congregationalists, Evangelical Union, Wesleyans, Baptists, were all represented on the platforms. Such a union would be almost impossible in England. Everywhere I saw a disposition towards mutual approach and general confidence, as among Christians. There was, indeed, a Pentecostal feeling in all the meetings, which was altogether too lofty and too sacred to admit of anything like sectarian assertion, either in temper or attitude. Union and Scotland will be terms which

PERILS BY EARTHQUAKE.

Those of our young readers who have been reading about the earthquakes in France, may be interested by the following graphic account, written by Rev. Dr. Inglis, missionary at Aneityum, in the New Hebrides, and which appears in his book* just published :—

On the 28th of March, 1875, we were startled by a very severe earthquake, followed immediately by a tidal wave, which raised the sea ten or eleven feet above its ordinary level at spring-tides. At our station the sea rose about four feet higher than during the hurricane of 1873, when the Dayspring was lost. It was not merely the height to which it rose, but the force with which it rolled in, that rendered it so formidable. It covered all the low land of Aname, the district on which our houses stood. It broke open every door, and rushed into every house. It made large breaches in the walls of the church, and broke completely down one-half of the outer walls of the Teachers' Institution, a building seventy feet long, and its walls ten feet high. It broke open the front door of our dwelling-house, and rushed in two feet deep through the lobby, although the floor was raised two feet above the ground. The sea rose round the whole island, and did serious damage at every exposed situation. . .

On Sabbath evening, the 28th of March, we had retired to rest between nine and ten o'clock. About a quarter-past eleven we were awakened by an earthquake. It was heavy for earthquakes there. It would have been considered a very moderate one in New Zealand—at least, in Wellington. It was, however, unusually long. I thought, and others thought the same, that it must have been more than a minute, and it had a peculiarly alarming motion. After it was over I rose and went through the house, but, so far as I could observe, nothing was injured. I went out. The natives were all aroused, and out of doors, too. It was a beautiful, clear, calm night; not a breath of wind was blowing; nothing was heard but the usual sound of the reef; while the sea seemed quiet and still as a sleeping infant. A lovelier night could not have been witnessed.

I returned to the house and went to bed, hoping that the disturbance for the night was over; but in about fifteen minutes after the earthquake we heard a sound in the distance. My wife said, "What sound is that?" I said, "I think it is a gust of wind coming through the trees"—no uncommon thing on calm nights. "It is not wind, that," she said; and, springing out of bed, she looked out at the eastern window, in the direction whence the sound was coming. "There is not a leaf moving," she said. The sound was increasing, and she hurried to the door. I sprang up after her. As she opened the back-door she saw one of our natives coming out of their house just opposite to ours, and she called out, "Yamin, what sound is that?" "It is the sea, Misi," he said; "run, run, Misi, run." She called out to me to make haste. He took her by the hand, just as she was, with a sheet which she had accidentally wrapped around her. Fear added wings to her feet, and, under the young man's guidance, in a few moments she had cleared both the back-yard and the back-garden, broken down the reed fence, and gained a slight elevation beyond. They saved their distance and no more, the sea just touched their feet before they got out of its reach. They were there joined by others, mostly women and children, and thence threaded their way through the bush to our cottage, nearly half a mile distant, where they were fairly beyond the reach of the sea.

In the meantime I had turned back, but only for a few seconds, to draw on a pair of trousers, and experienced a very striking illustration of our Saviour's admonition (Mark xiii. 16), "Let him that is in the field not turn back again to take up his garment." These few moments proved a dangerous, and might have been a fatal, delay; the sea was in the bedroom before I got out of it, and I had to pass through something like the waters seen in the prophet's vision. At the threshold the waters were to the ankles; when I had gone, not a thousand, but only thirty paces, the waters were to the knees; and when I had gone only thirty more, the waters were nearly to the loins, and running in a strong current. In the middle of the back-yard I met our principal native man, carrying his step-daughter on his shoulder; he took hold of my arm, and we waded together till we reached the back part of the yard, and got hold of a native house, in which was lying an elderly woman, the widow of one of our teachers, and who was nearly blind. Mrs. Inglis had called out and aroused her as she passed the house; but, poor woman! she could do nothing. In a moment the sea was at her door, which was shut, and to open it would have been to let in the enemy faster than he was coming; but she wisely sat up in her bed, and left herself in the hands of God. We stood still, and held on by her house, as we could do nothing better. In a short time the worst was over; the waters rapidly abated, and in five minutes the sea had returned to its wonted channels. Immediately thereafter, all the men near us came into the premises to ascertain our condition, and render whatever assistance might be needful. After seeing that there was no returning waves of any consequence, I followed with the other natives to Lolan-napjis, where we spent a safe but rather anxious night.

From that time for more than three weeks there was not a day in which there were not one or more shocks. During the first ten days they amounted to upwards of a hundred; a good many of them were rather sharp shocks, but none of them doing any damage. ..On Monday morning, when daylight revealed the effects of the earthquakes and the wave, the scene on the premises was one of great desolation. Every house was more or less a ruin, and every place was covered more or less with rubbish and débris. ...The extent of the damage done to our walls may be judged of when I mention that, as near as I could calculate, we had to put up anew four thousand feet of wattle and plaster. The sea had entered every house on our premises on Aname, and every room in every house, with the exception of our bath-room; the wave had spent its force just before it reached it. All the matting on our floors was saturated with mud and soaked with sea water; the amount of washing and cleaning that had to be performed was almost fubulous. Chests and boxes had been knocked about in all directions, and the most of their contents had been injured by salt water. My boat had been carried out to sea, and brought back again towards the shore, but it was so much injured that I had to break it up. Nearly all our reed fences were laid prostrate, and one-half of them carried completely away; while our bananas, which nearly half fed our natives, did not yield more than a third of their usual produce for more than nine months afterwards.

⁂ The touching appeal from a Hindu girl which appeared in our last issue was published originally in the L.U.S. Chronicle of December last. It is not an actual narrative, but represents the condition of young women in India, described by one who knows them well.

SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY.

Emigration presents to men able and willing to work a prospect of certain and well-remunerated employment. But the question with many is, how to provide the money required, before it is possible to set foot on board ship. This Society is established with the object not only of overcoming this initial difficulty by small grants of money to suitable applicants, but of looking after them at the other side. This is done by means of voluntary agents, who secure work for those sent out, and who are entrusted with a limited fund for the maintenance of emigrants until work is found. The result is that of 214 emigrants sent to Canada last year, employment was found for every one.

A fair illustration of the difference between the two sides of the sea is supplied by the case of a man who last winter walked from London to Lincolnshire to get work on a peat moss at one shilling per day. On arriving in Canada, he immediately found employment at the rate of 12s. 6d. per day. Many such cases are mentioned in the report, which also states, that besides those sent to Canada, about 150 were assisted to go to Australasia and South Africa. Rev. R. Mackay (the secretary) visited Canada last year, and there is at the present moment employment there for over seven hundred men and women at the disposal of the committee. This will bring hope to many struggling ones, and stimulate also the efforts of those who are interested in them. The office of the Society is at 50, Fleet-lane, Farringdon-street, E.C.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

The new report of this truly remarkable work puts in the foreground the purchase of 100,000 copies of Salkinson's Hebrew New Testament, published by the Trinitarian Bible Society, and for the free circulation of which amongst the Jews in Russia it is hoped Government permission will be obtained. The Mission has been wonderfully sustained by the freewill offerings of believers. Dr. Dixon, superintendent of the Medical Mission, and Mr. Adler, give many interesting remarks of patients and others, showing that not a few have accepted Jesus as the Messiah, and how earnestly many are considering the facts presented to them in a comparison of Christianity with Judaism.

The meetings in Wellclose-square, and in various parts of the country, have been productive of much spiritual blessing—of great searching of heart; while the night-school, with 157 children on the books, and other agencies, are exercising on the minds of large numbers of the Lord's ancient people a healing and restoring influence. There were somewhat over 5000 attendances at the various services and meetings in Wellclose-square during the past year, and this exclusive of the eighty Jewesses who gather weekly in the same rooms. The report, while of course giving an idea of the difficulties to be encountered in this work, will be very cheering to all who pray for the peace of Israel. Copies may be had from Rev. J. Wilkinson, 79, Mildmay-road, N.

Mr. Wilkinson writes to us as follows:—Our brethren, Baron and Barnett, are now in full work, distributing the Hebrew New Testament and preaching Christ amongst the Jews in Austria, Hungary, Galicia, and Bohemia. We have most interesting tidings from them, though they experience some opposition. We ask the Lord's remembrancers to pray that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified and that opposition may be overruled for the furtherance of the Gospel. Mr. Halbullion has left for similar work among the Jews in North Africa, where Mr. Mercadier, of the Kabyle Mission, will assist him. We ask prayer for these brethren also.

A SWISS HOME FOR EPILEPTICS.

BY A VISITOR.

A ride of twenty minutes by train brought us from Zürich to the Rüti, one of the last spurs of the higher mountain ridges, which present small plateaux, chosen sites for the dwellings of the opulent. A steep ascent leads to the summit: here the lovely prospect is charming beyond expression. Approaching the stately Home with its wide verandahs and large balconies, standing on the summit of the Rüti, we noticed how wisely its construction was planned to secure all the benefit possible from a southern aspect, the extensive woods of the Zürichberg at the back forming a protection from the north-east. Beautiful plantations and gardens form the immediate surroundings, studded with many large trees, which offer cool retreats during the hot summers.

This beautiful place is a home for some of the most afflicted of God's family on earth. The director and his wife received us very cordially. The right wing is occupied by the boys, the left by the girls. We were first conducted to the light, cheerful sitting-room of the older girls. At the long table in the centre nine girls, from ten to seventeen years old, were busy sewing or knitting, and doing their work well. Only two of them betrayed the presence of disease by their vacant gaze, the others looked quite intelligent, though the brightness and vivacity of youth was absent. In summer the lofty verandah is used for work that the invigorating air may be enjoyed. The dormitory is both light and lofty. A sick-room and a wardrobe-room are attached to each company. How carefully the garments have to be kept in repair may be inferred from the fact that a missing string or button may provoke an attack. The poor are clothed by the Institution, the others bring their own clothing.

Broad, well-lighted stairs lead to the second story. The same arrangements are carried out here for a younger group. Seven little children, with their loving "sister," were occupied making many pretty things in the manner of the Kindergarten system. The presence of their dolls, a beautiful dolls' house, toys and pictures, all conduce to pass the time merrily, and to make ennui impossible. In the third story is the schoolroom. An hour every morning and afternoon is devoted to ordinary school routine. Religious instruction is given by the clergyman of the parish. Much time is devoted to outdoor exercise as a principal factor in recovery.

The right wing, inhabited by the boys, is constructed on the same plan. The older boys were occupied in book-binding, a master teaching and superintending them. The sound of the bell calls the whole household to the dining-room on the ground floor. Order, peace, and thankfulness prevail. In this room the united morning and evening devotions are also held. Such a happy company they looked; the sick and the sound together. Unlimited sympathy given on the one side, and implicit obedience on the other, make the complex working of home, school, hospital, workshop, practicable and easy, and simple reliance on the God of all strength and the Saviour of all, is the mainspring of this work of love.

The patients of the happy little company in that dining-room were at the time of my visit at their best; not one was laid aside. The doctor attends every day to inspect, advise, and prescribe. He takes such a hearty interest in their pursuits that they all look forward with pleasure to his daily visits. His scientific knowledge, the diet, the baths, the attendants' loving care and forethought, the efforts to keep body and mind cheerfully employed, all are means of healing. This peaceful Home, girt about with the perfection of beauty, has been built, and is supported, by gifts in memory of dear ones fallen asleep. From all parts of the world these sweet, sacred offerings contribute to the maintenance of the poor of this afflicted family. The ample pay-makes no difference in their treatment. Arrangements can be made, however, to receive patients of any age whose means and social position make private rooms and attendants desirable.

OUR BRITISH REDCOATS.

Dear Sir,—I should like to express my thankfulness to the readers of The Christian for the sum of £59 18s. contributed during the past twelve months, and to remind them that, by God's blessing, our Institute and workers at Alexandria have been the means of checking the vice and drunkenness there among our soldiers and sailors. Before Mr. Caine's visit to Egypt, I sent my manager, Mr. Tufnell, to tell him what he had himself seen in Alexandria and Cairo, and what we were proposing to do. There is urgent need for Government to take some righteous action; but meanwhile we could not refrain from helping our men, civilian residents as well as soldiers and sailors. It is not too much to say that our Institute, opened two years ago, has been a blessing to thousands. The entire cost was £16,000, of which £2000 has still to be raised. The establishment of the Institute at Alexandria still further crippled our resources for home work, many donors being unable to give for both objects, so that I am also in debt with the Portsmouth Institute. Had sufficient help been sent we should have gone forward to open a smaller Home at Cairo, but this will now be done by the Wesleyan minister there, Mr. Jackson, whom I should be pleased to help if I could.

But our mercies far surpass our needs. Never had we such a year of blessing. At the last—full meetings, souls saved (numbers of dear children among them), converts growing in grace, love and increase in our band of workers, spiritual blessing on our households.

I should like to append part of a soldier's first letter from Ceylon. This man was once among the vilest, and was converted to God in this Institute. He has since been an earnest, happy, useful Christian, and we miss him very much.

Yours very sincerely, Sarah Robinson.

Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

(Extracts from Soldier's Letter.)

"My wife, I don't think, will ever forget her first experience of troopship life, for the accommodation for the women was most wretched. We were in a very severe storm after leaving Ireland, which lasted for three days. We had some happy times on board. I soon found out several Christian men, and often, while walking up and down the deck, we were able to say—

My Saviour comes and walks with me,
And sweet communion here have we.

"We looked in vain for a quiet place on board, where we could hold little prayer and Bible-meetings; there was not even a corner to be got. I went to the Chaplain, and asked him if he could get a place for us; but, instead of doing what he could to help us, as one would have thought he would have been glad to do, he made all sorts of excuses, such as it was too hot, &c. I am very sorry to say it, but he thought much more of smoking and drinking, dancing on deck and playing cards, than of the spiritual needs of the men placed under his charge.

"As we could get no help from him, we resolved to have an 'open air' on the 'hurricane deck,' and so we did. Soon we had quite a crowd of men around us, who hardly knew what to make of it; but we (gaining courage as we went on singing) soon were making the air ring with 'I do believe, I will believe,' followed by 'We're bound for the land of the pure and the holy,' with the chorus, 'Will you go?' Then the Lord gave us a few words to speak to them about the wonderful love of Jesus, and we closed the meeting with the dear old hymn, 'Abide with me,' and 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,' in which our congregation joined who helped us to sing yielded his young heart to God, which gave us much joy.

"After this, we who knew the Lord met on the upper deck nearly every evening in a little spot where there was not much traffic, and it was during these meetings that two more sailor-boys gave their hearts to God. These three lads, I believe, were in real earnest; they all three left the ship at Aden to join the East India Squadron. What gives me hope of these lads is that a Christian man used to tell me that as he went round the ship to see things straight for the 'rounds,' he used to see these lads kneeling down and reading their Bibles. This man, a ship's corporal, has gone with them to the same ship; he could not attend our meetings as his duty prevented him.

"A young man, in the band of the 91st, also professed to give himself to the Lord. There was, too, a young officer on board, a nice young Christian, belonging to the Royal Engineers. I heard about him while attending an officers' Bible-class at Malta. I suppose the officer who took the class told him about me, for, after leaving Malta, he sent for me, and when I told him about our 'open air' gathering, he was very pleased, and expressed a wish to come and join us in our next meeting, which he did. This meeting was on the Sunday before we left, and it was 'good to be there.' The two or three hundred men around us listened attentively, and we trust many of them received into their hearts the blessed truths that were spoken, and sung.

"I am sorry to say there seems no lively Christian work going on here—everybody seems so dead. One thing is very sweet to know, that is, that friends are praying for us at home."

BIRMINGHAM WAIFS.

A circular just issued, in reference to Emigration work, supplies information of a particularly satisfactory character. Passing from the well-known and evil surroundings, with which we are only too familiar, and from the Home at Birmingham, where the children have twelve months' intermediate training, we are enabled to trace the conditions of their new life in Canadian homes. These conditions are evidently in favour of their growth in all that constitutes an honest, self-reliant manhood. In Canada, we read, there is no such thing as squalor; there is far more thrift, more freedom and independence, and less of all that tends to undermine the moral strength of the individual than in England. No better field could be found for placing the children rescued from the slums at home.

Last year 115 children were sent from the Birmingham Refuge, and the demand was about three times as large as the supply. In the fourteen years since its foundation, from 1218 boys and girls here received and trained, 1126 have been taken to Canada, and of these the large majority are doing very well, only a few having turned out unsatisfactory. Mr. W. Auston is the secretary.

GERMAN EVANGELICAL CONFEDERATION.—From Ouchy, Lausanne, Pastor E. T. Goergens, D.D., has issued a manifesto to the Christians of Germany announcing the formation of a Protestant Confederation to meet the insidious advances of Romanism in that country. Evangelical Christianity in Germany, says the manifesto, is in a sad state of dissension compared with the compact unity of Rome, whilst the churches are connected by so loose a tie that the idea of oneness is well-nigh dead. The materialism and indifference into which whole classes of the people are sunk, also prepare the way for Romish encroachments. The mission of the Confederation is twofold. It seeks on the one hand to combat the growing power of Rome, to protect evangelical interests, and to stretch forth the hand to all endeavours of true Catholicism and Christian freedom in the heart of the Catholic Church. On the other hand it seeks to strengthen evangelical unity, to cherish internal Church peace, and to arouse mutual sympathy between the different State Churches in NORTHERN ECHOES.

THE LUTHER OF THE EDINBURGH PULPIT.

DR. WHYTE, of Free St. George's, has left his work for a week or two to seek needed rest and strength. This has been a winter of incessant activity for him. In addition to two sermons each Sabbath, and a certain amount of pastoral visitation, he conducted two Bible-classes, one for young men and another for young women, and the prayer-meeting in which his striking addresses on Bunyan's "Grace Abounding" were delivered. His power in Edinburgh is increasing. His sermons, full of Puritan truth clothed in the language and interpenetrated by the culture of the day, attract very large congregations. Many of his hearers visibly wince under his heart-searching appeals and fearless expositions of the eternal laws of righteousness. They often complain that he speaks too plainly, but justifications of his plain-speaking are not wanting.

One such justification he introduced with telling effect into a recent sermon. During the week a lady who was dying sent for him. He obeyed the summons. She greeted him with, "Do you remember a sermon you preached fifteen years ago on 'The Reconciliation of Jacob and Esau?'" He admitted that he had no distinct recollection of it. She went on, "I have reason to remember it. It did me good. I entered your church that Sabbath with a heart full of hatred against my brother. He had taken a step which grieved his family, and we disowned him. I was very angry; but I was also very sorry, because I loved my brother. But my pride made me bitter in my hatred. Your subject caught my attention, and I was compelled to listen to you. Your direct and fearless words about reconciliation opened my eyes to the sinfulness of my hatred. My cold heart thawed, and the tears came to my eyes. While you were preaching, I vowed that if God spared me for half an hour, I would go and be reconciled to my brother. And I did it. We have been friends ever since. We have often disagreed, but he has been a dear brother to me. I am now dying. but I could not die till I had sent for you, and thanked you for that sermon." This incident may encourage other faithful preachers, as it did encourage the man who is now becoming known as the Luther of the Edinburgh pulpit.

THE DRILL HALL BREAKFASTS.

Few visitors to Edinburgh, who take an interest in philanthropic work, miss going to see the Drill Hall breakfast for the outcasts and homeless on Sabbath morning. That enterprise has been carried on for the last twelve years with growing success. The good it has done can never be estimated. It ministers to the bodies as well as to the souls, of hundreds who come under no other influence that can help them to a better life. The committee in charge of this agency have decided to erect new mission buildings in the Cowgate district, where the breakfasts and other branches of the work will be continued. In this way the hold on the lapsed will be strengthened; their friends will come to them, instead of they having to go to them. The advantages of the new move are evident, and cannot fail to increase the efficiency of this remarkable mission, which is, to our thinking, thoroughly Christ like in its aims and methods. We may state that the buildings will cost £4500, and are to be begun at Whitsuntide.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN THE HIGHLANDS.

Principal Rainy, speaking at the Free Church Commission last week on Dr. Somerville's mission tour in the Highlands, said the enterprise in which the venerable Moderator is engaged was remarkable in its idea and in its execution. His addresses have been in every instance listened to by large crowds, and much blessing has accompanied the words spoken. Since July he has preached 212 times. This is astonishing, when the advanced age of the preacher, and the fatigu-mind. A full account of the mission cannot be had before May, when Dr. Somerville will address the Assembly; but this can be confidently said even now, that the wonderful vitality and thrilling eloquence of the veteran evangelist have never been seen to better advantage than in his Highland campaign. His ardent love to souls has given him a strength which is as the strength of ten men. Wherever he goes he carries the live coal of consecrated activity; and, from reports which reach us, we learn that chilled labourers are warmed into enthusiasm through contact with him. SIGMA.

STORIES OF THE SEA AND LAND.

A SCANDINAVIAN SAILOR'S HOME.

SOME sixteen years ago a Swedish sailor left his home, his wife, and two young children, to seek their bread upon the waters. He crossed and re-crossed the ocean in safety many times; but, alas! those who had the first claim on him never heard from him; they knew not whether he was living or dead. Each time he landed in the port of London he fell amongst thieves, who stripped him of all he had. At length, after fourteen years, one evening he found his way to the Strangers' Rest, in Ratcliff-highway, and entered the room where Miss Hedenstrom speaks so winningly night after night to her Scandinavian brethren. His heart was touched; he knew himself a sinner; he fell at the feet of the Saviour, and found peace.

At once he thought of those nearest and still dearest to him. He spoke to the kind lady who had brought him to himself; said he wished her to write to his wife, and gave her £50 to enclose in the letter. He had just been paid off. But where should she write to? He knew not his wife's address, unless, indeed, she were still in the old home. To one known and trusted who was then sailing for Sweden, Miss Hedenstrom committed the precious letter, and he found the faithful wife. She had toiled for her children, till, five years previously, her health had completely given way, and now she was on a sick bed. But when the messenger made known his errand, "Do you really say," she cried, "my darling husband is living? Oh, thank God!" She thought nothing of the money, but sat up in the bed, praising God for his goodness. A short time after, the husband, renewed and strengthened in spirit, returned from another voyage, then to go to his wife and children, with whom he still is.

Another Scandinavian sailor came under the same Divine influence, shining forth from a woman's heart filled with the love of God, and therefore expressing itself in love to her brethren. His heart was changed. As the light of Divine truth shone into that heart, he felt that, having been a deserter from the Dutch navy, he must surrender himself, though knowing well the severe punishment that would be his — six months' imprisonment and seven years' service under the flag. The prison officials bore witness to the Christian spirit he ever manifested in that dungeon, a spirit utterly free from murmuring; however severe the hardships, the joy of the Saviour's presence shone out on his face. At the end of his term of imprisonment, prayer having been made for him continually, he was allowed to go free. Miss Hedenstrom has just had the pleasure of receiving a letter from him, which well shows how complete is his trust in Jesus, and how full of love to Him his heart is.

These are illustrations of the kind of work carried on during the last six years and a half by Miss Hedenstrom, evening by evening, at the Strangers' Rest, where she nightly speaks to from 100 to 150 Scandinavian sailors; and in the day at 88, 90, Leman street, Whitechapel. Wonderful stories of the sea and of heroism on the land may be learnt by a visit to this Scandinavian Sailors' Home. Here, during the period referred to, many thousands of sailors have found, not only a shelter, but a home in the true tinually coming and going, staying here whilst on shore, are true Christians, and exercise a blessed influence both in the Home and when at sea. Miss Hedenstrom delights to let it be known that much of the blessed result, happily visible in lives spent in God's service, is due to the earnest dealing of these converted men with their mates.

The demands of the work are great indeed. There is the office work involved in taking charge of the men's money, and other matters; there is the correspondence with the men's families and with the men themselves, all of which Miss Hedenstrom herself undertakes. Then there is the supervision, the seeing to the meals, &c. But great also is the reward. Some portion of it, tangible and very pleasing to the eye, is to be found in the many presents and curios brought from foreign lands by "her boys." Other portion, far more precious, and yielding a heart satisfaction which it is impossible to measure, comes from the renewed and consistent lives of these hardy sons of the sea.

As stated in our impression of February 10, in which some details of the work were given, removal to a new Home is imperatively called for. A fine site has been secured near the West India Dock gates, and, therefore, a very convenient one; here there will be room for 150 men, with every convenience for their accommodation. The total cost, including site, will be somewhere about £10,000; of this sum about £5000 has been contributed, so that there is ample opportunity for the exercise of practical sympathy with this splendid work. It is gratifying to know that those in high places are interested in it. The Queen of Sweden and the Princess of Wales have each shown, by a handsome contribution, that they appreciate the devotion of their working sister.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.

FOR some time past, seeing the numbers of sailors converted, it has been my prayer that they should be united into a band, in order to their being made more useful in service for the Master. Last week some of the men proposed thus to be united; after a season of prayer, they strongly desired to have their names enrolled as members of an association for mutual help in service for the Lord. Another meeting was held, at which several Christian captains and other friends were present. The great necessity for such a band was felt by all present, and they offered themselves as members of this band, to be called "The Christian Lifeboat Crew." They purpose, in the strength of the Lord, to do all they possibly can to win souls for Christ.

A conference will be held on Tuesday, April 5, at the Sailors' Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, London, E. Christians are kindly invited. R. CHILD.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—In this month's Good Words there is an exceedingly interesting article from the capable pen of Mr. T. Paul, on "Life among the North Sea Trawlers." The portrayal of the scenes which make up a great part of the life of these hardy fishermen is most vivid, and will, we trust, awaken wide-spread sympathy for the work of the Mission. This month's Toilers of the Deep, the organ of the Mission, is also of exceptional interest.

BIBLE and COLPORTAGE SOCIETY of IRELAND.—Reports of work just received from colporteurs in the West of Ireland show the difficulty with which it is carried on. Sometimes, during long journeys from home, it is not easy to find a lodging. A great number of those visited are Roman Catholics, whom political troubles have somewhat embittered. Yet there is much readiness on their part to listen to the Word of God, and to accept its teachings, rather than that of the priest. One man, asked to buy a Douay Testament, said, if he had the book he would not need the priest. A good many Douay Testaments, Bibles, &c., are sold every month. One colporteur reports that in his district a "Christian Workers' Band" has been formed, which goes from place to place holding evangelistic meetings, and that many have been led to Jesus. "The country seems alive," he adds, "and the Spirit is working powerfully with us."

THE BIBLE FOR THE WORLD.

We are favoured by Mrs. Robertson (1, Oakhill-park, Hampstead, N.W.), of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, with some extracts from the letters of her correspondents. Our readers will see how true it is that the entrance of God's Word giveth light to the soul; and the facts stated will afford much encouragement to all who are seeking, in any way, to scatter with generous hand these leaves of the tree of life, which are for the healing of the nations:—

ALGERIA.

The soldiers interest me much in my distribution of the Scriptures. They carry the Gospel with them into the deserts and wherever they are sent, and as they have no other book to read they read the Bible.

PALESTINE.

We have a servant, a devoted member of the Greek Church, who asked me for a Bible; and we often see her reading it. A short time ago her brother and his wife and children visited her, and they spent the whole afternoon reading chapter after chapter. Her brother was so interested that he besought her to give it to him, but this she would not do, I need not say I was glad to furnish him with one. A Jewess, who is a remarkably intelligent woman and who is half "persuaded to be a Christian," was much gratified on receiving a Hebrew Bible.

FRANCE.

I thank you for furnishing me with the means of giving the Holy Scriptures to the poor workmen. I am more and more convinced that it is one of the most powerful means of saving souls. Again, yesterday evening, a poor infirm workman gave his testimony, saying, "It is when I have been reading the Holy Scriptures that my soul is drawn to God, and I read them always when I am in need of comfort." After having visited a village, our fellow-worker is asked to go there again by someone to whom he had given a Testament, and who desires to hear about Jesus.

RUSSIA.

One day our washerwoman begged for a Testament for her sister, who was unhappy with her husband, and said, "I think if only they will read this book in the evening, when he comes home from work, it will be all right." A few weeks after she told me that the husband had changed so much, and her sister was much happier now. About three weeks ago I went to see a friend who has two very wild boys, as soon as they saw me they came, and sitting near me, whispered, "Tell us how to love Jesus?" It seems they love their Testament, and read it daily, and the account of the sacrifice of our Saviour brings tears to their eyes.

SWEDEN.

We met with the Chief of all the prisons in Sweden, a Christian, who was very happy to get Gospels for a Finn and Norwegian who were in prison, and Testaments in English and Swedish, which he had never seen. He was specially pleased, as they often send released prisoners to America.

When my brother is able, he goes with his books into the streets, mostly attracting students and schoolboys, and the Lord has opened doors for us amongst the Jews. Five families of Jews come to our house; we speak and read to them, and give them books to take home with them. Many schoolboys come for books, and some to speak of the one thing needful. The other day at the fair my brother met with a poor confirmed drunkard, who had, five years since, received a book from him and which he then despised; now he wished to be saved, and burst into tears when he recognised him. He was brought home to us, and we prayed with him; he said, when

SPEZIA, ITALY.

Your grant has been the means of sending the Word of God to the most various and distant portions of the globe by means of sailors who leave Spezia, and return after a voyage of two or three years. One of our friends is leaving for China, and will be well supplied with Testaments and Gospels, prior to his departure. Many employed masons and stoneworkers are, through your Society, benefited with a knowledge of the way of salvation, and Sunday-schools also have been greatly blessed thereby.

GOSPEL WORK IN SPAIN.

The report just issued of the Lord's work in connection with the Figueras Mission contains some very interesting items of the evangelistic efforts of Madame Lopez Rodriguez and her energetic husband Don Luis. The following account of how an entrance was gained at Gerona, is illustrative of the encouragements and trials of the way:—

Two hours in the train from Figueras brings you to this quaint old city, with its ancient Roman walls and gateways. Pastor Rodriguez and his colporteur, each laden with portmanteaus filled with Gospels, distributed them right and left along the streets. The market-place was crowded. Sellers and buyers alike received the little books, which soon created quite an excitement. "Who are these persons?" was the general cry. "Spiritualists?" "Freethinkers?" "No, Protestants." "Let us see your books!" "Give me one!" were heard on all sides. Some cried out, "Away with the cursed Protestants and their books! Turn them out of the town," &c. Others, eagerly receiving the Gospels, were very friendly. Don Luis, seeing the crowd was increasing, got hold of a tall fellow, who said, "One of your books, please, sir," as a helper, saying, "Here, good friend, give away this packet as fast as you can," which the man did with evident pleasure. The work done in the market-place, the little party diverged into by-streets, dived into shops and cafés, and left Gospels on the tables and counters.

Then, weary, hot, and dusty, they made their way to the station to get some milk and rolls. A waiter came up and said, in a low tone, to Don Luis, "Are you the Protestant who has been giving away books in the town?" "Yes; why?" "Because I have a book written by you." "What book?" "The Galátus." "I have written no book with that title. Do you mean Gálatus?" (giving the correct pronunciation of St. Paul's Epistle). "Yes, yes; I suppose that is the right way to call it; and you have written it very well."

The pastor then explained who was the true author, which led to an interesting conversation about the great missionary to the Gentiles and the Gospel he proclaimed. At the close, the waiter said that some months ago he had purchased a Bible. The priest hearing of it went to his house, and said that he had come to ask a favour. "I have heard you have bought a Protestant Book." "Yes; a Bible." "Indeed! I much desire to read that book. Will you lend it to me for a few days?" "Yes; but you will return it after that time?" "Certainly! You can come to my house for it."

A week later the man went to ask for his Bible; the priest replied that he had mislaid it, but would look for it. Thus the poor fellow was put off, and never saw his Bible again. Since that time he had been saving up his money to purchase another. The colporteur at once produced his stock, and, with a beaming face, the waiter bought a copy. His duties prevent his attending our meetings, but his wife is always present.

Meanwhile, the priests, knowing the importance, and fearing the results, of such a distribution of the Scripture, gave notice to the Mayor and Town Council that some revolutionists had come to disturb the peace, who should search of the little party, and at length found them at their simple meal. Accosting them suspiciously, but respectfully, they inquired what they had been doing, and the class of publications they had been distributing, &c. Don Luis at once produced from his pocket a copy of the Gospels.

"Protestant books," said the official, gravely. "Do you not know that you have no authority for circulating them, as the Mayor has not given you permission?" "True; but I have what is far better, the Governor's permission. Look at his seals." The guards examined them; and, after a satisfactory inspection, returned the Gospels, and left them.

Thus ended the first day of Gospel work in Gerona. Happy will it be for Spain when, as in England, there will be liberty for preaching in the open air. Meantime, preaching can only be done by hiring halls for evangelistic work. There are many branches of the Mission which we have already brought before our readers. The work has greatly suffered since last summer owing to the protracted illness of Madame Rodriguez; but we are thankful to state that her health is now in a great measure restored. Copies of this interesting little report may be obtained of Rev. J. C. S. Mathias, Whitham House, Harrogate, who is the hon. treasurer of the Mission.

Soldiers at Gibraltar.

The fourth report of the Mission to Mediterranean Garrisons tells of a blessed work going on at Gibraltar and elsewhere. The death of Miss Aimers, a most devoted worker, and beloved by the men, and the large amount of sickness (there being at one time about 500 sick in the hospital, and six funerals a week), had solemnised the hearts of many. They were so willing to hear the Word, always asking when the visitor would come again. The numbers attending the meetings so increased that overflow meetings were held, and after-meetings were crowded. One and another came to Christ, and the little band of believers increased. Many non-commissioned officers came boldly out—"gunners of the Royal Artillery, sailors of the Royal Navy, engineers and linesmen were found by the Good Shepherd."

Several letters from soldiers and others attest the reality of the work. It should be added that in the last week of the year over 150 men attended the different meetings, and twenty signed the pledge. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Osborne, Rysland, Newton-Mearns.

SAILORS' REST, DEVONPORT.—Miss Agnes Weston is endeavouring to complete the purchase of the "Dock Gates Inn," a corner public-house, which, with the two others already purchased, will give a grand site for doubling the size of the Sailors' Rest. All the public-houses at the end of Fore-street are now cleared away, and Miss Weston wants to secure this last, and to go on building. A young sailor boy dying in China said, "Write to Miss Weston, and tell her I've gone home to Jesus, and I learned to give up drink and trust Him at the Devonport Sailors' Rest."

EVANGELICAL MISSION, BIRMINGHAM.—This Mission, which, by the death of Mr. H. F. Pardon, has lost a most generous supporter, is doing an excellent work amongst some of the lowest of the population in Birmingham. By means of its Lifeboat Crew, who go out after ten o'clock at night, visiting the homes of some of the most hopeless drunkards—over one hundred men, and some of the most abandoned women have already been rescued. Amongst others brought to a knowledge of the truth were two Roman Catholics and a Jew. Much good has been done by special missions, conducted by different evangelists. Many open-air meetings are held, good work is being done amongst factory girls, and there is a Mission school, with about six hundred children in attendance, and a flourishing Band of Hope. Soup, bread, and coal have been freely given to the poor of the district during the

"Mercies countless as the sands."

CHRISTIAN Women, can any one of you reckon up the Mercies—national, social, and personal—of which she has been the recipient during the reign of Our Gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria?

Do not countless Mercies call for repeated and ungrudging Thank-offerings to Him and ought not the blessing of giving, which is greater than that of receiving (Acts xx. 35), to be more highly valued than it has ever yet been?

"Who giveth all,"

Let the Royal Jubilee present itself as an opportunity for the expression of your thankfulness, and "send portions" to the spiritually needy.

THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST had been established just three years when Her Majesty ascended the Throne, and it was then the only one in Europe formed for the purpose of taking the Gospel into the seclusion of Eastern Homes, and of telling "The old, old Story" to the women and girls of Asia and Africa. It is the oldest Zenana Society in existence.

Out of gratitude, then, to the King of Kings, Who has for fifty years preserved the Sceptre of this Realm in the hand of a Woman, and out of pity to the millions of heathen women who are still sitting in darkness, Christian Women, her subjects, are invited to send their Thank-offerings to this Society, which the Lord has so long owned and blessed.

And will not Christian Men also join in these gifts? Have they no Mercies to remember connected with their Queen, their Mothers, their Sisters, their Wives, and their Daughters?

Jubilee Thank-offerings and Jubilee Gifts, in loving memory of those who have "gone before," will be gratefully received by the Secretaries.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse . . . . saith the Lord of Hosts."

Honorary Secretaries: Miss E. Rutt, Lower Clapton, E.; Miss L. Hope, 7, Ovington-gardens, S.W.
Secretary: Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W. Cash Secretary: Miss Tait, 68, Wilberforce-road, N.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

"AS WELL FOR THE BODY AS THE SOUL."

Until five years ago upwards of 12,000 smacksmen toiled in the North Sea at all seasons, in all weathers, in constant danger, and not only cut off from the joys and comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid. To-day seven Mission vessels cruise with the fleets (running the same risks, exposed to the same furious gales as the trawlers themselves) in order—

1. That injuries and illness may receive prompt help and healing.
2. That true friends may supplant and banish from the fleets that enemy of the English smacksmen, that pest of the North Sea—the foreign coper, or floating grog shop.
3. That dull and monotonous lives may be cheered and brightened by their presence and ministry.

☛ During the year 1886, more than 3,000 cases of sickness and accidents have been successfully treated in the Dispensary on board the various Mission vessels.

THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH" says:—

"The Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen has been instrumental in making the fishing-grounds too hot for those abominable purveyors of fiery spirit and bad tobacco—the Dutch copers. It cares for the men, and has its reward in their love and gratitude."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

INCIPIENT PHTHISIS (Both Lungs)—
CASE of Mrs. SEWARD, STEPNEY, E.

This patient, who resides at the White Hart, Medland Street, Stepney, came to Coombe Lodge for consultation on June 8 last. Examined by Dr. B.: "Case of Incipient Phthisis attacking the upper lobe of each lung."

She had had congestion of the lungs in the previous January. Since then a cough had become constant, with yellow phlegm, pains behind the sternum, and gradual wasting of flesh. She paid two other visits to Coombe Lodge; continuing the treatment up to the end of the year.

In a letter just received, and dated Jan. 24, her husband writes:—"I am happy to tell you Mrs. Seward has got quite well now. I cannot find words to express my thankfulness to you as the means of restoring her. I shall have great pleasure in recommending your treatment to all I know that are suffering. You are at liberty to make what use you please of this."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MISSION WORK IN MOAB.

The district which in the Old Testament is distinctively known as Moab, is almost entirely isolated from the rest of Eastern Palestine, while of course the Dead Sea keeps it afar off from the civilising influences which now operate in the cities, at least, of Western Palestine. The great wady (now called Mojib), which we know in the sacred volume as Arnon, is like "a great gulf fixed," so that few pass from Medeba southwards; and to go from this city of Kerak to Jerusalem, which I see from my housetop, involves at least a four days' journey, with possible spoliation or even captivity. South of the Arnon the authority of the Sultan is altogether disregarded, and the ruling potentate is the Sheikh of the Mujelli family, a most numerous ilk, as many travellers have sorrowfully proved.

Most tourists are ignorant that in this territory is one of the oldest cities of the world, which, however, I shall not now attempt to describe, merely referring to 2 Kings iii. 25—27, Ps. lx. 9, Isa. xv. 1, as some of the places where it is mentioned. Here dwell (according to the season of the year) from 4000 to 6000 people, or more, who are also the dominant folk for scores of miles around. The great majority are loosely Moslem as far as creed is concerned, but tenaciously Moslem as regards hatred of the outside world. But all through the dark and bitter ages of their cruellest vengeance, a little band of Greek Church Christians have here "kept the faith." Until we came here no effort seems to have been effectually made to help the bodies or the souls, to strengthen, convert, or enlighten these thousands of immortals.

Thrust out from wage-earning in England in the summer of 1883, a brief residence in the Lebanon, a longer stay in Port Said and Alexandria, and three seasons of work among the Easter pilgrims to the Holy City, had to some extent helped me to enter into this corner of the great field, a corner untrodden by any other labourer. A kind donation of £10 more than sufficed for my first journey into the Sheikh's territory, viâ Hebron and the south of the Dead Sea, when the brother of the said Sheikh robbed me of what money he could find, and I returned, to try three months later the northern route. Thus, in October, 1885, the man in authority was reached, and (by Divine influence, I doubt not) a letter at my request was given me, a translation of which may be seen in The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine for January, 1886. The Sheikh, in Oriental style, tells me that the land is mine to do as I please, and if I want anything I am to let him know. Had you space, I would like to reproduce my own application for permission, in which I had asked that, as lovers of the Lord Jesus, my wife and I might be allowed to live among the people of Kerak to help their bodies and souls.

Thus, in the autumn of 1885, the door was opened, and my wife and I prepared to enter; but, we were detained for months, partly by the well-intended but ill-advised hindrances of those who only saw danger and listened not to duty. However, at last, on September 15, we came out from such civilisation as Jerusalem enjoys, the next day crossed the Jordan, and, after more than one test of patience, had climbed to Pisgah's height, passed through the rebuilt ruins of Medeba, descended and ascended the sides of the "great gulf" of Arnon (itself between three and four hours' work), and on Sunday forenoon had just come in sight of Kerak, when one of the numerous family before referred to, with half a dozen belongings, presented himself. A group of Arabs, with steeds and spears, with a couple of dwarfish Europeans, on the edge of a precipice, with a ruined city on the opposite plateau, all engaged in oratory and gesticulation, might, no doubt, make an effective picture, and would be far pleasanter to contemplate than it was to realise the experience. One word which I have written, in one sense, was, however, in another sense, the determining of the conflict:

of all, prayer from friends at home and ourselves on the spot settled the matter; Sheikh Lema'in, at sight of his uncle's missive, at last signified acquiescence; and more than once the owner of the uplifted spear, whose hand had grasped my wife's bridle to lead it away, has since sat at our fireside and drank our English tea.

So, now, here we are, "alone, yet not alone!" four days' journey from any whom we can truly sympathise with as "partakers of like precious faith." Three-fourths of those around us are Moslems, and the other quarter know far more of the priest and the church than of the Saviour and the Bible. From a small stock of medicines we are enabled daily to help those who, up to the present, have been without any such assistance as that which our homœopathic and other remedies can afford. Could my readers but see the poor little wizened infantile faces for which a little dose of Liebig has been the proper medicine, or the writhing form of a girl of twelve or thirteen for whose rheumatism olive oil was rubbed in by my wife, they would not be unthankful that at least one blade of grass is growing where none grew before. Then, too, I can thankfully say that already one copy of the New Testament has been sold, where, probably, none ever was sold before; and, by faith, I see in future years colporteurs going from here across the Arabian plateaux, to scatter thousands of copies where now not one is, probably, to be found. Thirdly, as to educational work: my most advanced pupil in English is the son of the Greek priest; and not long ago the Sheikh (of that Sunday morning) was at our fireside, hearing the Lord's Prayer repeated by this pupil in Arabic, and expressed his delight at it.

But all that is done is but as the drop in the bucket, or the merest initial work; yet, as my wife and myself have no one to assist in any way, it is about as much as we can perform. When these emaciated and ignorant ones come to us we just want to take them in for a day or two into some rough place, like that in which we live (supposed by the people here to be a house), and then feed them, and take the simple care which in many cases would, after a day or two, restore them to more than former health; but medicine in their dirty holes will never do it. We want to see our way to hire a Syrian girl (when one can be found willing to come to Kerak), whose knowledge of Arabic would help my wife in the Bible-reading and spiritual converse to which we look forward. At no distant date I hope to commence such a simple Sabbath service as shall be a new thing for both Moslem and Christian, we trust, in the very highest sense. But for all this both prayer and patience are needed, more of each than can be supposed by those who are not present. The latter must come from ourselves; but the former we do ask that readers of The Christian will offer on our behalf before the throne of grace.

William Lethaby.

Kerak, Kir-Moab, January 3.

RATHMINES, Co. DUBLIN.—The report read at the sixth annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. showed that the year's work had been successful. Upwards of 500 meetings and classes were held, with an attendance of 15,000 persons. Pastor Hugh D. Brown said in the course of his address that as the preaching of the Gospel had been entrusted to human and not angelic lips, Christian young men should seek to influence their fellows, and win them to a useful and holy life. Open-air services, conducted by the members, have been regularly held in the Palmerston Park.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—In The Globe of Feb. 25 there is a lively, circumstantial, and altogether excellent account of this Institution in Stepney Causeway, presumably from the pen of Mr. Krausse, the special commissioner of our evening contemporary. The writer in closing says:—"It is not necessary for me to do more than allude to what the condition of these children would be without Mrs. Hilton's noble establishment. I need only point to the records of the children's hospitals to show what an inestimable blessing such a 'dolls' house' as that in Stepney Causeway must be to the hundreds of respectable poor mothers whom it benefits." We are glad to learn that the Mercers' Company have recently

CITY TOILERS.

Some years ago a little paper, called "Trips and Touring," called attention to a charming cottage Home, beside Epping Forest, established for shop-girls and young city workwomen in poor health. Three young ladies in their own loving home decided that this Home should be set up, and carried through their project. It took many months of hard work to get all in order, and invite the worn and weary girls to come, but the good done in the five years since this commencement no one can calculate.

Over six hundred girls have enjoyed the lovely views and reviving air of the forest, and gone back cheered and strengthened, bodily and mentally, to their unremitting toil. Amid the sweet forest scenes, they have heard loving words from bright young lips and sweet sacred songs, and deep earnest prayers from tender young hearts, more effectual often than the words of older and more experienced Christians. Girls understand girls, and the happy faces of the young ladies who throw their heart into this work, have a marvellous charm for the poor dispirited toilers of the city.

And now this little scheme, like so many, is waiting to begin its work for the spring. During the winter, girls have still been taken in. Now the little Cottage purse is empty, but the city is still full of girls waiting in their turn for a little fresh air and rest. Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill, is the chief worker in the Mission now.

MEDICAL HOME MISSIONS.

BRISTOL.

The fifteenth annual report of the Medical Missionary Society in this populous town gives abundant evidence of the blessing conferred on the very poor by its ministrations. Besides about 8500 attendances at the dispensary, more than 3000 visits were made to patients at their own houses Four cottage Gospel meetings are now held in different courts, and these, in addition to the personal dealing with patients at the dispensary, have been fruitful in many permanent conversions. Dr. Elder, formerly medical missionary at Madras, has recently been appointed as medical officer, Dr. McFarlane, having gone to Tientsin, China. The dispensary is at 7, Red Cross-street, Bristol.

LONDON.

The Mission in St. Giles has done a truly Christlike work amongst the sin and sorrow stricken population by whom it is surrounded. Philanthropy and street improvements have indeed effected a great change, so that the filth and squalor that once so marked the district are no longer a scandal to our civilisation; but that something more is needed is shown by the fact that quite recently one of the large blocks of model buildings had to be partially closed owing to the drunkenness and disorder of the inmates. In and out amongst the people the agents of this Mission go, with blessed results, seen in young and old. One dying man says, in answer to a word about Jesus, "Yes, I know, He is my only comfort;" and little ones lisp, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me." During last year there were nearly 19,000 attendances at the dispensary, this being an increase of over 600 on the previous year, an increase chiefly valued because the Gospel of the grace of God is thus brought before a larger number of souls. At the Sunday and week-night meetings, often, "when speaking of the wonderful love of God, every sound is hushed, and the poor sufferers listen with the greatest interest." It says much for the reality of the Sunday-school work that over £5 was last year sent by the children in aid of foreign missions, and the Bible-classes have grown considerably in the year, that for elder girls having more than doubled its numbers.

The Holiday House near Godalming and the Convalescent Home at Folkestone have done wonders in restoring to health and strength the 438 and 141 inmates respectively, who have received their benefits. Dr. Pring is the acting superintendent, and communications may be addressed to him at 47,

MISSIONARIES AT LEICESTER.

A great stimulus has been given to Christian workers at Leicester, by the Missionary Conference, held in Melbourne Hall last week, by the invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer. The weighty words which fell upon the hearers could not but produce searchings of heart and solemn convictions.

Mr. Meyer welcomed the visitors on Monday evening, and emphasised his desire that whilst they were met to hear of missionary successes and labours, even this feature of the Conference should be subordinate to the spiritual quickening of those who attended it. Nor was his desire unfulfilled, for every gathering produced clear and definite results in this direction. About a dozen foreign mission fields were represented, which included China, India, Japan, North and South Africa, Syria, Spain, and France. Our readers are already familiar with many of the facts and figures of these different missions, having heard them delivered at previous Conferences of this character, or having read them in these pages. This renders it unnecessary for us to repeat here much that was said. But it is most beneficial to the cause of God for such gatherings to be held in various, we would say all, important towns, that English Christians may hear for themselves, and thus be thoroughly aroused to a deeper interest in their foreign brethren. On all sides, we are told, doors are now open which have been closed for years, and in almost every land there is a thirst for the water of life.

At the devotional meeting which followed, Mr. J. E. Mathieson hoped that the Conference would also be characterised as one of much prayer. This suggestion was especially carried out by some earnest workers from the Manchester City Mission, who, with Mr. McGill, maintained the evening prayer-meetings.

On Tuesday morning, after Rev. J. Wilkinson had described the work in which he is engaged amongst the Jews, Rev. J. Gelson Gregson opened the subject of India. He deplored the terrible influence which inconsistent Christianity exerts in that country, which has, he said, come to such a pass that many have almost given up adopting the title of Christian because they are expected by the natives to get drunk, and in other ways to disobey the commandments of God. He believed that the preparatory work of education, and of translating the Bible, has now been so fully done, that the great need at the present time is not so much technical education as living witnesses. He would like to see men of influence in each of our large centres of population meeting together to consider the missionary question, and sending out from each two of their own number to the foreign field, themselves contributing to their support.

Some very interesting words followed from Naraim Das, a Cingalese convert, who wore his native costume. His simple testimony was that he had longed for peace and rest of soul, seeking it in Brahminism, and in every other native religion, but did not find it until he found it in Christ.

Opportunity was also given at this meeting to Rev. J. Henry to describe the work of the Moravian Missionary Society. It is a remarkable fact that when numbering only six hundred souls the Moravian Church established missions to the heathen, and now about one in sixty of its adult members becomes a missionary.

The presence of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, director of the China Inland Mission, who had just returned from China, was one of the privileges of the Conference. He has had wonderful dealings with the Lord in the seclusion of that far-off land, and whilst his missionaries go from England to teach the Chinese the unsearchable riches of Christ, Mr. Taylor learns at the feet of Jesus in China, and on his periodical returns, dispenses spiritual food to the Christians at home. He hopes to address many gatherings during his stay on this side the sea, and all who have the opportunity of hearing him should not afternoon he urged that the people of God should keep apace with the answers which God sends to their united prayers. Many "pray the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into the harvest," and complain that their prayer is not answered. But the fact is, that He answers so quickly that there are always more labourers ready to go than his children provide the means to send forth. Mr. Taylor had been much encouraged by the Lord's promise, "I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight," and He has been faithful to his word. The Word of God is permeating through China in places where no missionary has ever trod, and it is not an unknown circumstance for a missionary to find, on visiting some township, that there are anxious ones there who have already acquired a taste for the Bread of Life. But although this is so, yet there are vast provinces, through which Mr. Taylor has travelled, which are as yet untouched, although, no doubt, as open to the Gospel as other places. He pleaded earnestly that we should raise our ideas of God's willingness to bless, and expect not droppings but showers. He is asking God for at least 100 fresh missionaries this year to supplement the 180 now in the field, and of the £5000 which this will require half has already been given by five gentlemen since he landed in England a fortnight ago. Truly, the Lord is faithful.

The morning of Wednesday was occupied by Mr. E. H. Glenny on behalf of North Africa, Rev. W. Bradbury and Mr. Howe for Cape Town, Mrs. Blamire and Mr. W. Green on Spain. The last-named speaker described the sufferings and death of Manuel Matamoros, the famous Spanish convert, who was led to Christ by a tract written by Mr. Green, and printed on a secret press in Madrid many years ago. Mrs. Blamire's sketch was also of much interest. When her husband would open a house or hall in a town and preach the Gospel, the Archbishop would generally come and preach against them, and threaten excommunication to those who listened to the Protestant teachers. But this only awakened the interest of the people, and, as a consequence, there was usually a little body of native converts to carry on the work when Mr. and Mrs. Blamire moved to another town.

In the afternoon, Women's Missionary Work was illustrated by the labours of Mrs. Osborne in Cape Town, Miss McLean in Japan, and Miss Hollyer of the Bethel Santhal Mission.

The evening meetings were devoted to the subject of Consecration, which was pressed home with eloquence and great earnestness. Miss Booth and Rev. J. G. Gregson were the principal speakers on Tuesday night, and the general tone of the Conference throughout prepared the hearts of all for a very impressive and solemn evening on Wednesday, when Mr. Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe spoke upon the Baptism of the Spirit.

Rev. F. B. Meyer reminded his hearers that the last visit of Mr. Taylor to Leicester was in company with Messrs. Stanley Smith and C. T. Studd, a memorable occasion, indeed, to himself, he said, as it was a distinct turning-point in his life, leading him into a fuller, closer, and more intimate knowledge of Christ. The weighty words which followed from Mr. Taylor will be long remembered. The Lord Jesus Christ, he urged, must be Lord of all, or He is not Lord at all. If we withhold one corner of the heart from Him, then we are the master and Christ is not, inasmuch as by that act we assert our ownership. Speaking to parents, he said, "Your child's salvation may depend upon your action to-night in either yielding or refusing the possession of your heart to Christ."

From Ephes. v. 18 the points he sought to drive home were briefly these: (1) These words of God by the mouth of Paul are a direct command, an edict from the Great King. It is not a matter of choice; one must not consider, "Shall I be filled with the Spirit, or shall I not;" one must obey the command, or be a rebel, a traitor to our King. (2) There is no vacuum in nature or in grace; hence, if the heart is not filled with the Spirit it is filled in whole or in part with something else; if not with the spirit of good, with that of evil. There may be some of made up of the evil. We may be sure of salvation through faith in Christ, but what about our lives? If we are not filled with the Spirit it manifests itself in our families by our unconverted children; in our churches by their deadness; in our lives by the failures and inconsistencies which the world is not slow to observe. We become hindrances alike to the world and to our fellow Christians. We may repent of this and be forgiven of God, but we cannot wipe out the stain, nor undo the harm we have caused to others. "Be filled" we must, and the only matter of choice about it is whether we will be filled with the Spirit or with worldliness, with weakness and with all that will hinder our spiritual life. (3) Many are not filled with the Spirit, because, if they desire it at all, it is for their own enjoyment, and not for the sake of pleasing Christ, and being his witnesses. He wants us to be a mirror to reflect Him; the reflection may be as small as that of the sun on a drop of dew, but it is a perfect reflection still. (4) If filled with the Spirit we should do whatever He wishes us to do, and He will bless us thus, whether it be on the sick bed, or in China, in Leicester, or Japan, or the uttermost parts of the earth. It is not what we do, or where we go, but what we are that is pleasing in his sight. (5) What is the evidence of being filled with the Spirit? It manifests itself. A young mother's heart is filled with her child. When she wakes it is her first thought, all day long it is her constant care. Who need ask the question? The fulness of her heart appears in her every act, and this should be the attitude of every Christian towards his God; this is being filled with the Spirit.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe then illustrated Mr. Taylor's words by some remarkable incidents, in which Messrs. Smith and Studd had been used of God to the salvation of souls, both in England and China, results which could not have been achieved had it not been for the fulness of the Spirit within them.

Rev. F. B. Meyer concluded with a few well-chosen words of exhortation, after which a praise-meeting was held, at which over thirty expressed themselves as having been greatly blessed during the past three days. Many more rose to signify the same, time failing for further individual testimony. The most encouraging sign of practical result was the enrolment of several candidates for the mission field. We shall hope to meet many converted heathen in heaven who will have reason to bless God for his eventful Conference.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

At the seventh annual meeting held recently, Professor Yeatman, after speaking of the nature of the work undertaken in that stronghold of sin, the city of Paris, said that during the seven years it had been labouring there 60,000 visits have been made by its agents to the homes of the people, and nearly 6000 visits to the sick. 12,500 meetings have been held, with an attendance of 240,000 people. 10,000 Bibles have been given or sold, and nearly 160,000 tracts and portions of the Gospel distributed. Thus something was being done to aid in some degree to realise the Huguenot dream, "Paris for Christ."

At the French meeting, Mr. Lockie, the secretary, stated that there are now seven mission agents at work, and that seven Paris pastors are asking for missionaries. Pasteurs Theodore Monod and Lorriaux enforced the claims of the Mission, and interesting accounts of their work were given by two of the missionaries.

THE PRETENSIONS OF SACERDOTALISM, says The British Weekly, are destined to be destroyed by advancing knowledge. Its foundations are beginning to crack and splinter like breaking ice. The theories on which it rests are changing and perishing before maturer investigations. Among the few real masters of early Church history it is not possible to find a single sacerdotalist. Even if it were otherwise, the teaching of the New Testament that all believers are priests unto God

THE LATE REV. R. ROBINSON.

By the courtesy of the editor of the London Missionary Society's Chronicle we are able to give a portrait of the late Secretary of the Society. In an accompanying sketch, which appeared in the January Chronicle, the writer says:—

Mr. Robinson was the second of four sons of simple, God-fearing parents, who sought to bring up their children to be the same. At the age of twenty-one he entered Highbury College. In 1839 he accepted a call from the church at Chatteris, in Cambridgeshire. After four happy years spent there, he removed to Luton, and became the pastor of Union Chapel, where he laboured for twelve years. These were years of joy, though not without pastoral anxieties and family sorrow, for there his home was overshadowed when his only son died. In 1855 he accepted an invitation to become the pastor of the church at York-road, Lambeth. His attractiveness to the young was evidenced by the demand there was for his services in connection with Sunday-school anniversaries, and in services for the young on Good Friday at Craven Chapel and St. James's Hall.

Soon after he came to London he was invited to join the Mission Board, which he did, and procured for himself a good degree by his intelligent and earnest, though unobtrusive, participation in its deliberations, by his fervent devotion to the great interests of the Society, and by the Christian, loving spirit which accompanied and inspired all his relations to his brother Directors. On the retirement of Rev. Ebenezer Prout, the Directors turned to Mr. Robinson as one well qualified to fill the vacant office; but it was only after repeated appeals that he felt constrained to regard it as the wish of God that he should give up a large, and promising, and protesting church and become a secretary rather than a pastor. Mr. Robinson brought to his new duties the good common sense and the sound judgment with which he was naturally and eminently gifted. These gathered strength with growing years, and were carefully exercised by him in forming opinions and arriving at conclusions on questions, great and small, in connection with the business of the Society. Though of necessity he had to give up the regular ministry of the Word, he delighted in preaching; and his services, whether as an occasional supply, or in advocating the claims of the Society, were heartily welcomed. Whilst, as a minister, he was always a favourite on the platform as a Sunday-school or Temperance advocate, as a secretary, his appeals, couched in racy words, interspersed with well-chosen facts and telling anecdotes, were always most powerful.

Rare conscientiousness and sterling integrity characterised him. The funds contributed to the Society never had a more careful distributor. He regarded himself as being a trustee for the right use, not only of the munificent contributions of the wealthy, but also of the smaller gifts of the self-denying poor. On his retirement the Directors passed a resolution, expressing their high esteem for him personally, and their value of the work which he had done for the Society. The hope was entertained that years of labour might be followed by years of repose. The privilege of active Church membership Mr. Robinson gladly availed himself of in connection with the church at Lewisham High-road. He was ready to serve the Society as an honorary advocating its claims. This was his last public work. In March, 1886, he attended the anniversary services of the Stockport Auxiliary, and from his return from that journey until the end—with the exception of a few days at Preston, near Brighton—he was confined to his room and, to a large extent, to his bed. He was permitted to suffer much, but he was wonderfully sustained. For some time he was unconscious, and on the morning of Monday, January 10, he, "having served his generation, 'fell on sleep.'"

The American Freedmen.

Rev. Thomas L. Johnson, of London, England, an ex-slave, has been specially studying the condition of his race in several States in the South. He finds a general progress among the negroes of Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana, but declares that in some sections their condition is no better than it was in slavery. This he attributes chiefly to lack of education, and instances a district in Louisiana where the coloured people are prohibited from attending school, and are thus kept under a bondage of ignorance by unscrupulous whites. The fact that such cases are rare goes far to indicate a general improvement among the blacks.

Mr. Johnson has had an eventful career. For twenty-eight years a slave in Virginia, he was, after the war, a hotel waiter and Pullman car porter. In 1876 Albert Pullman and Robert T. Lincoln, ex-Secretary of War, sent him to a London college. After two years' study he went to Africa on mission work, and has ever since devoted himself to the work of elevating his race. His experience and intelligence entitle his statements of the present condition of the Southern negro to the closest attention of all who are studying the inter-

REVIVAL SEASONS IN ROSS-SHIRE.

Dear Sir,—About a year ago you recorded the wonderful works of our God and Saviour in the conversion of several hundreds of souls in the small fishing village of Avoch. As some are ever ready to put the stereotyped question, "But do the converts stand?" will you kindly allow me again to record the riches of the mighty keeping power of God in preserving the young converts.

Of the hundreds who professed to accept Jesus as their Saviour, only two or three are known to have gone back. Such has been the effect of the blessed work on the entire community that last New Year's Day was like a Sabbath for peace and quiet. Two services were held in the chapel which were well attended, whilst on previous New Year's Days the village was almost like a pandemonium for drunkenness and fighting. The devoted minister, Rev. George Moir, with his people, remembering the mighty power of God they saw last year, have agreed to hold another series of meetings, which were commenced about ten days ago. So delightfully has the Lord been working on the minds of the people, that the large chapel has been filled every evening, and, at the close, there have been many anxious souls. Already about eighty inquirers have been personally dealt with; a large majority of these professed to accept Jesus as their Saviour.

One pleasing feature of the work this year is that those who were careless and opposed to the meetings last year, are being brought in. The first to be converted was one of the most intelligent fishermen in the village, who last year would not come near the meetings: he is now pressing his newly-found Saviour on all with whom he comes in contact. Another tall, burly fisherman who would scarcely go near the meetings last year, and out of whom you could not get a single sentence, since the present meetings commenced has found the Lord; he is now addressing crowds of his neighbours in the open air, and pressing Jesus on their acceptance.

Feb. 24 was devoted as a day of thanksgiving to the Lord. The same day last year was a day of marvellous blessing, when scores were awakened and brought to peace. Large numbers of the converted fishermen gave up their employment that they might take share in the work. A Christian Conference was held, at which several of the neighbouring ministers took part. Three meetings were held at which the following subjects were considered:—

(1) Waiting on God;
(2) Walking with God;
(3) Working for God.

At this moment the blessed work is going on with unabated vigour. Will your believing readers kindly remember this work in prayer, and, "calling upon God, He will answer, and show us great and mighty things that we know not of?" To his name be all the glory.

Avoch, N.B. R. S.

A CARD FOR THE CASHBOX.

My God! whate'er thy love demands,
Take at thy servant's willing hands;
Accepting from a grateful heart,
Thy kingdom's dues, thy children's part.
The gold and silver are not mine.
I only offer what is thine.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Dr. L. W. Munhall, the American Evangelist.

The Convention on the Spiritual Life, proposed to be held at Belfast in April, has been postponed to the first week in October.

The daily newspapers of Monday contain accounts of the serious illness of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who had a stroke of apoplexy on Saturday, and of whose recovery there was very slight hope.

The Queen has done honour to herself by conferring her approval on our venerable friend Mr. George Holland, of Whitechapel. Through the Duchess of Teck, Her Majesty has presented to Mr. Holland her photograph, with autograph, finely framed.

The following singular and pathetic advertisement appeared in an evening paper last week. We hope it has attracted the attention of our good friends at the Y.M.C.A.

> A young man, who has for some time past been going a little wrong in his spare hours, wishes for some downright hard work (literary), where his nose could be kept fast to the grindstone from six till eleven, or later, every night. Emoluments no object.

If the young man is in earnest, he might be led to something better than the grindstone, which he evidently supposes will inoculate him with moral principles, and the power to overcome temptation.

A Paris correspondent of a Brussels journal has discovered that the New Testament is a book of surpassing human interest, and the record he has made of it is well worthy of mention:—

> The Gospels make up the most beautiful book in the whole world, and can be read from one end to the other without fatigue or difficulty. The book is destined to charm, to instruct, to attract, to associate the people to religion and to the church, and that though being the Gospel, the pure Gospel, it is nevertheless a new and unknown Gospel, a real revelation and revolution.

A new translation by M. Lasserre, published with the imprimatur of the Archbishop of Paris, has been the means of attracting this gentleman's attention to it.

A very pleasing request has been forwarded to Her Majesty from Melbourne on behalf of the Victoria Auxiliary of the Bible Society. The Queen is asked to write a verse of Scripture and her signature, and these are to be reproduced in fac-simile and placed upon New Testaments, one of which is to be given to every scholar in the State schools of Victoria, in honour of the Royal Jubilee. Our colonial friends have chosen a most commendable

The discovery of certain Hittite inscriptions is full of interest. They were first found in Asia Minor in 1802: re-found in 1872. The language has been dead for more than 3000 years, and the decipherment has baffled scholars. Captain Conder, of the Palestine Exploration Fund, has, it is believed, obtained the clue. The Hittites, as new evidence goes to show, formed a great empire, in the time of Abraham. Their capital was Carchemish, mentioned three times in the Bible, and it is there, with other places, that the inscriptions have been found.

The Times of Feb. 28, in a leader, regrets that the inscriptions are theological rather than historical. But this is of great value. The writing speaks of "The Holy One, the great Lord, who hears uprising prayers." The language used of "The King of Heaven," "The chief God of Heaven," "The great Spirit," "The strong King," is that which is addressed to a Deity. Such terms point to clear traditions of an earlier revelation of the Divine nature. They disprove such fantastical speculations as those of M. Renan, that religion is an evolution from a savage fetishism; and, as Mr. Glashier, the Chairman of the Palestine Fund, indicates, they seem destined to throw great light on the early chapters of Genesis and the times of Abraham.

The following paragraph from a letter from Western Australia represents a phase of the emigration question which surely has received too little attention. The spiritual welfare of our own colonists should lie as near to the English heart, at least, as that of strange peoples and races. But this is the true home mission work of the Australian Churches, and we would press it upon their serious consideration. England has given a Hudson Taylor and a great scheme of missionary work to China. Are our English and Scottish heathen in Australia to wait until they can be evangelised by Christian Chinamen?

> We do stand in need of more ministerial strength here; our people are growing up here literally in heathenism. Many families at manhood in the bush who have never seen a religious meeting of any kind, and you know what that means. I am daily hearing of new cases of this kind. We would require a travelling evangelist, or at least a colporteur. I am thoroughly sorry over the state of this colony—the people are so scattered; but it is sad to see the families of those who were members of our churches growing up as godless as the most heathen nations, and even more so, for they have no objects of worship whatever. This is as yet a very poor colony.

There is, in the current number of The Homiletic Review, a sermon on "The Sphere of the Pulpit." The following valuable thought may find its way to quarters which our contemporary probably does not reach, for even in the pulpit, as out of it, there are perhaps as many sins of omission as of commission.

> One may even become a false preacher from ignored truths. The wrong he does is not that he spreads untrue belief, but does not spread all true belief. He leaves too many truths unbelieved. Here every preacher should watch himself. The excitement of any one truth may become undue.

It is with unusual pleasure that we publish, to-day, the communication on a preceding page describing Presbyterian "Church Work in Glasgow." Most thankful should we be to give similar summaries of congregational effort by other bodies and

It has been stated, and, so far as we know, it remains uncontradicted, that the fair average wage earned by a Lanarkshire miner during the winter is only fifteen shillings for five days' toil underground. From that sum a deduction of five shillings and elevenpence is made for rent, coals, pick-sharpening, and other items, leaving the labourer with only nine shillings and a penny on which to maintain his family. Commenting upon the figures The North British Daily Mail has asked:—

> What is this pittance upon which a working man is expected to maintain himself, and probably a wife and children? Granting that food is cheap, how can body and soul be kept together, and the men expected to toil in the bowels of the earth at one of the most laborious and dangerous of occupations?

That the gulf between capital and labour should widen daily can perhaps hardly be wondered at in the face of figures such as these, and it is not difficult to accept the painful statement recently made, that in Scotland upwards of sixty thousand pitmen are on the verge of starvation. Surely our modern Christianity ought not to rest content in the presence of social evils such as these.

A grand story is told of Rev. John Sargent, who in 1834 was set apart for missionary work in the Isle of Mauritius, then a French settlement. The President of the Wesleyan Conference addressed him, saying that he was going to an island of slaves, to a people destitute of all instruction, save what little they had received from Popery. He added solemnly "to a deeper hell you cannot go," and bade the young missionary consider that perhaps, even death would be his lot. Mr. Sargent's reply was full of that Christ-like spirit influenced by which Paul declared that he could wish himself even accursed from Christ for his brethren:—

> It has been said this evening, and the words sunk deep into my heart, that I am going to the deepest hell upon earth; then to that hell let me go. If only I may pluck immortal souls from its blackness, and place them before the throne of my God, my joy is fulfilled.

The Spectator has lately been dealing with the wide-spread idea that our present system of primary instruction will result in "a generation with a distaste and even contempt for manual labour," the boys making less trusty workmen, and the girls worse cooks, and housemaids, and laundry women. Many employers of labour are complaining bitterly that education is in itself inimical to continuous industry. Certainly, if it can be shown that it develops an aversion to honest work, we should be in front of a problem as difficult as any of the other important and leading social questions of the day. That education increases immigration to the large towns is strikingly evident, and the present system doubtless tends to intensifying competition in almost all light employments.

But is it a fact that education develops a dislike of work? The Spectator points to Scotland and Prussia as evidence to the contrary. The peasantry in both those countries are at once well educated and industrious to a degree, and to a great extent free from the unrest of socialistic leaven. Even if education does lessen the number of those who are willing to work in a machine-like way, it opens wide "the grand safety-valve, the power of wandering over earth in search of opportunity of urope could live and prosper on the npeopled river basins of South America." s England is taking so important a art in colonising the world, surely it is etter that we should send out educated ather than illiterate men and women. If he Bible could have its proper place in our ystem of education, there would, perhaps, be ess room for the alarm which has been expressed; we believe the defects that are eing observed in the results of the present cheme are due, in a great measure, to the act that the foundation is not a decidedly eligious one.

A striking commentary upon the Apostle Peter's description of "unstable souls" is found in the biography of William Henry Channing, published lately by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. Mr. Channing lived from 1810 to 1884, his life being divided between England and America. After many years of nebulous and shifting foundations, Channing came to see that "what Christ claimed to be, that He must be," but he never followed it out "to its necessary completion in dogmas and practice." The pity is that this was not the beginning rather than the termination. How different would have been the results of Channing's ministerial life had its motto been "the love of Christ constraineth me," instead of that miserable "humane side of Unitarianism."

It would appear from a recent article in The Christian Intelligencer that, bad as matters are in the East-end of London they are very much worse in New York, where the tenement house system appears to have arrived at its worst development. Statistics, taken from the report of a society for improving the condition of the poor, are given, which show that there is a lower depth beneath that of the squalor and wretchedness familiar to London district visitors, and that it is to be found in a building in New York called the "Big Flat." This dwelling-place is six stories high, with a frontage of seventy five feet. The first floor has rooms for fourteen families, "and they are occupied by low, degraded women." The other floors have rooms for sixteen families each, and the occupiers "are packed like sardines in a box." When the census was taken the building contained 478 persons of eleven different nationalities; and this population furnished in three months over one hundred prisoners for various offences. The mortality, of course, was equally large, sixty-two per cent. being of children under five years of age.

Horrible as such a place must necessarily be, it is alluded to as "a fair average specimen of the lower grade of tenement houses," and the report from which the figures are taken concludes thus:—

> If it shall lead any who are rich in this world's goods to visit the slums of this great city...as trustees of God's good gifts, to see what they can do toward lifting the pall of sin and misery which darkens the lives of so many of his creatures, the story of the "Big Flat" will not have been written in vain.

Unfortunately there are Big Flats elsewhere than in New York, and we trust that these words may reach the heart of some of those who are more or less responsible for the painful state of things in many of our large centres, where human beings are huddled together under conditions which would not be permitted if

LETTERS FROM ROME.—3.

THE officiating clergyman at Trinity Church, in the Piazza di San Silvestro, is Rev. Ernest Cowan, of Weston, near Bath, a devoted student and able expositor of Scripture, and an active Christian worker. There is a good congregation in the morning; not so many in the afternoon.

Nearly opposite this Protestant place of worship is the Church of San Silvestro, where an English Roman Catholic priest is preaching every Sunday afternoon. I heard him twice. At the close of the second of these sermons he said that on the previous Monday he and the other English priest who is preaching in Rome during Lent, had had an audience of the Holy Father, who, in the belief of all Catholics, is the vicar of Jesus Christ. His Holiness, he said, is specially interested in these sermons to the English in Rome, and very anxious that others besides Catholics should hear them, and know what their teaching is. Therefore, in the name of the Holy Father, he invited all the English in Rome, Catholics and others, to hear these discourses.

The English are not backward in accepting the invitation of the Holy Father and the priests; and, though on that Sunday there was a downpour of rain, the congregation seemed less affected at San Silvestro than at either of the Protestant places of worship.

As the Pope wishes that English visitors in Rome should know what the teachings of the English priests are, I will tell them so far as I am able. I had been told that a Christian lady had been to hear Father Mackay, and that she had heard nothing but the truth. I did not feel sure of this, because I am convinced that few, comparatively, judge correctly. The first sermon I heard from Father Mackay was on Isa. xlv. 8:—

> Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness: let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together.

The text was pronounced in the Vulgate version, and "salvation" was translated "a Saviour." Thus the sermon was about Jesus. First his excellencies were dwelt upon; secondly his defects. These were his sinless infirmities—hunger, weariness, &c., and the fact that to Him our sins were imputed. Although the word "defects" did not seem to be vital to the preacher's conception of the Lord Jesus, it was a most inappropriate term, and could scarcely have been used by anyone who had a true knowledge of the Son of God.

The second part of the text—"Let the earth open," &c.—was used to show that while God does his part we must do ours. We must do penance, we must repent for the remission of our sins. We must endeavour; we must do. In a word, the most that could be said of the teaching so highly recommended by the Pope was that heaven and earth had brought forth a Saviour, who had made it possible for man to save himself.

The second sermon I heard from Father Mackay was on 1 Tim. ii. 5:—

> For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus.

This was a bold text for a Papist, but the priest was equal to the occasion. He began by saying that a mediator is one who comes between others; and there is a sense in which there are many mediators between God and men. The angels, because God uses them in conferring many benefits on men. The saints, because they make intercession for others. Moses was the mediator of a law and a covenant. Most of all, the blessed Virgin Mary was a mediator, because she gave us Jesus. There may be also evil mediators, who come between others to do them hurt, as Satan.

But there is a sense in which there is only one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus. He was the One who came to is necessary that a mediator possess something in common with each party, between whom He mediates. Jesus was one with the immortal, just, and happy, on the one hand; and with the mortal, sinful, miserable, on the other. He presented to God an acceptable person, infinite merit, and complete satisfaction. And He brought to men pardon and grace, and the Holy Spirit. [I am not quite sure as to these last three.]

But, although Christ had done all this for us, it would be of no benefit to us, unless we did our part. Those who had heard the previous sermons, he said, would remember that he had laid great stress upon this. We must do penance; we must repent. We must do what Jesus had done. We were his members; then we must also make ourselves acceptable to God; we must do good works, works of merit; we must make satisfaction; we must deserve salvation.

Such an utter want of distinguishing between things that differ, such a fusion and confusion of them is another Gospel, which is not another. The mention of angels and saints, the Virgin Mary, and Satan, as all in one way or other mediators, as well as Christ, is as foreign to ordinary thought as it is without suggestion in the Word of God. It is not surprising that professedly Protestant women who flirt with this false system should be seduced by it; nor that men born in Romanism and who have seen its hollowness, should say: We believe in God, but angels and saints, and Mary and Jesus, and all the rest, we do not know anything about. Father Mackay's mixing up of Jesus with saints and angels is well adapted to produce this state of mind.

There is an evident reaction in Rome towards the domination of the Pope. The Queen is under the influence of the priests; the Pope and all his hierarchy are busy in every possible way. The Hotel Costanza has been bought and turned into a Jesuit College, and it is said that the Hotels Europe, Russia, and London will soon fall into the same hands. Several English ladies have this season become perverts to Rome; and the advanced Ritualistic clergymen, both English and American, are jackals to the Romish lion. Many professed Protestants so far sympathise with Popery, that while they will give for philanthropic purposes, they will give nothing to missions whose object it is to lead souls out of that idolatry to Christ, or, as they say, to interfere with their religion. I remember that last year I heard at Tangier of Englishmen who had been to Africa on an anti-slavery mission, discouraging any interference with the Mohammedanism of the Moors. Could anything be more ungracious and ungrateful to the last loving command and promise of Jesus, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world"?

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.—Thursday next, March 17, is the day appointed by the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance for special and united prayer on behalf of Ireland.

THE TRUE SERVICE OF MAN.—On Sunday week a good audience gathered to hear Dr. Fairbairn's address on "Christianity and the Service of Man." Mr. Cotter Morison's book on "The Service of Man" was very severely criticised. It was shown how utterly inadequate and untrue is that writer's account of what Christianity really is and has been. The age of faith before the Reformation, which Mr. Morison assumes as the highest flower-time of Christianity, and which he regards as setting forth the highest standard of Church life and belief, was shown to be a period when the true spirit of Christianity was largely dead or dying—clogged and hampered by human devices and organisations. It was the period when the criticism of reason was silenced, and it was anterior to a mighty rejuvenescence of true religion. In conclusion, Dr. Fairbairn impressively vindicated Christianity as the truest service of man. It was not simply the occasional consoler, but was the truest and most abiding inspirer of the human soul. This concludes Dr. Fairbairn's course of addresses for the present term, and it is felt that a new and very helpful element has been added to Oxford life.—Nonconformist.

AN EAST-END CONFERENCE.

A Conference was held at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week, which excited a good deal of interest in the locality, as evidenced by the large numbers who attended. The object, as gathered from the addresses, may be taken to have been the deepening of the spiritual life in believers.

The subject of the first evening's consideration was, as put by Lord Radstock, in the course of his introductory remarks, "fitness for service in the light of the deep need around us, and of loving faithfulness to our God, who has set us apart for his service." He said he felt deeply the need for such a conference. Multitudes, in darkness, are going down to death and judgment without Christ. Is the light of the children of God shining so clearly that none can mistake it? Is the power of the Holy Ghost so manifest in them that those around must of necessity say, "These are men of God?" Is it not too often the case that they are known only as people holding a certain set of opinions, which, however, have not the stamp and seal of the Holy Ghost? This is the only power that will touch the world, which does not care a rush for the opinions of all the Christians in London.

Rev. W. Adamson, vicar of St. Stephen's, North Bow, speaking from the words, "The battle is turned to the gate," said, if ever there was a time in the history of the Christian Church when this was true, it is now. The armies of the living God have reached the gates of the cities of the world, and it is for them, strong in the strength which God supplies, to see that the gates are forced, and the banner of righteousness planted on the ramparts. Two words well express what all soldiers in the Lord's army need—conformation and consecration. In order to the attainment of these two points Christians require a fuller acquaintance with Scripture, with the Saviour, and with the Spirit of the living God. Then, wholly consecrated and clothed in the whole armour of God, they would be enabled to triumph.

After some remarks by Mr. William Nobbs, on 2 Peter i. 2, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord,"

Mr. Archibald Brown insisted that the book called the Acts of the Apostles ought rather to be called "the Acts of Jesus Christ." The history of the Church is, in fact, just this, for the Lord Jesus is still "doing and teaching" through his people. This is too much overlooked. People are too prone to talk as if the Lord Jesus were helping them, instead of Himself doing his work through them, by condescending to use them. Joshua's ready acknowledgment of this when the angel that appeared to him said, "Nay, but as Captain am I come," should show them also their true position. He fell on his face and worshipped, and the secret of all true service is to cast ourselves down before the living Christ, and to say, "What saith my Lord unto his servant?" Then, as to the promise, "after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, ye shall receive power." People talk of the power of zeal, of earnestness, of organisation, but there is only one power that is of any value, and that is the power that God bestows. This is spoken of variously as the power of the Spirit, the power from on high, and the power of the Holy Ghost. Christians are very much inclined to confound machinery and power. There may be any quantity of machinery, but without the power, the dynamic energy, to move it, this is only lumber. Some think that if only the Church had the power to work miracles, as had the disciples of old, then the world would be converted. But the disciples had this power before Pentecost. It was another power that Christ spoke of, and without which neither eloquence nor anything else was of avail. When the Church of God has learnt to depend on God's own power we shall see wonderful things. The most highly tempered blade is useless without an arm to wield it, and even the Word of God, which is the sword of the Spirit, without the power of that Spirit to bring it home to the heart, will be ineffectual in turning men from darkness. Endued with this power, men could be true, effectual witnesses for God, and of a witness it is required only that he should speak the truth as to what he knows himself. Imagination, eloquence, wit, are not required in a witness-box. And this also applied with regard to the witness of Himself that God required from his people. A brief address from the Chairman closed the proceedings.

On Wednesday evening Lord Radstock said it was laid on his mind to recall the great foundation fact in Christian work mentioned in Ephesians iv. 4, "There is one body and one Spirit." People sometimes forgot their place in the body, and till they were content to take their right place the work of God would be hindered. Mr. William Nobbs, referring to several passages in the same Epistle, especially pointed out that the Holy Spirit never leads a man contrary to the teaching of Scripture. A good many errors would be avoided if this were remembered. Mr. Russell Hurditch also spoke at length on the words, "unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ."

THE WORK OF GOD IN CHINA.

The meeting at Mildmay on Thursday evening last, assembled to listen to Mr. Hudson Taylor's account of the extension of Christ's kingdom in China, was animated by one feeling, that of thankful gladness. This was as much visible in the farewell words of the sisters and brother who are immediately leaving friends and kindred and native land, as in Mr. Taylor's simple yet glowing description of the way in which the Lord is working by those already in the field.

Miss Burroughs, Miss Muir, Rev. W. Judd, Mr. Mathieson, Mr. Theodore Howard, and Mr. Broomhall having each given brief addresses,

Mr. Hudson Taylor commenced his narrative. He spoke first of blessing received on the outward voyage, and of how God honoured the testimony of Messrs. Studd and Stanley Smith on board ship, as well as at Colombo, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Shanghai, where meetings were held. At Tien-tsin and Pekin there was also great blessing. At the latter place the whole body of Christians were bowed before the Lord, and moved as they had never been before; the native believers wrote to their friends, asking them to pray that power might come down from on high, and that, in addition to a great blessing to their own souls, China might be more fully prepared for the Gospel. There was a response to this in many cases, for never were the people so ready to listen to the preaching of the Gospel as during the last year and a half, nor had there ever been such fruit as in that time.

On reaching Taiyuen, the capital of Shensi, about the middle of last year, Mr. Taylor said he found a conference going on. There was some discouragement at Chianfoo, because for some time there had been no addition to the Church, and this was felt the more because further to the south there had been a time of special blessing. Earnest prayer was made in reference to this, to the consideration of their methods, and ways of working. It was not long before the blessing came; letters received lately have brought the joyful tidings that there have been six or seven conversions in a short time. Mr. Studd, having told him of a work commenced by a native Christian in the city of Hokchau, he visited it. On arrival he found an inscription over the portico, which told him that it was an opium refuge. Within was a quadrangle, surrounded by buildings, as was the custom in China, in one of which was a chapel entirely native in its fittings up, and with texts of Scripture on the walls. The rules laid down that no one would be admitted who would not promise to desist from all idolatry during his stay in the place, and to be present at the morning and evening reading of the Scriptures and prayer in the little chapel. Then the opium patients were urged to ask God in prayer for relief from the suffering they the effort to give up this habit; it was most marvellous the way in which men who were not even converted found their pain relieved, and were enabled to obtain sleep. Not a few, from the evidence thus gained, in their own persons, of the power of prayer, had turned to the Lord. There were some fourteen or fifteen native Christians in the villages around. The Chinese gentleman who had opened this Refuge told him there was a good deal of expense connected with it; but God had helped him, and supplied him with means for the purpose. He had long made it a matter of family prayer that God would enable him to open it, and one morning his wife said, "You are continually praying about this. Why not go and open it?" He said he had not the money, and then she asked how much would be required? "About 20,000 cash," he replied—a thousand cash being equal to about 2s. The next morning she brought down all her jewellery and gave it for this purpose, much to the joy of her husband. On asking her whether she did not feel it a trial to part with her jewellery, she said, "I have taken Christ for my portion, and He is satisfaction for anyone." Tears of joy coursed down his cheeks when he heard those words, and he felt, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Mr. Stanley Smith had made arrangements for a little conference here. Quite a number came, and a very happy time they had. Mr. Taylor's joy in visiting these native Christians was great indeed. For twenty years he had been praying for this. There were three native pastors, two elders, and sixteen deacons, and all were working "for his sake." Even the cook and helpers at the opium refuge said "we do it for the Lord's sake;" they received no pay. In answer to the question, "How do you tell whether inquirers are sincere?" this Chinese gentleman said, "When we see them saving up their money to buy half-a-dozen Testaments and hymn-books, and then gathering a little company around them and teaching them, we know they cannot be far wrong." Much has been done by the godly life of these native Christians where no missionary has yet been.

From Shensi and the happy work there he went on to Pingyung with Messrs. Studd and Smith, and visited Si-ngan, the site of the old Nestorian Church, where a little prayer-meeting was held. He went also to see one of the oldest Mohammedan mosques, and very affecting it was to notice the earnestness of the worshippers. At Hauchung there are two chapels, built by the natives, and there he had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Easton's servant, a dear Christian woman, who on one occasion asked for a day's holiday in order that she might carry two loads (about two cwts.) of bricks that she had bought with money she had saved for this purpose. He had the pleasure of speaking in this chapel. Returning, he came down the tributary river Han, a distance of 1200 miles, with only one little mission station the whole way. Last year he travelled through nine provinces without hindrance from anyone. Everywhere preachers might witness for the Lord in perfect safety. But where are the labourers? Are there not some who, filled with gratitude for what the Lord has done for them, will go forth and witness for Him amidst these perishing multitudes?

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, in the course of a brief, concluding address, urged that not only should they pray for more missionaries to go out from here, but that God would raise up amongst the natives themselves multitudes who should witness for Him to their fellow-countrymen.

A MUNIFICENT GIFT.—Two sons of the late Mr. Samuel Morley—Mr. Howard and Mr. Charles Morley—have each presented the Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital, Tottenham, £2250 (total £4500), in order that the debt of the third wing of the hospital, lately built, may at once be cancelled. In consideration of the deep interest which the late Mr. Samuel Morley took, and which his sons now take, in this institution and hospital, it is intended to name this last portion of the building "The his second lecture at Tremont Temple, oston, Mr. Cook took for his prelude, "Lord's ay Lawlessness; Perils of Desecrated Sab- ths." Sunday, he said, is knocking at the great tes of Asia, Africa, and the Isles of the Sea. he cause of Sunday observance cannot be pre- nted in its full weight till it is seen to have ternational issues. When Sunday is wounded, e antipodes wince. We should be the trustees the whole earth in our efforts to protect Sun- y. It best support is a Christian population. he central problem is to multiply those who ok upon the Sabbath as a delight; as a day r worship and benevolent activity. I would not rop, by the breadth of a hair, below the message President Lincoln urging the soldiers and ailors to observe Sunday out of the regard due the Divine Will. We are so made as to need day of rest in seven. Political sanity is not ossible save as nations observe and respect the abbath. It is a day of great religious activity; lso of severe temptations from whisky dens, rothels, &c., at which the black angels have nuch reason to rejoice.

Mr. Cook condemned the running of railway rains, the Sunday advertising sheets, and the udacity of Sunday journalism. He also named he separation of classes, and the introduction of achinery, as among the causes of our present ax Sunday: machinery can run twenty-four ours each day of the year. He read a letter rom a suburb of Boston, signed by four ministers, ointing out the perils to which the young are here subjected by the corruptions of city life. The peril of our churches is that The Sunday Herald and Globe circulate in so-called Christian amilies. Souls are being ruined by these things. The law of rest for all means liberty of rest to ach. The extent of Sunday lawlessness is very reat. A mob of seven hundred drove off two workmen who secured evidence against twenty aloons in a New England city of 50,000 people. Col. Carroll D. Wright asserts that the begin- ning of the running of local Sunday trains was wholly due to church people. They are the ause of the running of horse-cars. Now we must (1) rally for a day of rest; (2) we must enforce Sunday liquor laws; (3) we must do all possible to secure a Saturday half-holiday. We are citizens of two worlds.

The lecture was on Waste of Opportunity the Chief Peril in Theology and Philosophy. Suppose the sun to-morrow was illumined with, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts, who was, and is, and is to come!" Let this inscription be seen of all nations, and one would think that the heathen would quit their heathenism at once, and literature feel the touch of this slanting fire. The sun is thus inscribed; so are the sea and the forest arches. The omnipresence of the Divine will in natural law needs to be proclaimed. Rationalistic, materialistic, philosophy teaches the truth in natural law, but obscures the Divine truth, and leaves the popular mind without that close, keen contact to God which man ought to have. Many sceptics teach that God is behind natural law. When away from home, the Greeks entered the theatres, and, when they heard Greek plays, would go to the door of the theatre, strike the shield, and cry out, "Fatherland!" So Christians, everywhere, should strike the shield of faith and cry, "Fatherland!" Surely self-evident truth will prevail in the universe. Whatever is founded on that will stand. Therefore, I would have Christian citizens unite, and smite the shield of self-evident truth, and say, "Fatherland!"—Boston Congregationalist.

CENTRAL TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.—The report presented by the secretary, Mr. G. Ling, at the twenty-sixth annual meeting of this Association, stated that during the year 260 Temperance and Band of Hope meetings had been held, and 1700 pledges taken. The million penny fund had been increased by over 18,000. Mr. W. J. Palmer, of Reading, referred to the great advance made by the temperance movement during fifty years. The hope was expressed by Mr. Caine, M.P., that it would not be long before Government would deal with the drink question. The House of Commons looked upon the subject much more favourably

Training College for Young Seamen,

BRIDGE OF WEIR, RENFREW, N.B.

On Tuesday last week, March 1, a most interesting ceremony was witnessed among the hills of Renfrew. Mr. William Quarrier, the friend of the Glasgow outcast children, knowing the need of faithful witnesses for Christ among our seamen, has been for years desirous of introducing into our merchant navy a number of boys brought up under his own immediate care. These, under God, might become witnesses for the truth, not merely among their own shipmates, but also to the uttermost ends of the earth. For this purpose he made request that God would stir up some of his stewards to give a ship, fully equipped, as if for sea. Last year the answer came, and the fruits were seen in the ceremony that took place on Tuesday. A great number of Mr. Quarrier's friends and supporters were present, and all thought that the beauty of the day was an earnest that God's smile would rest on the new undertaking.

Mr. Quarrier said it was customary, when a ship was launched, that a bottle of wine should be broken over the bow, just as if such a ceremony could do any good, but they believed in the power of prayer in launching ships. Rev. Mr. Paton engaged in prayer, asking a blessing on the ship. Mr. Matthew Arthur, son of Mrs. Arthur, the donor of the ship, said some time ago Mr. Quarrier intimated through the newspapers his wish to have a "ship on land." It occurred to his mother that it would be a fitting memorial of his father if she were to carry out Mr. Quarrier's idea. Rev. Dr. Hutton and Rev. Dr. Fergus Ferguson followed, with congratulatory and commendatory words.

Mr. Quarrier said that about six years ago, when he made his request, £100 was sent him by one of the sons of the donor of the James Arthur. No further gift had been made until Mrs. Arthur had been stirred up by God to give the rest in answer to his prayer. He was anxious to build fourteen more houses, which meant £23,000, of which £500 had been received. He proposed to send 250 of the 700 children in the Homes to Canada. With regard to the purpose of the ship, his desire was to send forth these young seamen as Christian missionaries, who would preach Christ in their lives. The proceedings closed by a characteristic speech by Captain Brotchie, of the Greenock Seamen's Mission.

The Last Earthquake.

"I saw a new heaven and a new earth."

The old world neareth fast her coming end;
  E'en now she shudd'reth—for with fierce desire
  The pent-up forces of her central fire
Shake the rock-prison walls they soon shall rend:
What power shall then to due obedience bend
  The swollen torrent of their awful ire?
  Earth's elements are one vast funeral pyre,
Thick with the ashes of both foe and friend.
Exult thou not, proud prince of this doomed world—
  Which once, like thee unfallen, promised fair—
When from his throne dishonoured Time is hurled,
  God's true Eternity ascendeth there;
Beaten and baffled, shall thy flag be furled,
  And a new earth shall witness thy despair!

GEORGE F. E. SCOTT.

"WHAT! YOU A 'CHRISTIAN,' AND DON'T DRINK—and you're not a Jew?—you must be a Mohammedan." Such is the astonished reply usually received to an explanation as to the meaning of the "bit of blue" now and again worn by visitors, and which the inquisitive eye of the native has not failed to detect. "El hamdu l'Illah" (Praise be to God) is sure to be the next ejaculation, if the wearer succeeds in establishing in his questioner's mind that he is at once a "Christian" and an abstainer, for the Moors are immensely pleased to find so much common sense, even among the Nazarenes. Should he, however, discover the stranger to denote by a stripe of white on the blue that he does not smoke either, he is lost in admiration, and puts him down as a holy man at once. It is a lamentable fact that from the specimens before them, they are of opinion, that it is part of the religion of the Christians and Jews to get drunk.—Times of Morocco.

CONFERENCE HALL, STRATFORD.

God continues to bless abundantly the noble work carried on at the Conference Hall, West Ham-lane, Stratford. Since the opening of the building, in the early part of 1885, it has been a busy hive of active work for Christ. To quote from the latest report of the Council, the efforts of the past year "have abounded with tokens of God's goodness." The various agencies are in a healthy and vigorous state. The Sunday evening services have been largely attended. The male and female Mizpah bands, which have for their object the rescue of intemperate men and women, have been instrumental in inducing many to abandon drink, as well as in leading them to accept Christ as their Saviour. The mothers' meeting has an average attendance of 150, and the Mothers' Union, for the promotion of purity, has every appearance of becoming a useful and powerful branch.

The Young Men's Christian Association, which forms one of the most important departments of the work, continues to grow in numbers and importance. There are now 240 members, 113 of whom joined during the last twelve months. Three of the young men are at college, preparing for the foreign mission field. The educational classes have been largely taken advantage of. The labours of the secretary (Mr. E. Fox Butlin) and his devoted wife have been greatly appreciated.

The annual meeting was held on the evening of Thursday last, and was attended by about one thousand two hundred people. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. A. Denny. Rev. R. P. Pelly referred to the value of Christian companionship, which is cultivated in such a large degree by Y.M.C.A.'s. Mr. H. W. Maynard, in an earnest sentence or two, spoke of Christ as the founder of all good and noble works, and expressed the hope that the fruits of the efforts put forth in connection with the Conference Hall would go on multiplying. Mr. C. Boardman said the debt had been reduced to £1368, and they hoped, through God's providence, to go on reducing it. It was gratifying, he continued, that the simple message of the Gospel, as proclaimed within these walls, had been the means of convicting hundreds of sin. He could tell of infidels who had come to scoff, but remained to pray. Major-General Anderson told how faithfully he had served the devil until his conversion, which was brought about through the instrumentality of Miss Daniell, of Aldershot. People in his own position in life called him a lunatic because he was a Christian and preached the Gospel. They pointed to him as the "Mad Colonel," but his reply to them was, "If I am mad, heaven is my asylum, and God is my Keeper." Dr. H. Grattan Guinness expressed the opinion that if there was less formality and more naturalness in the present day, a great deal more success would attend the preaching of the Gospel.

HOME FOR MOTHERS AND BABIES.—The first report of this Home, just issued, states that since its opening forty-seven women and twenty-two children have been received and cared for, the time during which they have to be sheltered varying from one to six months. The women are sent to service as soon as possible, and the children boarded out. Many have been cases of great hardship, the poor victims having been cruelly deserted by those who should have been their protectors. In some instances they have proved valuable servants, and some have been led to seek and follow Christ. Mrs. Harrier (6, Pope's-road, Brixton) is the superintendent.

WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE WORK.—The annual meeting of the Pendleton branch of the British Women's Temperance Association gave proof of the noble work that is being done by women amongst their unhappy sisters. More than one hundred and fifty meetings for women have been held during the year in the district. About one hundred families are visited weekly, and upwards of four hundred pledges have been taken. Several lady speakers urged with much eloquence and earnestness the importance of greater effort in rescuing wives and mothers amongst the working classes from the degrading and destructive evil of drunkenness. Many valuable agencies are connected with this energetic branch of a society, which is working with true devotion of spirit.

MR. WOOKEY AT BRIGHTON.

THE eight days' mission arranged by the Y.M.C.A. here has concluded, and God has again honoured the fearless testimony of his servant, especially in regard to the meeting in the Town Hall for men only. At the close a large number of young men expressed their desire for special dealing, and while the audience were bowed in prayer, marched into the inquiry room; some of these were fine, smart fellows, others were evidently saved in time from being added to the awful catalogue of human wrecks.

The last three meetings were held at the new Clarendon Villas Mission Hall, Hove, where Mr. Wookey's grand rugged eloquence and desperate earnestness were also much appreciated. Mrs. Wookey has a fine voice for solo singing, and this greatly added to the interest of the meetings.

This mission is being followed during the present week by special Gospel Temperance addesses in the Dome every evening by Mr. Richard Coad, the Cornish missioner of the United Kingdom Alliance.

THE STRANGERS' REST.

THE workers' meeting held last Friday evening at the Strangers' Rest, St. Georges-street, Ratcliff-highway, was of a particularly interesting character. Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard presided. After praise and prayer several workers related instances where they had been instrumental in convincing men of the error of a sinful, wicked life, and leading them repentant to the feet of the Saviour.

Mr. J. T. Isaac, the hon. secretary, appealed for helpers among the Italian, Spanish, and French, and for Christian literature for distribution among the sailors. The work they had commenced among the lads of the Highway, he remarked, though difficult, had been so far encouraging, and as this branch of work dedeveloped they looked forward with confidence to most fruitful results.

Mr. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, introduced the party of young lady missionaries who are on the eve of their departure for China. Miss Gertrude Muir, Miss McLillan, Miss Judd, Miss Gates, Miss Johnson, and Miss Florence Ellis then told how they had been led to consecrate themselves to God's service; to leave home, with all its pleasant attractions and comfortable surroundings, and to proceed to China to tell the people there the story of the Cross. They asked for prayer that their labours in the far-off land may be crowned with much blessing.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said that he had spent many a night in the Strangers' Rest, but he had never spent a happier one than that. Mr. Studd, who went out to China with Mr. Stanley Smith, had written to him that "before China could be turned upside down, the Church must be turned inside out." After referring to the very small increase of converts among the churches at home, notwithstanding the enormous increase of the population, he earnestly advocated more zeal and more faith in God, as One who is able to overcome every so-called impossibility.

THE WHITE CROSS ARMY movement has been inaugurated in Canada, and the clergy of all denominations are actively engaged in securing recruits. A healthier public opinion is being created regarding the relation of the sexes towards each other. Society in the past has been ready enough to ostracise a woman who had taken a false step; and, when once down, little assistance was given to help her to regain reputation and position. This may have been necessary; but why should men be treated more leniently—even the profligate and licentious? As a general rule they are the greater sinners, and yet they have been received with favour even in Christian homes, and allowed to mix with the young and the pure of the other sex. This ought not so to be; and now that the subject is being taken up vigorously, it is to be hoped that an improvement in this respect will be seen. Mrs. Bradley, who is in Toronto at present, addresses meetings both of men and women, and her earnestness and courage, as well as her tenderness and honesty, are giving a great impetus to this movement.—Presbyterian Messenger.

Mr. CHARLES INGLIS at PAISLEY.

DURING the past fortnight this well-known evangelist has been conducting Gospel meetings in connection with the Clark Hall Evangelistic Union. On each of the two Sabbath evenings on which he spoke the large hall was well filled by an attentive and interested audience, and a large measure of blessing was the result. During the week meetings were held in a smaller room, and were attended with a great measure of blessing. Mr. Inglis also addressed two meetings in the neighbouring town of Renfrew, to the second of which he was accompanied by upwards of forty of the Christian workers and converts from Paisley.

The evangelistic work in the Clark Town Hall, Paisley, has now been carried on for some time, and with considerable success, particularly during the past winter.

HOME FOR THE FATHERLESS.

WE know of few reports bearing any resemblance to that issued by Mr. Toye regarding his Orphan Home at 64, Lewisham-road, S.E., which now lies before us. The Lord has supplied all the needs of his large family of 147 children, by the willing hands of his servants.

This little book is an "account of God's dealings" during the past year, and is an almost daily record of the varied supplies which were sent to his door. His testimony is still as it has been hitherto—"By simply looking to the living God, and trusting his faithful word, all our needs have been met." The following is but a specimen of the contents of the Report:—

"May 29.—This morning I had nothing in hand, and the taxes due; about twelve o'clock a lady brought me £100. When letting her out the tax collector stood at the door; how kind of the Lord to send this lady just in time to meet my great need, and saving me the pain of sending away the tax collector without the money. How true is his word, 'They that trust in Him shall never be confounded.' Then came in still further £3 and £1 from Blackheath; 28 lbs. meat from Lewisham, about 8 gallons of milk from Peckham, and 1s. 9d. in the box."

Mr. Toye will forward a copy of the report to any applicant. We are glad to know that no deaths have happened in the Orphanage during the past year, and very little sickness, and that Mr. Toye's health is satisfactory.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Two hundred trained lads from these Homes, about to sail for Canada, will be present at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting on Monday next. A farewell meeting will also be held the same evening at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse (near Burdett-road Station), at 8 o'clock. There are now nearly 2000 homeless and destitute children in the Homes.

CITY MISSION, WESTMINSTER.—The third annual meeting of this Mission in New Peter-street was held on Wednesday, March 2, when General Sir Robert Phayre presided over a very full meeting. Addresses were given by Mr. Burdett-Coutts, M.P., Rev. W. Sinclair, Rev. J. S. Hutchinson, Mr. C. M. Sawell, W. Davis, and other gentlemen. Mr. A. Stirling, the secretary, read the report, which showed that a good work is being done in the neighbourhood.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following special missions:—Mr. Henry Thorne, now at Great Malvern; Rev. W. Hay Aitken, at Wells, March 13 to 28; Captain Warner Dennis, at Littleborough, Lancashire, March 13 to 23; Rev. W. Haslam, at St. Saviour's, Manchester, on March 19; Mr. W. R. Lane, at Park Church, Highbury, for a week, commencing on March 13; special effort during this month in Dudhope Mission District, Dundee; Mr. Herbert R. Francis, now at "The Pavilion," Winchester; Mr. John Climie, at Wood-green, N., to March 20. ——For blessing on Mr. J. M. Scroggie's forthcoming mission at Bristol.——For great blessing on the Conferences on "the Deepening of the Spiritual Life in relation to Foreign Missions," to be held during this month at Morley Halls, Regent-street, W., Ramsgate, and Cheltenham.——Praise for blessing granted in connection with Gospel meetings conducted by Mr. Scroggie at Inverness

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Strathmiglo, N.B.—Mr. Stoddart, of Edinburgh, has been conducting a series of successful evangelistic meetings in connection with the local Association. His quiet, earnest addresses have made a deep impression.

Tewkesbury.—A five days' mission to the members of this Association, conducted by Rev. J. Fleming Shearer, of Middlesboro', has resulted in a great revival amongst the people. Ministers of all denominations joined in the work, and the hall, holding 600 persons, as well as large rooms adjoining, were filled to overflowing. Besides the usual evangelistic addresses, Mr. Shearer preached special sermons to men and women separately.

New York State.—At the twenty-first annual convention of the State Y.M.C.A. over five hundred delegates were present. The session was opened with a song service by Mr. Sankey. Mr. Russell Sturgis, of Boston, gave an address on "The Young Men of the World: What can we do to bring them into one common Christian brotherhood?" The report showed that seventeen new Associations have been organised during the year, making the total number in the State 1060.

Redruth.—On Wednesday, February 23, an enthusiastic meeting was held to listen to an address by Mr. W. Hind Smith. After the secretary had made a short report of the twelve months' existence of the branch, Mr. J. S. Doidge, the chairman, spoke very interestingly of his long connection with other branches of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Smith dwelt on the purpose, progress, and principles of the Association. At the close, twenty-two new names were given to the secretary, Mr. J. F. Radley.

Michigan.—The reports of the different local organisations throughout this State presented at the fifth annual convention indicated progress all along the line. The Association at Marquette has nearly doubled its membership, and six colleges in that State have Associations among the students, much good being accomplished by this line of work. Two thousand dollars are spent annually in work amongst the lumber men. The subject of the relation between the Associations and the churches called forth a warm discussion. The general sentiment of the meeting was that when duties came in conflict "the work of a young man is in his church first, last, and always. If he has time to spare, let him devote it to the Association."

Fulham.—The Foreign Missionary Union of this Association arranged for a lecture from Mr. Pigott, who for several years has laboured in connection with the China Inland Mission. He was dressed in Chinese costume, which, he said, rendered the missionary more acceptable to the people. He spoke of the opium traffic as having brought a moral and spiritual curse upon the nation. He gave a graphic description of the manners and customs of the inhabitants of the "Central Kingdom," speaking also of their spiritual needs from the standpoint of a close and personal acquaintance. The Union is looking forward to the time when it shall have its own representative in the mission field.

Liverpool.—Early last year Sunday evening evangelistic services were started at the newly-acquired branch of this Association, in the north of Liverpool. From the beginning the meetings were signally blessed. On Sunday, February 27, the service was conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, who gave an earnest address on the "Friendship of Jesus," and at the close nearly forty went into the inquiry-room, most of them afterwards professing conversion. The day after an evangelistic meeting was held at the Central Association (Mount Pleasant), when Mr. Thorne told the story of his life. A number of young men were broken down during the service, and came out for Christ. Mr. Thorne's brief visit to Liverpool will be remembered with grateful pleasure.

Bath.—The annual meeting held last week marks an important point in the history of this association. The twenty-seventh report shows a large increase in the number of members, the total now being 220, an increase of 87, and the past year has been one of growing and strengthening all round. As a result of this, an effort is to be at once made to erect new and suitable buildings, for which a site in Broad-street has been provisionally secured. Thus greatly increased accommodation and facilities will be provided, and the association will attain a position worthy at once of the city, and of the important work it aspires to perform. This, as one of the speakers remarked, is the setting in motion of moral and religious forces, by which great things for God may be accomplished

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

New Edition, complete in One Volume. 1,083 pages.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

BY John Foxe.

Handsomely bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."
Christian Leader.

"We are pleased to see the 'BOOK OF MARTYRS' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—REV. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

"A new edition of 'FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS' has been issued by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, which is well worthy of attention from those who have not already placed this famous work upon their shelves. The present edition is well bound, and contains the Rev. J. Milner's valuable notes and comments, and an essay on Popery by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin."—The Rock.

"Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT have just published a new edition of 'FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS,' which deserves a word of greeting. Nothing we could say would add to the fame of so well-established a Protestant classic as 'FOXE'S MARTYRS.' The present edition extends far beyond FOXE's times, having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others, and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether, it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound, and suitable for a gift-book."—The Record.

Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "The Veil Lifted."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly domination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is ...effective and invaluable."
The Freeman.

"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore, but in what was once a Protestant Church we have converts and the Confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details."
Evangelical Christendom.

"Any of our readers who may have friends or neighbours journeying Romeward will do them a great kindness, and perhaps save them from much suffering, by giving them a copy of this pleasantly-written book."—The Christian World.

NEW EDITION. RECENTLY PUBLISHED. Seventh Thousand.

The Veil Lifted:

OR,

The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."
Berwick Warder.

"Convent life is death to all the finer feelings of our nature, and an outrage upon the plainest teachings of the blessed Gospel which has come to us to make us free. And here is a chapter on 'Righteousness by Works,' which is, of course, the great aim of the miserable bondage of the poor prisoners. The book is elegantly written, with a feeling and a pathos becoming such a dismal subject. Ye lovely maidenhood of England, beware of the fearful convent!"—The Christian World.

Rome, the Murderess.

A Four-page Tract, suitable for general distribution.

1s. 6d. per 100, post free.

"We fervently hope our Protestant friends will scatter broadcast the important tract which lies before us; setting forth as it does the true character and bloodthirsty aims of the Papal Church—for good assuredly will thereby be done. The price of the publication is only 1s. 6d. per 100."—British Protestant.

EARTH'S EARLIEST AGES

AND THEIR CONNECTION WITH MODERN SPIRITUALISM AND THEOSOPHY.

By G. H. PEMBER, M.A.

"The 200 pages on spiritualism and the modern movement of an occult theosophy are very remarkable and startling."—The Christian.

"This is a singular book, wonderfully instructive in its own line."—Sword and Trowel.

"A work of marked ability. The parts which treat of spiritualism contain much important and neglected truth as to the demonology of heathenism and on present-day phenomena, and are highly interesting."

Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.

"The revelations on the subject of Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Buddhism, as bearing on the great theme he has in hand, are startling in the extreme."—Baptist.

NOTICE.—Three Large Editions having already been exhausted, a FOURTH EDITION has now been prepared of

THE LIFE AND WORK OF THE

SEVENTH EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G. By EDWIN HODDER. And can now be had at all booksellers, in Three Vols., with Portraits, price 36s.

THE TIMES says—

"These volumes possess a special value, and they furnish a complete picture of their subject in his political, social, domestic, philanthropic, and religious relations. . . . It is impossible to rise from a study of the Earl's life and character without a feeling of pride that his efforts and affections were all enlisted on the side and in the service of the people; and it is equally impossible to believe in the decadence of England so long as she continues to produce men of this noble and unselfish type."

THE ROCK says—

"Christian men will rise from the perusal of his volumes with a deeper reverence for the memory of the great dead—great in every way, great in prayer, great in courage, great in purpose, great in compassion, and great in achievement."

THE NONCONFORMIST says—

"A fascinating and complete work, masterly in general treatment, and full, but not tedious in details—unquestionably the standard life of one of the great men of our era."

The Book World.

The Tramp Family; or, Jack the Tinker. By Mary Batchelor. 2s. Elliot Stock. This is a pretty story prettily told. The plot is old, but the incidents and characters have a dewy freshness which captivates the attention of the reader.

Gems from the States. Collected by Thomas Nicholson. 3s. S. W. Partridge & Co. In this volume is to be found a selection of poems from the works of some of the best singers on the other side of the Atlantic. The choosing has been done with care and skill. Each poem is put in its own place as coming under one of the four divisions —domestic, religious, national, or miscellaneous. The religious section contains several exquisite lyrics, in which beauty of thought is wedded to felicity of expression.

The Sabbath-school Teacher's Handbook. By Thomas Morrison, M.A., LL.D. 2s. Sunday-school Union. We pity the Sabbath-school teacher who could rise from reading this admirable book without feeling better equipped for his work. It is the fruit of much thinking, wide reading, and a diversified experience in the instruction of the young. Its tone is inspiring, and its spirit devout. Fathers and mothers will find helpful hints in it for the discharge of their duty to their children.

The Papal Authority, as affirmed by Pius IX. and the Vatican Council. The Gordon Prize Essay. By Rev. James Smith, M.A., Tarland, N.B. Edinburgh: David Douglas. In days when laxity passes by the name of toleration, and Roman Catholic aggressions are winked at by Protestants, we could not have a better reminder of the duty we owe to the faith established by the fidelity of our fathers than this able and thorough-going pamphlet. Small in size, it is large in respect of the information it contains. Papal authority is considered as a theological doctrine, and in its bearing on political liberty.

A Cry from the Land of Calvin and Voltaire. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. This little volume is a sequel to "The White Fields of France," and has an introduction from the pen of Dr. Horatius Bonar. These records of the McAll Mission all who read will be deeply thankful for; they are full of illustration of the way in which, by the simple setting forth of the Gospel and brotherly kindness, the Lord is gathering out a people unto Himself from amongst a nation that but a short time ago was the despair of Christian people. Such an account will surely quicken Christian effort in all directions, and not least on behalf of that part of "the field" divided from our own land by so short a distance.

The Personality and History of Satan. By Robert Brown. 4s. S. W. Partridge & Co. Mr. Brown is known to many as a careful student and able expositor of Holy Scripture. By his former books he has rendered valuable service to the cause of truth; and by the present carefully written work of two hundred and sixteen pages, he supplies the antidote for a pernicious and growing error. No believer in Holy Scripture, open to convincing argument, can read Mr. Brown's book without seeing both the personality of Satan, and his fearful subtlety and power. But the book possesses the great advantage of showing us our refuge, as well as our danger, together with the object of God in permitting Satan and his demons to be the tempters of his people. Of the Book of Job itself, we have not seen a better analysis than that given by Mr. Brown. We may remark that Mr. Brown is a student of the Scriptures in their original tongues.

The Book of Joshua: Shadowing forth the Fulness of Christian Blessing in Christ. By H. Forbes Witherby. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Many books are now being written on "Full Salvation and Fulness of Blessing;" but too many, alas! might be entitled, "Full of men's imaginations and errors." Mr. Witherby's book is a bright exception. He prefers to set before men God's Word as it is written, and patiently following Divine lines of interpretation, to collecting from all parts of Scripture verses bearing or seeming to bear on some favourite doctrine. Dividing Joshua into two natural sections, i.—xii., and xiii.—xxiv., he sub-divides part i. at chap. vi., the first part ending with the fall of Jericho. He well characterises the first half of the book in the words, "The power of God, the obedience and zeal of Israel;" and the second, "The faithfulness of God, the disobedience and inaction of Israel." In this sequence he sees too truthful a picture of all revivals of religion, and gives many warnings much needed at the present time. We trust this truly spiritual and profitable book may Young Plants and Polished Corners; or, Nature in the Light of the Bible. By Rev. Charles Hewitson Nash, M.A. 3s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co. This is an attempt to show God's world in the light of his Word. The spiritual lessons of the seasons and their effects on nature are brought out with skillful dexterity and deep religious feeling. Mr. Nash has done good service to those who wish to trace spiritual analogies in natural phenomena.

The Pilgrims and the Anglican Church. By Wm. Deverell. Remington & Co. The title and preface of this book are somewhat misleading. Instead of that sketch of Young America for which the names of Bancroft, Bacon, and Dr. Robertson prepare us, the author devotes only 60 or 70 pages to the noble deeds and words of the "Pilgrim Fathers," 37 pages to Romanism (which he seems to think began in 324), and 220 odd pages to English History from 1660—1885. The earlier parts of the book have some claim to be called historical, but the further Mr. Deverell goes the more prominent and vehement are his political and religious bias. Green's "Short History of the English People," though written from a popular standpoint, is fair and intelligible; but those who study Mr. Deverell's pages will find much mystery and very little history.

A History of the Papacy during the Reformation: vols. iii. and iv. 24s. By M. Creighton, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. In length, Professor Creighton's history comes between Ranke's voluminous work and Arthur's two vols., "The Pope, the Kings, and the Peoples." While the foregoing writers take a German and English standpoint, Professor Creighton adopts almost an Italian one. Students of history who know the difficulty and intricacy of this period will be grateful for much light thrown by contemporary documents on Papal and princely intrigues. All readers will enjoy the account of Savonarola, whose virtues and defects are very justly portrayed. We care less for the writer's estimate of such Popes as Alexander VI. and Julius II., and such princes as Lorenzo de Medici. In admiration for their undoubted talents, he is too lenient to Borgia's audacious vices, di Rovere's impetuous self-will, and Medici's æsthetic Paganism. While it is true that the social morality of those days was painfully low, God's standard alters not, and historians, no less than moralists and religious teachers, ought to measure high and low by that standard.

The Influence of Scepticism on Character: The Sixteenth Fernley Lecture. By Rev. W. L. Watkinson. 1s. 6d. T. Woolmer. We trust these three lectures will have a wide circulation, and hope that not a few sceptics heard them delivered. Mr. Watkinson brings sceptical doctrines and their results to a very simple but very just tribunal, the bar of history and biography. He proves that the moral character of ancient and modern nations has risen or fallen according to their acceptance or rejection of sceptical and materialistic principles. He does not flinch in chapter iii. from full but unprejudiced examination of such demigods of scepticism as Goethe, Godwin, George Eliot, Stuart Mill, and even Thomas Carlyle, and shows from the pens and lips of strong admirers how deficient were their characters in love, purity, and generosity. The fallacies of living champions of scepticism, such as Matthew Arnold and John Morley, are ably exposed, and it is shown by statistics that in those modern countries where sceptical and atheistic views are most prevalent, crimes against law and morality are most frequent and flagrant. In a day when German and French scepticism so largely infects our universities, and more than tinges popular books and reviews, we think these discourses will promote that purity of life which Christ exhibited in perfection, and by which his followers ought to be distinguished.

CHICAGO.—Mr. Moody's work here, says the correspondent of the Boston Congregationalist, is as successful as ever. Mr. Francis Murphy is drawing large crowds to Farwell Hall, and has persuaded many to take the pledge, and begin the Christian life.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—During the last month this Society has held meetings of the fallen in Highbury, Stratford, Kennington, and Aldershot; also meetings for men only in the Borough of Southwark. One of the latter, held on Thursday, the 3rd inst., was attended by 250 very hungry, wretched-looking men. Many Christian friends assisted at these gatherings, and a number of men and women were influenced for good. Mr. Christien will, during the next month hold meetings in Portsea, Landport, Southamp

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Major Cole has met with much success in mission services he has been conducting in Springfield, Mo.

Messrs. Fullerton & Smith began a mission on Sunday last, at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, where they are now labouring.

Mr. J. C. Rainey has just completed a series of mission services at Weston-super-Mare, following up Mr. W. Lane, at which souls were led to Christ, and Christians acknowledged much help through the afternoon Bible studies. Mr. Rainey is now at Aston Clinton, Bucks, and expects to visit Wendover from March 14 to 19, and to be at Stratford Conference Hall on March 12, 13, 20, 26, and 27.

Larbert, N.B.—A work of grace has begun in this populous and busy district. Meetings have been held for the past three weeks nightly, and numbers profess to have found peace at the Cross. The meetings are now being held in the Free Church Hall, Stenhousemuir, where crowds listen to the word, with nightly tokens of God's blessing. Rev. Mr. Macpherson is being assisted in the work by Rev. John and Mrs. Robertson, of Stonehaven.

Weymouth.—We have had a fortnight of special services here—holding them for one week in the schoolroom of Hope Independent Church, and the second week in the Bethel. Mr. E. Venn, of Chard, has been ministering the Gospel. Some professed conversion. Christians have been refreshed, and a spirit of unity and love has been manifested. For two evenings the meetings were continued in adjoining villages, and God gave blessing in both. J.

An American Revival.—The little Baptist Church at Charleston, Montgomery Co., N.Y., has recently been the scene of a remarkable revival. Following upon a time of earnest prayer by a few of the congregation, special services were commenced, there being then three anxious inquirers. On the second Sunday morning a lady in the choir, overpowered with grief, broke down. Many others did the same thing in the prayer-meeting that followed, and a time of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord" was the result, this service being prolonged till near three o'clock in the afternoon. From that point the meetings steadily increased in power and blessing, and at the close, over seventy persons expressed a desire for salvation.

Cinderford, Forest of Dean.—Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, has been conducting a mission at this place. The spirit of prayer was manifest before his arrival. Mr. Rodway himself pressed this point in his first address, in which he besought all Christians to unite in prayer for special objects —for the anxious, for the Gospel-hardened, backsliders, &c. During the following week God marvellously answered prayer, and, instead of the 100 souls asked for, 180 were given before yet the work was finished. The greater number of the converts are young men and maidens from the Sunday-school. Those who united with the pastor and his people in praying for a blessing on this mission are now asked to praise the Lord for his goodness, and to continue to pray that the work so gloriously begun may continue to spread all over the Forest of Dean.

Rev. W. H. Aitken, says The Record correspondent, began his work in Oxford on Saturday with a very stirring address in St. Aldate's Rectory Room. It was a capital introduction to the mission. The Sunday services were fairly well attended, those for men only being in the afternoon and evening. Since Sunday there has been room for some disappointment in the size of the congregations, but there are still half the days left, and many may yet be stirred to a sense of their need of such clear Gospel messages as are daily offered them. The afternoon meetings, not confined to men, are being helpful to many. The Sunday evening sermon on "Without hope and without God," was intended, no doubt, as a special word for any who might be troubled with difficulties of atheistic or agnostic kinds, and was a clear statement of the truth that any hopeless man can find his cure by ceasing to be godless.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions are now being held in connection with this society:—St. Cuthbert's, Wells, by Revs. W. Hay Aitken and James Stephens; St. Saviour's, Bath, Rev. F. W. Dodd; Fleet, Hants, Rev. H. Falloon; Drewsteignton, Newton Abbot, Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox; Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent, Rev. W. Haslam; Chevington, Northumberland, Rev. R. D. Monro; Sherborne, Revs. S. A. Selwyn and L. N. Carey; St. Thomas's, Wells, Rev. H. Pelham Stokes; St. Day, Scorrier, Cornwall, Rev. E. Walpole Warren.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 13.—PSALM XXXVI.

1.—The transgression of the wicked saith within my heart.—"The Psalmist hears within his own heart the echo of the suggestions which sin whispers oracularly to the wicked."—S.C. Dr. Kay renders the verse thus: "Transgression's oracle to the wicked man is—'in the interior of my own heart,'" which he thus explains: "That is the maxim with which sin has inspired him—'In the recesses of my heart—there I can devise what I will. Into that safe retreat no eye can penetrate.' The wicked man thus closes his ears against the Divine Word, but receives the dictates of his own wayward will as absolute truth."

2.—For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, &c.—R.V. gives, perhaps, the best sense to this obscure passage—"For he flattereth himself in his own eyes that his iniquity shall not be found out and be hated."

5.—Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens.—"The Psalmist had looked for a few moments into that dark, miasmatic cavern—an ungodly heart. Shuddering at the sight, he hastens back to the bright realities of faith. Heaven and earth are but weak symbols of the everlasting truth of God his Lord."—Kay.

7.—How excellent is thy lovingkindness.—This is rendered more literally by Delitzsch and Kay, "How precious is thy mercy." The latter part of the verse recalls Matt. xxiii. 37.

9.—In thy light shall we see light.—Kay sees in this a contrast to the wicked man's oracle (ver. 1), "In the interior of my own heart"—"the dark heart will only pour out deeds of darkness."

10.—Continue thy lovingkindness.—Literally, "Draw out thy mercy."

MONDAY, MARCH 14.—PSALM XXXVII.

"The fundamental thought running through the whole Psalm is at once expressed in the opening verses: Do not let the prosperity of the ungodly be a source of vexation to thee, but wait on the Lord; for the prosperity of the ungodly will suddenly come to an end."—Delitzsch.

3.—And verily thou shalt be fed.—The Hebrew is literally, "feed upon faithfulness," i.e., the Divine faithfulness.—Kay.

5.—Commit thy way unto the Lord.—Literally, as in margin, "Roll thy way upon the Lord." The latter part of the verse literally is "Trust also in Him, and He will do it," i.e., the thing which you roll upon Him, as unable to do it yourself.

7.—Rest in the Lord.—The Hebrew is (as in margin) "Be silent to the Lord." "The silence is that of tranquil faith which abstains from fretfulness or self-vindication."—Kay.

11.—The meek shall inherit the earth.—"There is a notable ambiguity in the word 'earth,' which may be rendered the land (Canaan, the type); or 'the earth' (the full inheritance)."—Kay. From our Lord's use of these words in Matt. v. 5, He would seem to have taken them in their wider reference, and Rev. v. 10 may be considered a prophetic anticipation of their fulfilment.

23.—The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.—"Good" is not in Hebrew. It seems to mean that the steps of a man, if committed to the Lord to be ordered by Him, are so ordered; and what follows is true of such a one.

TUESDAY, MARCH 15.—PSALM XXXVIII.

The title of this Psalm, "To bring to remembrance," is strikingly illustrated by the fact that "in the Synagogue this Psalm is used on the Day of Atonement, when 'remembrance is made of sins every year' (Heb. x. 3).—Kay. It is evidently a Messianic Psalm, where Christ speaks as the Sinbearer, confessing the sin He bears as if it were his own.

5.—My wounds.—Kay renders this, "My stripe wounds." It is the same word used in Isa. liii. 5, "With his stripes we are healed."

7.—With a loathsome disease.—A most unjustifiable rendering. There is no word for "disease" in the Hebrew, and the only word used does not mean "loathsome," but "burning;" so R.V., "My loins are full of burning."—Kay.

13.—I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.—This is, again, made a subject of prophetic forecast in Isa. liii. 7, "As a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not his mouth." The fulfilment is to be seen in Matt. xxvii. 14, and John xix. 9.

17.—For I am ready to halt.—"Literally, 'Am fixed for halting.' The halting, or "a position where a fall is imminent" (S.C.), seems to point to Messiah's approaching fall into the hands of death. Not moral evil, but physical is to be thought of.

18.—I will be sorry for my sin.—The Hebrew word indicates rather fear than sorrow; it occurs in Isa. lvii. 11: "Of whom hast thou been afraid?" and Jer. xxxviii. 19: "I am afraid of the Jews." Christ's fear for his sin (as the Sinbearer—the only sense in which He could call sin his) appears in the solemn scene in Gethsemane. Observe in verses 15—18 four reasons for his silence (each verse beginning with "for"), or for his abstaining from self-defence: (1) He has committed his cause to God; (2) lest his enemies should magnify themselves against Him; (3) his being "fixed," or appointed to his fall, i.e., his death; (4) his acknowledging the sin laid upon Him as his own.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16.—PSALM XXXIX.

"In ver. 14 of the last Psalm the Psalmist calls himself a dumb person, who opens not his mouth. This submissive, resigned keeping of silence he affirms of himself in the same words in this Psalm (ver. 3) also. This forms a prominent characteristic common to the two Psalms, which fully warranted their being placed together."—Delitzsch.

3.—Then spake I with my tongue.—"The rest of the Psalm tells us what he said."—S.C.

6.—Surely every man walketh in a vain shew.—Or, "as a shadow." Prof. Cheyne renders the former part of this verse: "Surely in mere semblance man walks to and fro; surely for mere vanity are they so boisterous."

7.—And now, Lord, what wait I for? my hope is in Thee.—This is both the central verse and the centre thought of the Psalm.

9.—Thou didst it.—"The great word which the Psalmist had already used (xxii. 31) of God's saving work."—S.C.

11.—Thou makest his beauty to consume away like the moth.—Prof. Cheyne renders this: "Thou destroyest, like the moth, his desirable things;" or, "what he prizes most."—Kay.

13.—O spare me.—Lit., "Look away from me." —Delitzsch. "Avert thy frown that I may gleam again."—Cheyne. The word translated "recover strength" means a brightening after darkness. "It reminds one of the gleam of radiance that is often seen on the face of the dying."—Pusey.

THURSDAY, MARCH 17.—PSALM XL.

"Messiah, risen from the dead, returns thanks for the accomplishment of his work, and prays for its final effect."—Horsley.

3.—Many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the Lord.—There is a probable reference in these words to the sentence so often occurring in Deuteronomy of the effect produced by the capital punishment of a transgressor of the law. "All Israel shall hear and fear."—Kay. In this case, looking back upon his death as a solemn judgment of sin, Christ beholds what will bring home to many the thought that God will not leave sin unpunished; but, whereas under the law there follow some such words as "and shall do no more any such wickedness," this display of judgment against sin at the Cross is followed by, "and shall trust in the Lord."

6.—Mine ears hast Thou opened (margin, "digged").—"Compare Isa. l. 4, 5, 'The Lord God hath opened mine ear,' where, as here, we recognise an allusion, rather than a direct reference to Exod. xxi. 1—6 (the first of the 'judgments' prescribed to Israel at Sinai)."—Kay. The quotation of these words in Heb. x. follows the LXX., who read, "a body hast Thou prepared me," discarding as they generally do the metaphor, and giving what they thought to be (and correctly, as the quotation shows) the meaning of the expression.

"God desires not sacrifice, but hearing ears, and consequently the submission of the person himself in willing obedience."—Delitzsch. To yield this willing obedience was the Son of God provided with a body, which, with its meritorious obedience, and with the atoning efficacy of its death, He makes over to his people as their everlasting possession.

12.—Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me.—

> Our sins, our guilt, in love divine,
> Confessed and borne by Thee;
> The gall, the curse, the wrath were thine,
> To set thy members free.

17.—But I am poor and needy.—The great Substitute still identifies Himself with his "poor and needy" ones upon earth. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?"

FRIDAY, MARCH 18.—PSALM XLI.

The ninth verse of this Psalm, quoted by our Lord Himself (John xiii. 18) seems to identify Him with the "poor" one spoken of in ver. 1, which, however, is not the same word as "poor" in the last verse of Ps. xl., but means rather "afflicted."

1.—Blessed is he that considereth the poor.—Lit. "wisely considereth the afflicted one."

2.—The Lord will preserve him.—This threefold deliverance effected by Jehovah "will deliver him," "will preserve him," "will strengthen him," will be seen by those who "wisely consider" the afflicted one. He is the subject of the deliverance. The blessedness consists in seeing him thus delivered. Bishop Horsley appositely quotes our Lord's words, "Blessed is he who is not offended in Me."

4.—I said, Lord, be merciful unto me.—The Psalmist now recounts his own experience as the "afflicted" one, whose ultimate deliverance he anticipates in the closing verses of the Psalm.

10.—Raise me up, that I may requite them.—"This sounds like revenge. But it must be remembered that it was the duty of David, as king and judge, 'bearing not the sword in vain… the minister of God…a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil' (Rom. xiii. 4), not only to put down the conspirators, but to inflict upon them just and adequate punishment."—S.C. This also is true of Him of whom David was but type. See 2 Thes. i. 7—9.

12.—Thou…settest me before thy face for ever. —See Eph. i. 20, &c., where it has a notable fulfilment in the resurrection, ascension, and glorification of Christ, with all his members quickened, raised, and glorified with Him.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19.—PSALM XLII.

This last Psalm brought to a close the first division or book of the five into which the Psalter is divided. The second book begins with seven Psalms "for the sons of Korah." "These were, according to 1 Chron. vi. 16, &c., ix. 19, xxvi. 1, 2; 2 Chron. xx. 19, a Levitical family of singers. Their musical gifts they probably owed to one of their members, the Heman who lived in David's time."—Hengstenberg. They were descended from those children of Korah who died not with their father (Numb. xxvi. 11), and thus their being monuments of God's sparing mercy fitted them the more to be devoted to his praise. The common feature of these Psalms "for the sons of Korah" is praise of the King enthroned at Jerusalem.

6.—From the hill Mizar.—Mizar means "smallness," and there may possibly be an allusion to Zion in contrast to the region of Hermon (the Hermonites), the highest land in Palestine.

7.—All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.—These words are used by Jonah (ii. 3) who was a type of Christ in death and resurrection. Their real fulfilment was what the Lord Jesus anticipated when He said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished" (Luke xii. 50).

11.—Why art thou cast down, O my soul?—Our Lord uses the very words by which the LXX. render this in Matt. xxvi. 38, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful." He also similarly uses the word by which the LXX. render verse 6, "My soul is cast down," in John xii. 27, "Now is my

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A memoir of the late Bishop Fraser, written by Mr. Thos. Hughes, has just been published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

An anonymous donor has contributed £2000 towards the Clergy Distress Fund, which has been opened by the Sons of the Clergy Corporation.

A resolution, deprecating the publication of detailed reports of divorce cases and obscene matter, was passed at a recent meeting of the London Diocesan Conference.

Bishop Parker, of Equatorial Africa, writes that many of the missionaries under his charge are invalided. He begs most earnestly for immediate and adequate reinforcements. It is hoped to send out three or four men at least this spring.

For extinguishing the candles in the chancel of St. John the Baptist's Church, Liverpool, where Ritualistic practices are carried on by the vicar, Rev. J. Herring, the churchwardens were charged with brawling. The magistrate dismissed the case.

The correspondence between Canon Wilberforce and the Bishop of Winchester relative to preaching in Dissenting chapels, has been published in pamphlet form by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton. The proceedings in Convocation, and counsel's opinion on the point, are included.

A "Memorial Hall" for mission purposes is to be erected at Wimbledon, to commemorate the work of the late Rev. Clarmont Skrine, of Emmanuel Church. Mr. H. W. Maynard, Grosvenor-hill, Wimbledon, will receive gifts from Christians who have benefited by Mr. Skrine's ministrations.

A Seamen's Church Institute and Fishermen's Club have been opened in Scarborough. There are at present a hundred and twelve members, and Bible-classes, an adult class, and a navigation class have been started. It is hoped soon to employ an agent who shall devote part of his time to the welfare of the seafaring community.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Forty-two names have been added to the communion roll of Trinity Church, Streatham. The Bible-class has fifty-one members.

The membership at St. Paul's, South Shields, is steadily increasing, and the Sabbath-school is growing beyond all expectations.

The Edinburgh Free Presbytery have resolved to abolish Fast Day services, but they are in favour of a preparatory service being held before the communion.

Rev. P. Robson Mackay, Prestonpans, has obtained a year's leave of absence in order to undertake mission work in India under the auspices of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society.

Dr. Maxwell, late of Formosa, referring to the opium trade in China, says:—"The Church is miserably handicapped by this traffic in preaching the Gospel to the Chinese, and calls upon the English Presbyterians, who have the largest stake in China of any English church, no longer to keep silence upon the subject. It is a matter not of Indian finance, but of simple righteousness."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Reports reach us that John H. Douglass and Allan Jay, greatly esteemed American Friends, are both very active in the Master's work; the former in Iowa, the latter in Western Yearly Meeting.

Henry and Maria Richardson, of York, have just spent two or three days, and mingled with the Friends, in Cardiff. Their company was refreshing and edifying. Such visits do much good in isolated places.

In Scarborough the Temperance Society connected with the adult school seems to be active and earnest. At a week's mission recently held, among others who took part were Joshua Rowntree, M.P., and J. E. Ellis, M.P.

Huddersfield is favoured with a vigorous temperance organisation. At their recent annual meeting 180 sat down to tea, after which Anna R. Whiting, of Leeds, gave an excellent address. Congregationalists and Baptists joined the Friends in this good work. Several signed the pledge.

Hull has an adult school which does good work. In connection with it there is a Pure Literature Society, whose members visit the lodging-houses; they have disseminated many thousands of papers, and sold over 2000 good books.

The subject of Women's Ministry was recently taken up in a lecture by William Hobson; Cardiff, a good and appreciative audience listened while the question was answered in the affirmative: "May a woman preach the Gospel? What do the Scriptures say?"

After the absence for very many years of a Friends' meeting in Cambridge, a successful effort was made two or three years ago to revive it. Now, not only a goodly number of young Friends who are students, but a nice company of townspeople attend the meetings.

The growing activity of Friends is illustrated by the fact that in the Institute at Brighton, children's and adult classes are held on the Sabbath mornings and afternoons. The work has been helped by social gatherings of teachers and scholars, and also by the kind assistance of friends from the neighbourhood. Last year's report is very encouraging.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A very successful Gospel temperance mission has been held at Knot Mill Church, Manchester.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have received "A Queen's Jubilee Offering from C. F. M., £1000."

It is expected that Rev. W. J. Woods, of Manchester, will be called to the pastorate of the Clapton Park Church, vacant since Rev. S. Hebditch left for Australia.

Workers in connection with Rev. R. Vaughan Pryce's church at Stamford Hill are going out into the poorer districts, and inviting non-churchgoers to attend the services.

A successful twelve nights' mission has been conducted at Approach-road, Victoria Park, by the pastor (Rev. Thomas Evans), Mr. Archibald Brown, Rev. Ossian Davies, and other ministers.

At Horton-lane Chapel, Bradford, on a recent Sunday evening, the seats were thrown open to all comers, and the congregation, mostly working men, listened attentively to Dr. Anderson's address on "the Churches and the working men."

In a sermon on "Gambling," Rev. S. Pearson, pastor of the church at Lightcliffe, says, "In legitimate trading people got something like value for their money or labour, but gambling meant getting money, not their own, without labour."

There has been an increase of 147 in the membership of the church at Park Chapel, Crouch-end (Rev. A. Rowland, pastor). The chapel has been enlarged three times. There is a flourishing mission in connection with this church at Edgware.

Rev. J. S. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' mission at St. Ann's Well-road Church, Nottingham (Rev. W. Davis, pastor). The congregation have been greatly blessed, and many, especially of the elder scholars, have professed conversion.

Twenty-six of the Sunday scholars have joined the Church at Clifton-road, Brighton, during the year. Milton Church, Kent (Rev. W. C. Attwell, pastor), reports an addition of fifty-two to the membership during the year, and the church at Brixton, under the pastorate of Rev. R. Rew, of forty.

Reports presented at the spring meetings of the Hull district of the Yorkshire Congregational Union show that in many of the aided churches there had been an increase in the attendance and in the membership. Rev. James Sibree, who has held the office of Clerical Secretary for thirty-three years, has now resigned.

METHODIST.

Over fifty persons testified of blessing received during a week's mission at Snaith, conducted by Mr. Joshua Dawson.

There has been steady and consistent advance in every department of the work for God throughout the Sevenoaks Circuit.

Over one hundred adults have already professed conversion during Miss Wilson's mission at Dunston, Gateshead Circuit.

The Juvenile Missionary Association of Trinity Chapel, Wolverhampton, last year increased its contributions by 50 per cent.

A special mission at Centenary Chapel, York, conducted by Rev. J. S. Cooke, of Scarboro', has been greatly blessed. Night after night souls were saved.

Mr. Hogben, of London, has conducted a successful revival mission at St. Neots. The closing services were crowded, and about forty persons entered the inquiry-room.

The persecution of many members of the Wesleyan Church at Tonga, will be brought urgently and immediately before the Imperial authorities by the Wesleyan Committee of Privileges.

Four local preachers who, some months ago, laid themselves out for work in the villages in the Burton-on-Trent Circuit have been instrumental in increasing the spiritual life in many places.

About five hundred persons have been converted since Christmas in the village of Stapleford, where Rev. W. D. Gunstone, of Newark, and the circuit ministers have lately been holding a mission.

A mission at West Bromwich, conducted by Rev. J. U. Helliwell, has been greatly blessed. The neighbourhood has been thoroughly aroused, and more than sixty are wishing to join the various classes.

A mission band, numbering 49 members, is doing good work at Aldershot. Every Sunday evening, after earnest prayer, an open-air service is held in front of the church and attracts a large number of persons.

As the result of a fortnight's mission at Erdington, Birmingham, conducted by the ministers of the circuit, there were eighty-three seekers after salvation, and about forty have promised to join the classes.

The completion by Rev. Edward Smith of his first year's ministry at St. John's-square Chapel, under the auspices of the London Wesleyan Mission, was celebrated on Sunday last by thanksgiving services.

Captain Warner Dennis has concluded a successful ten days' mission at the Temple Wesleyan Chapel, Taunton. Many names of seekers were taken in the inquiry-room. The church also has been greatly revived.

There were about three hundred seekers during Rev. Thos. Cook's mission at Gainsborough. At Halifax, Higham Ferrers, Long Eaton, and Wath-on-Dearne, special missions have resulted in the ingathering of from sixty to eighty inquirers at each place.

The Wesleyan Mission House, Bishopsgate-street, is to be sold, being much too small and unsuitable in its arrangements for the growing demands and purposes of Wesleyan Methodism. A suitable site for the new building has been secured on the Thames Embankment.

Revival missions at Crewe and Wakefield have been fruitful in spiritual blessing.

Some four or five hundred children gather every Sunday in the new premises in Hartley-street, in which now the mission work of "the Children's Home" is carried on. This, with the hall in Bonner-lane, now used as a "girls' parlour," is doing a good work amongst the morally and spiritually neglected ones of the East-end.

BAPTIST.

Petley-street Chapel, Bradford, has just celebrated its jubilee. The pastor, Rev. B. Wood, has ministered there twenty eight years.

An interesting article, descriptive of the bread and milk breakfasts given to poor children at the Gipsy-road Chapel since the beginning of the year, appears in this month's Sword and Trowel.

Alberto Diaz, the missionary at Cuba, is reported to have baptised 130 converts on the island during the last year. "Hundreds of others," it is said, "have renounced Romanism, and are awaiting baptism."

Mr. E. C. Smyth, of Rawdon College and the Leeds School of Medicine, has been designated for work in the Shantung District of North China. Mr. J. G. Brown, of the Pastor's College, has been accepted for mission work on the Congo River.

Mr. Spurgeon will preside at the public meeting on the 22nd inst., in connection with the fifth anniversary meeting for the Metropolitan Tabernacle Gospel Temperance Society. Mr. William Noble will speak at the Tabernacle on the afternoon of Sunday, 20th inst.

The Baptist and Congregational Churches in Cardiff (pastors, Rev. F. C. Spurr and Rev. J. Morris) have united in a special mission to reach the people. Over forty ladies visited every house in the district twice, with the result that large congregations attended every evening. The two Churches have been thoroughly aroused, and a deep impression has been made in the neighbourhood.

SALVATION ARMY.

New stations have been opened at Cullompton and Hatherleigh, Devonshire.

The Congregationalists at Mitcham have lent their schoolroom for an Army meeting.

A "Skeleton Army" at Bromley, Kent, are doing their best—or their worst—to hinder the work.

"A sympathiser" writes to The War Cry describing "a grand work" that is going on at East Grinstead.

A blacksmith's shop at Brixton has been opened as a barracks. Crowds attend every night, and many are getting saved.

From Annan, N.B., it is reported that some of the publicans are complaining they will soon be obliged to close their doors.

A Chicago saloon-keeper has appeared before the city authorities to ask for protection from The Army, on the ground that they are ruining his trade.

Captain and Mrs. Cooke, who have lately taken command at "The Grecian," City-road, state that during their six months' stay at Plymouth there were 200 conversions.

The death of Mrs. Tucker, wife of Commander Tucker, of India, is announced in last week's War Cry; "everyone had thought that danger was past, and she was rapidly recovering."

Failures are not often recorded in the Army prints, but we observe reports from Ramsbury and Wokingham, in the Southern Division, telling of the "hardness" of the people.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

The following deaths are recorded:—Rev. B. Rice, of the L.M.S., at Bangalore, aged 72; Rev. Robert Dugdale, Wesleyan minister, at Staple-hill, near Bristol; Rev. John Cartwright, of the Methodist Free Churches, at Frodsham, aged 79; Rev. W. Rowling, formerly minister of Belvoir-street Wesleyan Reform Chapel, Heigham, aged 72; Rev. Richard Owen, a Calvinistic Methodist, the most conspicuous evangelist of Wales; Rev. E. F. Alexander, vicar of St. Paul's, Lorrimore-square, Walworth, aged 37; Rev. James Wilson (the oldest minister in the Connexion), at Burton-on-Trent, aged 94; Rev. Manchala Ratnam (the first Brahmin convert in the school at Masulipatam), and Rev. D. Stephen, native pastors in the Telugu Mission.

Weekly Free Meals have been given in the schoolroom of the Congregational Chapel, Millwall, to the destitute unemployed, and evangelistic meetings held with pleasing results. Funds are urgently needed to carry on the work.—(Rev.) W. J. Temple, 21, Maud-road, Plaistow.

Cinderford, Forest of Dean.—For the use of a large Sunday-school, numbering 1200, of whom 500 are above sixteen years of age, large class-rooms are now being built. The people, who are very poor, have themselves contributed £300, and earnest appeal is made for the £200 balance, which is urgently needed by the end of March.—Rev. Wm. Thomas, Minister.

Herr Krupp, the noted gun-maker, employs about 17,000 men and lads in his various works. At Essen about 600 or 700 men at a time are stationed; and, as they cannot have their wives with them, all arrangements needed for their bodily welfare are provided. A good colporteur has long desired to introduce the Bible to these workmen, but, like all other dealers, he has been denied entrance to them. However, the Lord opened the way in answer to prayer, and many Bibles have been sold and read, though not without much ridicule on the part of some.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Plebiscites of 39 towns in Scotland show nearly twelve to one against the liquor-traffic.

Mr. Stevenson's Sunday Closing Bill is down for March 29, a fact of which electors should remind their M.P.'s.

The managers at the Nurses' Institute at York have altered the rule which required that the nurses should be allowed a certain quantity of beer per day.

The Newcastle, Gateshead, and District Band of Hope Union now numbers 81 societies, total membership over 11,000. 2500 pledges were taken during the year.

The Pall Mall Gazette suggests that Charing Cross-road, the new West-end thoroughfare, should be called "Pothouse Avenue," because of the number of public-houses in it.

Rev. S. F. Pearson, of Portland, Maine, U.S.A., has been conducting missions in the north of Ireland, under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League, for the last two months.

London Diocesan Temperance Sunday this year will be on April 24. The C.E.T. Chronicle hints that lay workers should inquire if they are "to have temperance sermons this year."

Dr. Richardson says he would rather see in any town or district the formation of the smallest Band of Hope than the exhibition of the greatest temperance revival you could look upon.

During last year the county of Radnor, in Wales, with fully 23,000 inhabitants, had not a single arrest for Sunday drunkenness. The Sunday Closing Act is obviously a success.

In a recent issue, The Lancet said, "There is a preponderating amount of medical opinion that all but a very moderate amount of alcohol to the majority of people is injurious."

The Manchester Lodging-houses for Respectable Female Strangers is a work of great value. 8000 persons have used the houses, which are conducted on strict abstinence principles.

The Church of Ireland Temperance Society has now 700 branches, with about 100,000 members. On the recent "temperance Sunday" sermons on this important subject were preached in 300 parishes throughout the country.

Mr. A. Robertson, who has for some years acted as lecturer in Scotland in connection with the Highland Temperance League, has removed to London to carry on temperance work among Highlanders resident in the Metropolis.

The Rock condemns Canon Campion's recent attack in Convocation on the use of unfermented wine at the Sacrament. It says it is "not the cup, but the presence of Christ in the heart, that makes Holy Communion a means of grace."

Mr. William Noble paid a visit to Bradford on the 19th ult. to open the third United Gospel Temperance Mission in the town. He was welcomed by the committee and 400 workers, and addressed crowded audiences on Sunday, speaking with great power. Since his return to England he has been speaking every night, either in London or the provinces.

Much has been done to promote the cause of temperance in Hastings, where there are 230 licensed houses, during the past few years. The whole of the hotels, public-houses, and beer-shops are visited by Mr. James C. Parker, the honorary tavern missionary. His visits are well received. He has been much encouraged by Rev. F. Whitfield, and several other local ministers.

WESTWARD HO!

A FAREWELL MEETING to dismiss 200 Trained Lads (who leave for Canada on the 17th inst.) will (D.V.) be held in

THE LARGE HALL—EDINBURGH CASTLE,

On MONDAY EVENING, 14th INST., at 8 o'clock.

JAMES RANKIN, ESQ., M.P., will preside, and will be supported by many Public Men who take an interest in Emigration.

The Attendance of Christian Friends is desired. Admission to any part of the Hall is FREE; but as a very large audience is expected, SPECIAL TICKETS admitting to RESERVED SEATS, and possessing Facilities for Ingress and Egress, can be had on application at the Office, as below.

The same 200 Lads will also, as usual, attend (by kind permission of the Secretary).

THE NOON-DAY PRAYER MEETING at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, on Monday, the 14th, when the prayers of those assembled will be asked on their behalf. Friends who cannot attend the Evening Meeting are invited to be present at Noon.

It is hoped that at least 600 carefully-trained youngsters may be placed out in the Dominion at an aggregate cost of £5,100 during the present year; 622 Boys and Girls having been emigrated during 1886.

£8 10s. will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Boy.

£51 will do the same for Six Boys; £102 for Twelve Boys; or £170 for Twenty Boys.

Who, by promising one or other of these amounts, will help to give some of these young fellows a start in life?

Contributions for the Emigration Fund are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Treasurer, WM. FOWLER, Esq.; by the Chairman of Committee, S. G. SHEPPARD, Esq.; or by the Founder and Director, Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

WORKS by Rev. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.

HISTORY of the SCOTTISH NATION.

Volume I., Demy 8vo., cloth, 9s.

Pre-Historic, Druidic, Roman, and Early Christian Scotland.

Now Ready, Volume II., 8vo., cloth, 9s.

Embracing Lives and Epochs of Ninian, Patrick, Columba, Columbanus, and the Celtic Evangelisation.

"This promises to be a noble work. Every Scotchman should read it. We began to read it, and we could not lay down the book; it held us firmly, and demanded of us that we should hear it tell its tale even to the end. We yielded; and we advise our readers to do the same."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.

Fourth Thousand, Demy 8vo., cloth, Price 8s. 6d.

THE PAPACY,

Its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects.

Being the Evangelical Alliance First Prize Essay on Popery.

"With all we have read on Popery, we have yet met with nothing in the English language which we regard to be so complete in itself, and so overwhelmingly destructive to Romanism, as the work before us."—Evangelical Magazine.

EGYPT AND ITS FUTURE:

A Visit to the Land of the Pharaohs.

Crown 8vo., Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Egypt itself, the land of the Pharaohs—is [illegible] in such [illegible] graphic terms as if it stood out in a picture to the actual [illegible] the reader. Its soil; its people: its laws; even its dogs; [illegible] all, its monuments of hoary antiquity, which connect the present with a far distant past—all are [illegible] review. God hath set [illegible] even unto this day. An [illegible] discovered at Th[illegible] sacred and [illegible] interest, and [illegible] it will be read with great profit and satisfaction."—The Record.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

THIS Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent fallen young women, for whom little provision had been made. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room in the Homes. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character, and position, to mix with others.

Since the Homes have been established 2920 have been admitted; of this number 1060 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 310 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others. While inmates of the Homes, the young women are trained in household and domestic duties, with a view to their becoming good and useful members of society. The great object, however, kept most anxiously before the Committee is, to afford them opportunities of religious instruction, and to impress upon them the extreme importance of turning to God with all their hearts.

The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

H. THOMPSON, Esq., Treasurer,
88, Mincing-lane, E.C.

W. HORNIBROOK, Secretary,
4, Regent-square, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

(1) For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.

(2) For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five shillings would pay for a child for a week.

(3) For law expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

Donations received at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—Eight Missionaries now carry the knowledge of the Gospel to the poor of Paris. They pass from room to room in the lowest parts of the city, reading from and supplying copies of the Word of God. One of them devotes his efforts entirely to the neglected English poor. The marked blessing of Almighty God is resting upon this endeavour to enlighten the most ignorant and depraved—leading them to the Saviour. The Committee ask for the prayerful sympathy of English Christians. A French gentleman has just given 500 francs, but £30 more is required to pay the men to the end of the financial year. They implore your help.—J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

REBECCA JARRETT.

By JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

Superior Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.
☞ Special Cheap Edition, 1d.

A LIBERAL ALLOWANCE ON QUANTITIES FOR DISTRIBUTION.

A Few of the Opinions of the Press.

"With all the power of a devoted heart and a practised pen Mrs. Josephine Butler pleads for a just judgment on behalf of Rebecca Jarrett; every one should procure a copy of her sketch of the life of this poor woman."—Sentinel.

"Much light is thrown upon the past life and character of Rebecca Jarrett, and it must call forth the sympathy of all who read it for the one now undergoing punishment. The writer, in a most earnest and devoted manner, lays bare many incidents of Jarrett's history. On the one side we have her early and sinful associations. On the other hand her new life and religious earnestness. The finger of scorn will not be so ready to point at this weak woman after a perusal of Mrs. Butler's well-timed vindication of the latest phase of her life's character and work."
Erith Times.

"The interest centres in the explanation given by the Author of the conduct of Jarrett while under cross-examination. . . . Jarrett appears to have been a woman of deep affection, who cheerfully performed revolting offices in rescue work. . . . Mrs. Butler has loyally stood by her humble helpmate; and for that she deserves the thanks of every honest man and woman."
Hastings and St. Leonard's News.

"In this pamphlet Mrs. Butler defends Rebecca Jarrett in vigorous terms from the cruel aspersions cast upon her during the late trial. . . . Truly Mrs. Butler's defence is a heart-stirring one, and places the poor woman in a much more favourable light than she is generally regarded. . . . Those who peruse this story will find it of great and pitiful interest."

WHERE ARE YOU GOING?

By LADY HOPE.

"He calls for another glass of spirits, and still he plays his game excitedly, vehemently; strange to say, he cannot find his equilibrium to-night. Everything speaks to him; everything taunts him; everything tells him the same story. It is the one he has been hearing at the iron hall. The very balls seem to mock him with the stranger's parting words, and to turn them into a downright question:

> Christian Leader, Dec. 23, 1886.

"By far the best of all the cheap editions of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' that we have seen is one issued this week by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Care has been bestowed upon the revision, the text having been early editions; a point all the more worthy of grateful recognition when we see so many conscienceless reprints, abounding in old and new blunders, tumbled into the market. The type is new, leaded, and very readable; and the book, printed on superior paper, and adorned with upwards of a dozen original illustrations, costs in its cheapest form only Sixpence. The portability of the volume is an additional feature worthy of note; it is so light that it may be held in the hand by the aged or invalids without exertion or causing fatigue."—The Christian Leader.

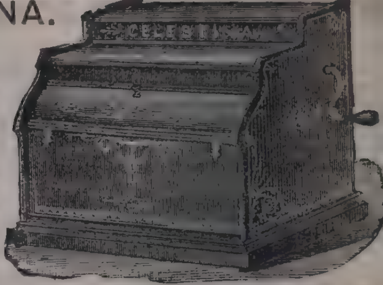
THE CELESTINA.



Very suitable for Mission Halls, or Small Churches, or for Musical Drill.

This Charming Instrument performs every description of Music for Psalm, Song, March, or Dance, rivalling the most skilled musician. It plays thousands of tunes—there is no limit to the number.

It requires no knowledge of music on the part of the player, but can be played by anyone, even a child. The tone is rich, round, mellow, and very pleasing, blending beautifully with the human voice when singing. The tune can be repeated as often as required; and the music is very cheap.

The Celestina is adapted to enliven the Home, and will be found extremely usefu in conducting religious services, or for instructing Psalmody classes.

THE man who would be a fully-equipped and successful preacher of the everlasting Gospel cannot be too well versed in the varied aspects of our many-sided human life. It is true his message is but one. In its delivery and enforcement, however, the powers of adaptation and of illustration can only reach their fullest exercise when born of personal observation and experience. Natural gifts count for much; but the fact that Dr. Munhall is at the present time one of America's most effective evangelists, may be largely attributed to his peculiar training in "the world's wide field of battle."

Dr. Munhall has yet some six years to live before he can celebrate his jubilee; he was born in the State of Ohio, in 1843. When a boy he was set to learn a mechanical trade—a good beginning for any youth, be he prince or commoner. At the age of seventeen we find him joining the great citizen army of defence that was enrolled on the outbreak of the civil war. Some two years before this his father died, leaving him a death-bed blessing, and the fondly expressed wish that one day he might become a preacher of the Gospel. The young man was consciously converted a few months before he took up arms on behalf of fatherland. In the war he saw much "active service," going through more than twenty engagements unscathed. Whatever else his military career did for him it provided him with some considerable knowledge of "affairs," and furnished many illustrations that he has not failed to turn to account in his more agreeable spiritual warfare as a messenger of the Cross. He entered the ranks as a private, but ere he left them he had been promoted, for meritorious service, to the adjutancy of the regiment. Before the war began he had gone through a preliminary course of medical study, and on his resumption of civil life he elected to take up the profession of surgical dentistry, which profession he practised with success, in Indianapolis, for nine years.

(From Photograph by Mr. W. H. Potter, Indianapolis.)

The last parental counsel, though it may have seemed to slumber, was fulfilled when young Munhall resolved to relinquish his calling, though it had become a very lucrative one, and enter on the higher profession of the care of perishing souls. Constraint was laid upon him, and he yielded to the call to engage in Gospel work. For some time during his residence in Indianapolis he had been President of the local Y.M.C.A., and Chairman of the State Executive Committee, and it was in connection with this branch of Christian effort that he decided to launch out. He accepted the post of Secretary for the Indiana State Association, and held it for some ten years, spending a portion of every year in direct Gospel work. During his term of office he was a member of the International Executive Committee, and was present as a delegate at the World's Conference, in Geneva. His secretarial duties led him into different parts of the extensive central state of Indiana, and his voice has been heard as an ambassador of Jesus Christ in all its leading centres of population.

Two years have not yet passed since Dr. Munhall gave up Association work in order to devote himself entirely to the work of an evangelist. Since then he has preached the Gospel in widely separated places throughout the United States. He followed up meetings held by Mr. Moody in the Eastern and the Southern States during the winter of last year. It is certainly no child's play to take up the threads dropped by such a worker as Mr. Moody, but Dr. Munhall was able to do so, and to sustain the interest, with blessed results to many of those among whom he laboured.

A somewhat extensive campaign was subsequently entered on in the Far West. Missions were held in such places as Los Angelos, San Jose, and Sacramento, in the State of California; in Portland, Oregon; Denver, Colorado, &c. The difficulties that meet the evangelist in such Western cities can scarcely be understood by any except those who have experienced them. San Francisco has the repute, which it seems well able to sustain, of being one of the wickedest cities in the world; the other cities we have mentioned are probably not much better from the moral and spiritual point of view. With a marvellous climate, and placed amid natural scenery magnificent beyond description, these far Western cities are almost the rubbish-heaps of the race, and successfully vie with other parts of the globe in claiming a special application of the poet's well-worn couplet about the place

Where every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile.

Dr. Munhall, in a conversation last autumn with the present writer, mentioned some facts which may be of public interest in gauging the conditions of Christian work on the Western seaboard of America:—

> The Pacific Coast is as distinct in its characteristics from "the West," as that is from the Eastern portion of the States. In California the original English-speaking settlers were almost exclusively adventurers, drawn thither by the gold fever of 1849-51. Nearly 800 million dollars worth of gold have been taken out of the hills of California alone. These speculators had to go by waggon-stage or on horseback across trackless deserts, and through hostile tribes. Many of them were murdered, and their bones left to bleach on the desert. They left their families behind them as a rule. There was no religious sentiment that could be brought to bear on them, and, without any restraining influence, these gold-seekers gave themselves over to a life of unbridled license. Such a condition of things, existing for years, gave a complexion to society in these regions which is felt and seen to this day. It is a rare, almost an unknown, thing to find a young man, born amid these surroundings, who has become a Christian. A pastor in Sacramento, the capital of the State, stated not long since at a Christian Conference that he only knew of one such case. At several State Y.M.C.A. and Sunday-school Conventions, where there were over a hundred Christian young men delegates, the question was asked, if there were present a native-born young man who was a Christian; not one could be found.
> The present population of these districts is a non-homogenous conglomeration. They have come from the ends of the earth—adventurers, health-seekers, or those drawn by a desire for the acquirement of wealth. They are a very hard class to reach. Freedom means unbounded license, and every man seems to do what is right in his own eyes. Anyone can get up at a street corner, and either preach the Gospel or advocate the most communistic doctrines. There are many who were professing Christians once, but who, when they migrated to the Pacific slope, did not take their Church letters with them, or did not use them. So they have dropped out of the sphere of religious influence, and are living a life of backsliding. Sabbath desecration is rife. The day is devoted to pleasure or pastime. Horse-racing, base ball, prize fights, picnics, are all carried on on the Lord's day. There is even less of Sabbath rest and religious observance than in Paris. In California nine-tenths of the people are professed Roman Catholics. It is as Romish as Spain, only the laws and customs of the country allow a man to think as he pleases. The Spaniards first settled the country many years ago.
> One result of all this is that the professed Christian Churches are not so strict in their testimony as they ought to be; they have, to some extent, yielded to the influence that surrounds them. A good many of the pastors are afraid to bear witness against the insidious evils that beset the people. On the other hand, there is a corps of pastors who are true as steel, and behave themselves as heroes in the fight. As the country grows older, and outside influences for good are strengthened, things will improve.

It goes without saying that the man who evangelises in such a field need not wonder if the apparent fruits are comparatively small. Still Dr. Munhall had much to encourage him in his labours at the places we have mentioned. There was a pleasing degree of unity among the churches, and many were brought under the saving power of the truth. Among the most fruitful meetings were those for Bible-reading and expounding. The attendances were large and a stimulus was given to the systematic study of the Scriptures. Bible exposition, indeed, is one of the strong points in Dr. Munhall's method of work, and to that may be attributed, we do not doubt, much of its solidity and stability. Of strong physique, he is well qualified for endurance in continuous effort. While fresh and original in his way of enforcing the truth, the effect of his utterances is not marred by grotesqueness or eccentricity. In brief, as we have said, he is well appointed, both by natural ability and by training, for the important work to which he is devoting the prime of his life; and we trust that in the providence of God many years of abundant usefulness lie before him.

The remarkable meetings at Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle in Brooklyn, in which Dr. Munhall was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Towner, have so recently been described in our columns that further reference is unnecessary. The evangelists are now, as we write, busy in the same line of service at Dr. A. J. Gordon's church, in Boston. There is a probability, we understand, that they may pay a holiday visit to this country at the time of the coming Mildmay Conference.

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.

Christian work among the lepers of India, which has always possessed a peculiarly painful interest, becomes more so as it is seen how fruitful in blessing this is. The twelfth report of this Mission does indeed lift the curtain, and reveal something of the horrors of the chambers in which numbers of these poor creatures are gathered; and the statement that there are 14,000 lepers in the Madras Presidency alone is terrible enough. But the statements received from the various asylums aided by this Mission, and where Christian agents are at work, are full of encouragement. The result of proper medical supervision is in itself great indeed, but there is much to show how graciously God has prospered the work.

In several of the asylums there are quite a number of Christians, and others are continually coming forward for baptism. Their testimony is, in many cases, of the most gratifying and convincing character. "Since I accepted Christ as my Saviour all fear of death has vanished," said one dying man. The consistency and uprightness of life of the Christian converts have been acknowledged by their heathen brethren. Many show their happiness by spending much of their time in singing hymns and reading God's Word. The work amongst the children, as well as the adults, has also been greatly blessed, and it is, indeed, one which appeals strongly to the deeper depths of Christian love and sympathy. Miss C. E. Pim, Alma, Monkstown, co. Dublin, one of the hon. secretaries, will be happy to give any information that may be desired.

A MEMBER of a West-end church died recently worth over £800,000, and all that he was ever known to give for special objects connected therewith was a five-pound note!

THE ORIGIN of the CHURCH.

By Rev. F. BALDEY, Southsea.

"Who saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before times eternal."—2 Tim. i. 9, R.V.

We have here as in a nut-shell the teaching of the Bible as to the origin of the Church of God. By "the Church" I mean, not any human organisation calling itself a church—comprehending all persons who are in visible communion with it—but, as it is defined by St. Paul in 1 Cor. i. 2, "them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints, with all that call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in every place."

(1) It owes its existence to God. "Who saved us and called us." God is the author of the salvation of his people. It springs directly and entirely from Him, and from Him only.

"Salvation is of God alone,
The glorious plan is all his own;
In love He formed the great design,
And here his grace and wisdom shine."

The salvation of the Church is of God the Father, as is clear from Eph. i. 3—6: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ; even as He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blemish before Him in love: having foreordained us unto adoption as sons through Jesus Christ unto Himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, which He freely bestowed on us in the Beloved."

From the Father's divine compassion came the gift of the only-begotten Son: "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And the Father made choice of the persons who should participate in the redemption wrought out by his Son, who are therefore said to be "called according to his purpose."

The salvation of the Church is equally of God the Son: "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it." He bought it with his blood. With one consent before the eternal throne they sing, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, . . . to Him be glory." It is the Son of God who saved them, not they who saved themselves.

And the salvation of the Church is equally of God the Holy Ghost. None know and feel themselves lost, none realise their need of salvation, none have spiritual discernment to understand the things of God, and see beauty and desirableness in Christ, none have power to believe in his name, save they whom the Spirit o God hath quickened and made alive turned from sin and Satan unto God and holiness; called out of darkness into God's marvellous light. Without the Almighty Spirit's work upon the heart of fallen man he will never be any better for that redeeming work which God the Fathe planned from all eternity, and which, in the fulness of time, God the Son wrought ou in his life and by his death. That redemption must be applied by the Spirit, or a well might it never have been made. "Th condition of man after the fall of Adam i such that he cannot turn and prepare himself, by his own natural strength and goo works, to faith and calling upon God" (10th Article). Can the dead make themselves alive? Can the blind open their own darkened eyes, and look upon whom and what they will? Conversion or regeneration is a new creation. Can the creature create? Oh, surely not. It is the Spirit that quickeneth: the flesh profiteth nothing; the flesh is incapable of the slightest spiritual effort.

So, then, God the Father saves, God the Son saves, and God the Holy Ghost saves—three Persons, yet only one God. If we are saved, He—He alone, unaided by man, "saved us, and called us." And therefore we say, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give the praise."

(2) We have seen that God is the alone author of salvation, that his Church owes its origin entirely to Him. What is the consequence? The work is done thoroughly. Believers in Christ Jesus are saved. They are not looked upon as persons in a hopeful state, who may possibly be saved by and by, who have been put into a state of grace, and if they make a good use of what they have received, may one day be saved; but whose salvation is contingent on a variety of circumstances and conditions. Oh no, true believers are saved already. Their salvation is not contingent upon a number of ifs and buts and peradventures. It is not a blessing which they are to be always hoping for, but may never feel sure of possessing. It is their privilege to know that they are perfectly saved; so saved that they can never perish; perfectly saved in God's purpose, perfectly saved as to the satisfaction which the righteousness of God required at their hands, perfectly saved in Christ their Covenant Head, perfectly saved, inasmuch as the work of their salvation is already done, entirely done, and they have nothing to do but to receive it as a finished work to which they have nothing whatever to add.

In this sense the members of the Church of God are saved before they are called; saved virtually before they are saved actually; saved before they have experience of salvation. But those who are thus saved—saved in the purpose of God, saved by Christ when He died on the Cross—are in due time effectually called by the power of the Holy Ghost; called with a holy calling; called unto holiness. Not, mark you, because God foresaw that they would be holy. God neither chose them nor called them because they were holy, but He called them that they might be holy. Holiness is not a cause, but an effect. It is well to mark the order: "Who saved us, and called us with a holy calling." The saving first, and then the holy calling afterwards; distinctly showing that human merit did not induce God to save his Church. But this is not left to be inferred. The Apostle expressly declares:—

(3) "Not according to our works." If there could not be a Church but upon the ground of human merit there would be no Church at all, for the best works of man are so full of sin that he can deserve nothing of God but his displeasure.. If he is to be saved, it must be by an act of sovereign grace. To the free mercy of God he must owe it from first to last. Again and again has God declared in his Word: "Not of works, lest any man should boast." "By the works of the law there shall no flesh living be justified." It cannot be by grace and works together. God will not share the glory with another. To his grace, not to my merit; to Christ's perfect work, not to my poor, wretched, sinful doings, do I owe my salvation. His, therefore, is all the glory, which would not be the case if I had a hand in saving myself.

(4) But now we come to a still more explicit statement. The Apostle puts out of court altogether "our works." Having done so, he declares the salvation of the Church to be "according to God's own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before times eternal." How completely this excludes all idea of human merit! How could that influence God to save a people which was altogether non-existent when He resolved to save them? They had no being: they had never done either good or evil. It was before the mountains were brought forth, before the hills in order stood, before even the earth and the world were formed. It was from all eternity. "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." He foresaw no goodness in any vessel of mercy. Nothing of that sort was the motive of his love. His own sovereign love is the sole cause and fountain and source of the salvation of his Church. His everlasting love is the first link in the golden chain let down from heaven to draw a people up to Himself.

If anyone is saved, it is not because he purposed to be saved, but because God purposed to save him. "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." And God's purpose to save a sinner is not founded on foreseen merit, but upon grace alone. It is grace, all grace, nothing but grace, from first to last. There are numbers of people who would be willing to be saved if only they might be permitted to do something to win the favour of God, to earn their forgiveness, to merit their justification. But to confess that they have nothing good in them, that they never did any good, that they are just black, and sinful, and wicked, and unworthy of any mercy, this is too much to expect of people who have lived such respectable, moral, upright lives. Well, then, they can never be saved, that's quite certain, for salvation is, not according to our works, but according to God's own purpose and grace," and it is so that He may have, not a very large share only, but ALL the glory.

And there is another thing which makes it doubly clear that the salvation of God is not to be purchased by works, or worthiness of ours; the whole is said to be a gift. If you pay half a farthing for anything it is not a gift. Nothing can be freer than a gift. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The salvation of the Church and of every individual member of the Church of God is not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before times eternal—"in Christ Jesus." Ah yes, in no other way. God "hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." Thus grace reigns through righteousness. It is on account of the finished work of Christ, not only a gracious, but also a righteous thing, for God to forgive and justify the sinner who comes to Him in Christ's name, and relying simply on his merit.

The truth we have been considering is a very humbling one. When self-admiring thoughts arise in the Christian's breast, it stops them short with the needful and sharp rebuke: "Who maketh thee to differ? And what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now, if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" (1 Cor. iv. 7). It allows not the least liberty for any of the sons of men to lay claim to superior worth, or to glory over their fellows. God's own sovereign will: his own free pleasure, his own purpose and grace, these are the sole cause why mercy is manifested to any sinner, and not any superiority of one above another. To these the Church of God owes its origin.

Again, this truth is full of comfort to the sinner. Oh, what an encouragement should it be to you to know that salvation is not according to your works, but according to God's purpose and grace! Were it by merit, what would become of any of us? But, since it is all of grace, your past life, however black and sinful it may have been, must not keep you from coming to Jesus. Christ receiveth sinners. He receiveth every one who comes to Him. He says, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." All undone and ruined, here is a complete salvation for you, without money and without price.

Once more, how precious this truth is to those who preach the Gospel. Had we to tell you that you have something to do, some part of the work to perform, we might well despair of seeing any fruits of our labour. But since the salvation of the sinner is all of God, of his sovereign, free, eternal grace, quite independently of previous dispositions, character, and conduct, without reference to any creature qualifications, altogether apart from man's power and holiness, we can bid the vilest, the blackest, the farthest from God, come and welcome to Jesus Christ. All undone and ruined, and utterly lost, here is a complete and everlasting salvation for every sinner that believeth, life for the dead, health for the sick, sight for the blind, clothing for the naked, salvation for the lost, the water of life for "whosoever will." But the Gospel of an election according to grace, of redemption by the blood of Christ, of sanctification by the Spirit, holds out no hope, no encouragement, no help, no blessings, to those who think themselves something, and pride themselves upon their ability to do somewhat towards their own salvation.

Moreover, this truth—that salvation is all of God, should make us stand in doubt of methods recommended by the charm of novelty. This is a day of new schemes and new plans. The old methods are looked upon as antiquated—far too slow for this age of progress and enlightenment. Let us beware of anything that seems, in ever so slight a degree, to take salvation work out of God's hands, to contradict the Scripture, which says that his people are "born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"—to take any part of the glory from Him and give it to a creature. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

One final word. The charge has often been brought against the doctrines of grace that they have a tendency to promote licentious living. This is one of the devil's lies, designed to damage the Gospel, and to hinder sinners from accepting it. And Satan produces a lot of counterfeit, spurious, nominal Christians to support the charge. Let us see to it that we never give occasion to the adversaries of the Lord to speak reproachfully. Let us be ever careful to let them see that we have been called with a holy calling. Let it be our constant aim, "As He who hath called us is holy, so to be holy in all manner of conversation, because it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy."

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

MR. GRATTAN GUINNESS'S LECTURES.

V. REFORMATION TIMES.

MR. GUINNESS's fifth lecture at Exeter Hall last week brought to a point the issue between Romanism and Protestantism. It is difficult, indeed, to imagine how any should be half-hearted on this matter after hearing the facts brought forward with such remarkable power of illustration by the lecturer. These might well tend to the foundation of a stern resolve to take up a decided position in this controversy, and to say with Luther, "Here I stand; God help me, I can do no other."

The chief feature of last week's lecture was a demonstration that those who fought the battle of the Reformation, did so not only because they were armed for the conflict by having drunk deeply of the Scriptures, but because in their interpretations of the sure Word of prophecy they recognised that in the Roman Catholic Church was embodied that Antichrist whose lineaments are there so unmistakably drawn. In a few striking sentences Mr. Guinness pictured the period of the Reformation.

> The sixteenth century presents the spectacle of a stormy sunrise after a dismal night. Europe awoke from the long sleep of superstition. Nations shook off their chains. The martyred confessors reappeared in the Reformers. There was a cleansing in the spiritual sanctuary. Civil and religious liberty were inaugurated. The discovery of printing and revival of learning accelerated the movement. There was progress everywhere. Rome was shaken on the seven hills, and lost one-half of her dominions. Protestant nations were created.

The power that blocked the way was the Papacy, which had subverted both the government of God and the liberties of man. The character of this power was once more sketched with marvellous power. Then we were brought on to those "lion" men whom God raised up to accomplish the great work of deliverance.

> There was that lion Luther, who shook Rome and Europe with his roar; that lion Tyndall, who wrenched the Bible from the priests and gave it to us here in our own mother tongue, though it cost him his life to do it; that Swiss lion Zwingle, who fell nobly on the battle-field; that lion John Calvin, who rose in his strength when Zwingle fell; that lion John Knox, of Scotland, who feared not the face of man, and turned not aside from any—these, and such as these, were the men through whom God overthrew in Germany, in Switzerland, in France, in England, Scotland, Holland, the diabolical power and dominion of the Papacy.

The writings of the Reformers were cited to show that to them Rome was the "Babylon" of the Apocalypse, and the Papal Pontiff the predicted "Man of Sin." Separation from the Church of Rome and from its pontifical head was regarded by them as a sacred duty. To them separation from Rome was separation from Antichrist.

We have not space for the many detailed passages quoted from the works of these eminent servants of God, in which they expressed, in trenchant and incisive language, their convictions, and the reasons upon which they were based—convictions and reasons to the power of which thousands of martyrs testified with their blood, and which stand the test of examination in the light of the Word of God itself. Luther admonished the Pope and his Cardinals no longer to persevere in madness, "no longer to act the undoubted part of the Antichrist of the Scriptures;" he "boldly denominated the Pope to be the Man of Sin, and exhorted all Christian princes to shake off his usurpations." John Calvin declared: "I deny that see to be apostolical wherein nought is seen but a shocking apostacy; I deny him to be the vicar of Christ who, in furiously persecuting the Gospel, demonstrates, by his conduct, that he is Antichrist." Tyndal, Latimer, Ridley, Cranmer, Bradford, and Bishop Jewell, all made the same declaration of their solemn conviction. The thirty-second of the articles of faith attributed by Knox to the Lollards of Kyle, and taken by him from the register of Glasgow, ran thus, "That the Pope is the head of the kirk of Antichrist."

Very telling was the description here introduced of the way in which Knox was led to enter the lists against the Papacy, and how in throwing down the gage of battle, he exclaimed before the audience gathered in the church of St. Andrew's, "I no more doubt that the Roman Church is the synagogue of Satan, and the head thereof, called the Pope, to be that Man of Sin of whom the Apostle speaketh, than that I doubt that Jesus Christ suffered by the procurement of the visible Church of Jerusalem."

The feelings of the audience were wrought to a white heat by the vivid portrayal of the martyrdom of Archbishop Cranmer, and by the recital of his last declaration, "As for the Pope I refuse him as Christ's enemy, and Antichrist, with all his false doctrines." It was, indeed, as if we beheld him when, the flames beginning to rise about him, he thrust his right hand into their midst that it might first be burned; and the holy John Bradford too, as when led to the stake he took a faggot in his hand and kissed it, rejoicing to suffer death in the cause of Christ. On such testimony, said Mr. Guinness, rests the Reformation. To reject this testimony is to reject the foundation of the noblest and divinest work which has been wrought in the world since the day of Pentecost! Notwithstanding that all the powers of hell seemed to be let loose against it, the Reformation stood undefeated and unconquerable. God's Word upheld it, and the energies of his Almighty Spirit. It was the work of Christ as truly as the founding of the Church eighteen centuries ago, and the Revelation of the future which He gave from heaven, that prophetic book with which the Scripture closes, was one of the mightiest instruments employed in its accomplishment.

In the concluding part of his lecture Mr. Guinness made a fervent appeal to men to shape their course by the light of these facts. To resist the use to which Scripture prophecy was put by the Reformers is no light or unimportant matter. But the system of prophetic interpretation, known as "Futurism," does resist this use. In weighty and well-measured words, he showed that Futurism asserts that Luther and all the Reformers were wrong in this fundamental point, that the prophecies which they said applied to Rome applied only to a past and bygone Paganism, and a future short-lived infidelity.

The lecturer showed that the Romanists themselves comprehend the true issues of this question. Cardinal Manning has said:—"The Catholic Church is either the masterpiece of Satan, or the kingdom of the Son of God." Cardinal Newman also says:—"A sacerdotal order is historically the essence of the Church of Rome; if not Divinely appointed it is doctrinally the essence of Antichrist." This is the issue, and in impassioned words, the force of which will not easily be forgotten, the lecturer declared:—

> I accept it. Conscience constrains me. History compels me. The awful past rises before me. I see the great apostasy; I see the desolation of Christendom; I see the smoking ruins; I see the reign of monsters; I see their long succession; I hear their insufferable blasphemies; I see their abominable lives; I see them worshipped by blinded generations, bestowing hollow benedictions, bartering lying indulgences, creating a paganised Christianity. I see their liveried slaves, their shaven priests, their celibate confessors. I see the infamous confessional, the ruined women, the murdered innocents. I hear the lying absolutions, the dying groans. I hear the cries of the victims; I hear the anathemas, the curses, the thunders of the interdicts. I see the racks, the dungeons, the stakes. I see it all; and in the name of the ruin it has wrought in the Church and in the world; in the name of the Truth it has denied, the Temple it has defiled, the God it has blasphemed, the souls it has destroyed; in the name of the millions it has deluded, the millions it has slaughtered, the millions it has damned; with holy confessors, with noble Reformers, with innumerable martyrs, with the saints of ages, I denounce it, as the masterpiece of Satan, as the body and soul and essence of Antichrist.

In his next lecture (Wednesday, March 16), on "Post-Reformation Times," Mr. Guinness proposed to deal with the modern revival of "Futurism," and to show that it "promotes superstition and infidelity."

THE RIVIERA EARTHQUAKE.

MR. CHARLES BUTLER, the youngest son of Canon and Mrs. Butler, has been working as a volunteer in the Ligurian district on the Riviera, where the poor industrious inhabitants are suffering so severely from the effects of the late earthquake. In his case the proverb is very applicable:—"He giveth twice who giveth quickly." We know what delays and formalities accompany officialism everywhere, and in Italy this is especially the case. People may wait for a time for fresh houses to be built over their heads, or even for clothing, but they cannot wait for bread. The survivors of the earthquake in that region were, and are, "literally starving." Mr. Butler was in North Italy when the earthquake took place, on Ash Wednesday morning. He at once proceeded to the place where the greatest suffering prevailed, accompanied by a young English attendant and friend, and armed with a letter from the Prefect of Turin to the sub-Prefect of Savona, expressing his desire to be at the disposition of the authorities for the work of excavation and unburying of the dead and the living, or of bringing up provisions. He found the sub-Prefect much engrossed by the visit of the Minister of Public Works, who had just arrived from Rome.

The hours went by, taken up by speech-making and formalities, but no food or blankets had arrived. Mr. Butler therefore proceeded to Mentone to purchase provisions himself, but there he found only panic; bakeries destroyed and no bread to be had. After spending a cold night in the railway station he returned to Savona, and with difficulty obtained sixty or seventy kilogrammes of bread, and also sausages and marsala; with these he proceeded, without waiting for official orders, to Diano Marina (which is completely destroyed), and distributed them among the distressed survivors. Many, he says, have lost their reason or nearly so, the fruit of their industry and savings of years having been destroyed, and sometimes only one of a family left alive. A second and a third time Mr. Butler obtained food in larger quantities, and, loading it upon donkeys, sent i on to the places which have suffered most Bajardo, Bussano, Castellaro, &c. He and his friend going on foot towards Bajardo lost thei way, and in order to ascertain their whereabout they had to ascend one of the highest hills i the neighbourhood. They were for two hour walking in the snow, but were able to retrac their steps to the towns mentioned. After thes days of work, they had sometimes a long wal back in the darkness to San Remo or whereve it was necessary to spend the night.

Mr. Butler's account of the poor people i heartrending, women and even strong me sitting by the wayside groaning and wringin their hands; well-to-do-looking people hungril asking for a piece of bread. The little privat help brought to them in this way before th organised official measures could be set at wor seems to have been very opportune and mos gratefully received. The people gathered roun Mr. Butler and his friend, kissing their hand and blessing them with "the blessing of hi that was ready to perish."

If any readers of this account should fe moved to give a trifle towards this privat "haste to the rescue" work, while awaiting th contributions which no doubt will be sent fro the Mansion House, such will be thankfull received for Mr. Butler, by Mrs. Josephin Butler, The Close, Winchester.

ST. KATHARINE'S MISSION EMIGRATIO FUND.—This fund was started two years a for the purpose of assisting persons wishing emigrate. Letters from friends in America the Colonies giving assurance of work, and som times of their willingness to receive the n comers into their houses for a time, are continua being received by persons in this country. It earnestly desired as far as possible to help su cases. Miss Charrington (Mayfield, Chislehur is the honorary secretary.

ROMISH INTOLERANCE.

WAIFS AND STRAYS IN MANCHESTER.

We have been watching with interest the proceedings which have been taking place at Manchester between Dr. Vaughan, the Romanist Bishop of Salford, and the Directors of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges, with reference to a case which The Pall Mall Gazette unjustifiably described as "Religious Kidnapping by Proselytising Protestants; a Stolen Child to be given up!" The local journals have espoused the matter warmly, and public opinion seems fairly aroused to resist the arrogant demands of the Papal magnate.

The facts, as reported in The Manchester Examiner, are briefly as follows:—

> One of the officers of the Strangeways Refuges had picked up a boy, homeless and destitute. His mother led an immoral life, and had been several times in gaol. On taking charge of the boy, the managers obtained a written agreement from the woman, that on their undertaking to provide for him, he should be left under their exclusive management. The mother also bound herself, if she should at any time resolve to take the boy away, to repay to the Institution the money spent upon him. After a while the boy disappeared, but was discovered and taken back to Strangeways. This led to a charge of abduction before the magistrate. The agreement was produced, and, as the mother had not made any application for the surrender of the boy, the charge could not be sustained. The magistrate suggested that the proper course was to obtain a writ of habeas corpus. This advice was taken, and the boy was transferred to a Roman Catholic Home.

The Romish Bishop has written a long letter to several papers defending his action, as

> Bound to make every effort to prevent the proselytising of Catholic children, be their parents ever so poor or unfortunate.

This sounds reasonable, until the fact comes to light, that, until quite recently, there had been no provision made by the Romanists for the destitute children of that creed. True, a body of men had been engaged for five months last year, but not to rescue children from the streets; only to find out how many supposed Catholic children were in Protestant institutions. And it was only when they found 155 such cases in different Homes, that the bishop and his friends awoke to the fact, not that there were hundreds of children going to ruin in the streets, and therefore needing immediate efforts to save them, but that a few of this number had been rescued and cared for by other organisations.

He pleads that as the Manchester and Salford Refuges

> Receive £6000 a year from the public the grievance felt by Catholics in not being represented on the governing body is very great. But how much of this, we ask, do Romanists subscribe? Not a farthing. The Refuges are entirely supported by the Protestant public, and therefore this "grievance" is as unreal as the claim was audacious.

All who are acquainted with such rescue work know that very often the worst cases are children of Roman Catholic parents, and if the Christian institutions did not care for them they would be in the streets still. But Dr. Vaughan goes on to say that

> This determination to continue to educate Catholic waifs and strays as Protestants compelled us in self-defence to open Catholic Homes for their rescue and protection.

The italics are our own; but the words exhibit the sort of love and compassion which the bishop feels for the bodies of the poor children whom he claims as "his own." But his lordship further demands that all Catholic children found by the Protestants should be handed over to the Catholic Refuge. In other words, that the former are to do the "slumming," and the latter will receive the waifs when brought to their doors; whilst the Catholic officers will engage themselves, not in gathering in their destitute children, but, as hitherto, in foraging about for any that are already being cared for in Christian institutions. It seems to us that if Christian labourers gather in the little ones out of love to Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," they are entitled to see the fruit of their labours, instead of giving them to a Refuge which admittedly only exists perforce, and not from love to Christ or the little ones at all.

The bishop makes much of the "rights" which parents possess over their children; but Mr. F. W. Crossley truly says in The Manchester Guardian:—

> No one can have a right to wrong another, and of all others we have least right to wrong our own children. When a parent rears his child among thieves and prostitutes, he wrongs that child in a degree sufficient to deprive him of all title to its control. That is a fact which has been forcing itself on the minds of those who engage in rescue work, and will, I trust, shortly issue in further legislation. Morally, the proposition is unassailable, and economically it is expedient. Why should we allow children to be trained to prey on society—out of prison or in it?

This being the case, to compel the handing over of boys and girls who, in their extremity, sought help at the Refuges, because an unworthy parent, or officious Romanist, demands it, is intolerance that could only emanate from Rome.

Again, referring to Dr. Vaughan's complaint that the religion of the boy in question was subverted, the same writer asks:—

> Has he a religion? If so, I don't understand the religion which such a parent could have imparted, or such a waif could possess. I would regret to think that Catholics could own it as an illustration of theirs. The child obviously has no religion. To affirm the contrary is to degrade the highest term our language knows.

His lordship's denunciation of "proselytism" comes ill from a representative of the Papal system. One of the founders of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, which many suppose to be purely a charitable organisation, wrote:—

> Our chief object is not to assist the poor. No, that is for us only as means. Our object is to keep them steadfast to the Catholic faith, and to propagate it among others by means of charity.

The British public has not yet forgotten the letters which recently appeared in the London papers, complaining that a Romish priest had entered the family of a gentleman against his expressed command and, through secret interviews, succeeded in proselytising his wife, thereby introducing distrust, discord, and misery into a hitherto peaceful and happy home. And this action on the part of the priest was upheld by Cardinal Manning, the highest functionary of the Romish Church in England, to whom the aggrieved husband made a fruitless appeal.

We are gratified, however, that Dr. Vaughan

> Knows from experience that a Catholic child is certain to be proselytised if educated in a Protestant home.

Thank God for such a testimony to the Christian training of these institutions! The question of "Protestant or Romanist" sinks into insignificance when a child is found destitute and starving. Far higher principles must be brought into action—"The love of Christ constraineth us;" "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord;" "Not grudgingly, or of necessity, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver;" and all for the sake of Him who said, "Whosoever (Protestant or Romanist) shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, he shall in no wise lose his reward" (Matt. x. 42).

This we believe our brother Mr. Leonard K. Shaw and his fellow-workers are doing, and we feel the importance of strengthening their hands at this trying time, especially when the bishop declares his intention of "continuing to waste the money" of these refuges, in litigation to recover every Catholic child found under their care. His lordship's enthusiasm is worthy of a better cause. We are sure he would find plenty to occupy his time in rescuing his lambs from the street, and would probably secure ten in that manner, whilst struggling for one in a court of law. Meanwhile the poor are having their eyes opened as to who are most truly their friends.

GIPSIES AT CHOBHAM.—A tea was given on March 14 to upwards of one hundred of these wanderers, besides some of the villagers who live near on the wild commons, and who are almost as ignorant and depraved as those gipsies. After tea, which took place in a large barn, kindly lent by Mr. Bull, farmer, several stirring addresses were delivered by Messrs. Alder and Valentine.

A WAR SONG for the CHURCH.

By the late Rev. W. POOLE BALFERN.

"To your tents, O Israel!"—1 Kings xii. 16.

The battle rages at the gate,
The foes are fierce and strong,
And sin and hell with pride elate,
With joy still raise their song.

Refrain.
O Israel, to thy tents and pray!
O yield not to despair!
The Gospel yet shall win the day,
For God still answers prayer.

Our pride has kept our hearts from God,
And drained our life away;
Hath hid God's face, and brought his rod;
His love hath veiled its ray.

Our self-inflicted wounds we'll weep,
O joy, too, well nigh gone;
O let us love's own vigil keep,
And each heart weep alone!

Insensible to sorrows round,
Sin's agony and throe,
To misery prostrate on the ground,
And every form of woe.

O Israel, hasten to the blood!
Lo! healing comes at length!
For where we find the love of God,
There, too, we find our strength.

Up! superstition fills the land,
And truth's own heart with fear;
The scoffer lifts his burning brand,
And scorches all most dear.

Intemperance with scalding tears
Still pours its liquid fire,
And broken hearts all through the year,
Still rear death's sable pyre.

By all the pangs of these sad hearts,
The widow's, orphan's tear,
By all the strength that blood imparts
Which kills all sin and fear;

By all that love which bowed Christ's head,
God's honour in the dust,
By that sweet hope, all others fled,
Which bids us rise and trust.

O Israel, to thy tents and pray!
O yield not to despair!
The Gospel yet shall win the day,
For God still answers prayer.

COUNT CAMPELLO'S MISSION.—A sale of work is being held on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday this week, in the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, in aid of this Mission.

BRIXTON GIRLS' ORPHANAGE.—The Lord Mayor presided last week over a crowded meeting at Brixton-hall, Acre-lane, at the eleventh anniversary of the Orphanage for Girls, Barrington-road. The annual report, read by Mr. T. H. Montague, showed that the Institution, which was founded by Mrs. Montague, by whom it is still conducted, now shelters three hundred fatherless children. The number received into the Institution during the year has been one hundred and twelve; seven were placed in situations of domestic service, and seven returned to their friends. In order to the more complete training of girls going into service, they are received during the six preceding months at the marine residence of Mr. Horace B. Marshall, at Margate, where they are instructed under an efficient matron. Many delicate children are also received there, the whole expense being borne by Mr. Marshall. During the twelve months new buildings, erected at a total cost of about £5000, were thrown open. Of that sum, £3300 was raised by public subscription, and £1700 by a loan, which is still owing. The general account showed a balance in hand of £79 2s. 10d. Several gentlemen wrote, regretting their inability to be present, amongst them being Mr. Horace B. Marshall, who sent a cheque for £50 from himself, and one from his son for £25. The chairman advocated the claims of the Orphanage at some length, and several speakers delivered addresses. The children, who were arranged upon the platform, sang a number of selections during the course of the evening.

FROM LONDON TO LAND'S-END.

By Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

In a journey extending over 760 miles and occupying eighteen days, there is much to interest the Christian naturally, morally and religiously. I went in the interest of the Open-Air Mission, expounding my "Broad and Narrow Way" picture almost every day, and seeking new friends and funds for my society. The places visited were Bath, Monkton Combe, Tisbury, Exeter, Newton Abbot, Torquay, Paignton, Plymouth, Truro, Penryn, Falmouth, Constantine, Camborne, Redruth, and Penzance. The picture was expounded twenty-one times, and thirty-five addresses were given in all. I first note

A PLEASANT VILLAGE.

Tisbury is on the main South Western line from London to Exeter, about a dozen miles beyond Salisbury. The site is pleasantly undulating; and, from the higher ground, distant glimpses of Salisbury Plain are obtained. There were added charms on the Sunday I was there, owing to a cloudless sky and a brilliant sun. A humble cottage is pointed out as the birthplace of "William Jay, of Bath," as he is termed by posterity; but it was in this village he toiled as a stonemason, and in the old Independent Chapel, now used as a schoolroom, he proved and exercised his ministerial gifts before he was known to fame.

I have often reflected upon neighbourhoods famous and infamous, and wondered how far they owe their fame to individuals who have lived in them. Doubtless the piety of William Jay has had something to do with the present piety of Tisbury, for "the good that men do lives after them;" but there is a reason less remote and more forceful in the godly lives and hallowed activities of a village trader and his wife who have resided here for the last twenty-three years. Mr. Rowland Hibberd has done a work the magnitude of which eternity alone will declare. The mission-hall and coffee-house he has built are worthy of the best traditions of Holland for spotless cleanliness. His Samaritan Society for helping the sick members of his large Bible-class of men and women might serve as a model for other places, and his desire to conduct the work to the glory of God is a motive worthy of imitation by those who seek to gain the people by worldly methods. The quiet Sabbatic appearance of the place, the way the people flocked to the services, their hearty singing, their simple piety, their neat and clean appearance, and their readiness to help in open-air work are things which will long live in my memory.

A NEEDED MISSION.

Turning from a simple village to a fashionable city is a contrast in many respects; but I only speak of Bath to call attention to its Public-house Mission, recently founded. A few months ago I asked the help of readers of The Christian for a "Mission to Mourners," and it is due to those who responded to say that Charles Smith, who was then visiting the cemeteries in the suburbs of London, is now engaged in Bath as the missionary to public-houses, &c. All good works in their infancy have to struggle, and this Mission is no exception; therefore, it was with peculiar pleasure that I saw the Guildhall crowded, while I lectured, under the presidency of Prebendary Anderson (since deceased), on behalf of its funds. Its founder is Miss V. M. Skinner, whose "Letters" to different classes have earned the gratitude of thousands all over the world.

EXE ISLAND MISSION.

A substantial block of buildings on Exe Island, in Exeter, is a lasting memorial to Mr. Reynolds, who erected them for the benefit of the poor. Some years ago, I happened to arrive at Exeter on the day of his funeral, and had a striking proof that "the memory of the just is blessed." The Mission is now managed by trustees, and includes a varied list of agencies for the good of the people. Miss Farrant, niece of the founder, has a popular half-penny dinner for children, which I visited when the poor children were at their mid-day meal.

WINTER OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Open-air preachers are proverbially ingenious in finding places and devising plans for carrying on their work; but one of the most ingenious is a kind of compromise adopted by Rev. N. S. Taylor, of Torquay. He preaches in the open air all the year round; but has two stations at which the people may hear either inside or out. These are arches or covered passages leading from the street, rented, lighted by gas, and seated. In the entrance of one of these, situate in Market-street, Mr. Taylor stands every Saturday night, and in the other in Union-street, on Sunday night. Very few people come in, but prefer to listen outside, but the curtained and boarded arches serve to shelter his helpers in severe weather. The curious local act forbidding musical marches in the streets of Torquay, evidently does not touch open-air preaching, as two policemen formed part of my audience as I preached in the open street.

A SOLITARY PREACHER.

As a contrast to Mr. Taylor's method, I noticed Mr. Joseph W. Hunkin, of Truro, who neither has regular places nor waits for helpers, but commences singing in any part of the town or the outlying villages, and sings and talks for half a hour before his indoor meetings. A man filled with the Holy Ghost is a power anywhere, even if alone; but fellowship in open-air preaching is very desirable, as a division of labour enables the workers to hold out longer.

AT THE LAND'S END.

After preaching in Penzance on Saturday and Sunday, I took a kind of preacher's holiday by visiting the famed Land's End, Cornwall, the extreme western point of England, on Monday. The coast is bold and rugged, the Longships Lighthouse picturesque, and the Scilly Isles tempting by their very dimness in the distance; but to the Christian the chief interest is to stand on the stone where Charles Wesley composed a hymn, one verse of which is:—

> Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
> 'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand,
> Secure, insensible;
> A moment's time, a minute's space,
> Removes me to that blissful place,
> Or shuts me up in hell.

Our driver, on reaching this spot said, "Shall we pray?" "By all means," I replied. So he poured out his heart to God, while I and two others knelt on the grass and joined him devoutly. In the visitors' book in "The First and Last Refreshment House in England" we found the following:—"When you come to the Land's End, think of your life's end." John Coombs, the mail contractor, who drove us, is not only a decided Christain, but an open-air preacher. Few of the passengers who sit on the box beside him fail to get a word in season: and doubtless he will have many souls for his hire as the result of his faithfulness.

CONCLUSIONS.

In thinking over the places visited, the persons met, and the things seen and heard I arrive at various conclusions. First, that Cornwall is favoured in its climate and in its piety. At Falmouth, Pengerrick, and Penzance some of the vegetation was semi-tropical. Geraniums, taller than the people, adorned the gardens, while at the latter place there had been neither frost or snow for six years. Primroses and other wild flowers were blooming much earlier than I had seen them in other parts of England. As to the piety of the people it was simple and fervent. I noticed that the preachers as they met, asked "How many conversions?" and not "How many were at the meeting?" Missions were in progress in most of the towns and some of the villages. Rev. William Haslam was conducting one at Bath, while Miss North, a lady of considerable power as a speaker, was taking one at Penzance. The Salvation Army was at work in most of the places I visited, and was well reported of by many of the Christian people to whom I spoke about it. Added to local activities and special missions, almost all the religious and philanthropic societies were represented by deputations holding meetings and delivering lectures. So that there is an abundance of machinery at work, but with what results "that day" alone will declare.

CARING FOR THE WANDERERS.

The Home in Manchester for Women who find themselves in a strange place without knowing where to go for shelter, has just issued its annual report, and very interesting and full of encouragement it is. Surprising, indeed, is the number of mischances recorded by which unprotected and helpless women get adrift. Some are servant-girls who have lost their trains, some belated wanderers strangely lost, some runaway girls, one a poor distressed farmer's wife, vainly seeking repose away from home. Altogether, during the year, over seven hundred persons found a home here, the average number each night being eight, the total of beds occupied being close on 3000. It is gratifying to know that in many cases wanderers were brought to the Home by ladies who, travelling, had become acquainted with the unhappy position of their travelling companions, or by sympathising policemen on the alert to shield from evil those whom experience told them were innocently in danger.

Of course a large percentage of those who take advantage of the Home are not in any sense wanderers. They have been there frequently, and know well the comfort it secures to them. On the other hand, "medical advice, temporary loans, and special attention have been given to over fifty individuals," while of the sixty others, who are spoken of as unsatisfactory cases, some have been sent to Homes adapted to their particular needs. It is quite evident that this Home has played a most important part in helping many at critical periods in their history, and in this way has been no mean factor in contributing to the general well-being of the community in Manchester. The Home is situated at 105, Piccadilly, Manchester, and the Superintendent is Miss Wright.

In a letter accompanying the report the lady superintendent says:—

"Judging from Mrs. Booth's statement in a recent number of The Christian, if a band of godly women would establish a kindred scheme close to Victoria Station, worked by the Vigilance Society and the influence of example, things might be improved there; it will be an up-hill fight, but a real true womanly missionary warfare—a sickening and painful warfare, only to be undertaken in a spirit of prayer and high resolve. I do not wonder that women brought up to consider sin and evil in the abstract only, or in the mind only, shrink from attacking it in its ugly every-day evil form; but if we are to be true Christian socialists we must leave our drawing rooms and pitifully and tenderly put ourselves in touch with all God's creatures.

"Our work in Manchester in connection with our station lodging-houses may be likened to a great net: we are liable to catch all and sundry kinds of fish, good, bad, and indifferent; the required reference and the needed inquiry to ascertain its truth involve much trouble and thought. The knowledge that it is carried out is our sures safeguard. Unless managed in this way, instead of being a help and protection, such institution would be sources of evil. There is a very larg body of girls who do not like work, and these lazy, slothful girls are the race who, possibly from hereditary tendency, have no self-contro and no self-respect. My great aim is to tr and prevent the increase of professional sinners and, whenever practicable, to pick up first bab cases."

A VALEDICTORY SERVICE was held at Bloomsbury Chapel, W.C., on the 7th inst., to bid farewel to Miss Jay and Miss Jennings on their departure to Tangier. Miss Jay has already been engaged i the Medical Mission there for some time, and now returns to her labour after a brief rest. The part sailed on Thursday last.

PENNIES AND PRAYERS.

Two cents a week and a prayer,
 A tiny gift may be,
But it helps to do a wonderful work
 For our sisters across the sea.

Five cents a week and a prayer
 From our abundant store—
It was never missed, for its place was filled
 By a Father's gift of more.

Ten cents a week and a prayer—
 Perhaps 'twas a sacrifice;
But treasure came from the storehouse above
 Outweighing by far the price.

Pennies a week and a prayer;
 'Twas the prayer, perhaps, after all,
That the work was done and a blessing brought,
 The gift was so very small.

Pennies a week and a prayer,
 Freely and heartily given;
The treasures of earth will all melt away—
 This is treasure laid up in heaven.

Pennies a week and a prayer,
 A tiny gift may be,
But it helps to do such wonderful work
 For our sisters across the sea.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

A very touching incident occurred lately at Governeur Hospital, New York City. Little Annie Ashpurvis was sent by her parents to the cellar for some firewood. The child, who was but six years old, took a lighted lamp in her hand, and while descending the stairs, her foot slipped, and she fell, breaking the lamp, the flames of the burning fluid soon enveloping her entire body. As soon as the surgeon was called, the little sufferer was driven in an ambulance to the hospital. The child was put on a sofa cot, and the surgeon did all he could to alleviate her suffering, but it was impossible to save her life. Under the influence of a narcotic, she soon fell asleep. Thus she lay slowly breathing for some hours. Her face was so swollen she could not open her eyes. About half-past two in the morning she showed signs of returning consciousness. The watchful nurse asked her if she would take a drink. She distinctly answered, "Yes."

In a moment the house surgeon was beside her cot. He felt the pulse, but shook his head, and turned to go away. As he did so, the little creature moved her body. She turned half around. The dim light of the candle shone on the blackened face. The swollen lips pursed out, and in a clear, sweet voice, the dying child began to sing, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." The doctor and the nurse stood transfixed. The other patients in the silent, darkened ward leaned on their elbows and drank in the sweet melody. The first verse completed, she gradually sank back on her pillow. Her strength began to fail, and with it her voice, and only the humming, like distant music, of the air of the hymn could be heard. How sweet, yet weird, that humming sounded! The candle lent its meagre light, the big clock in the corner told out its seconds, as the sweet little soul passed out to its Maker. The humming ceased. All was over. The doctor turned away; his handkerchief sought his eyes. The nurse gazed into the flame of the candle. She seemed to read the little one's death there. She heaved a sigh, and no doubt offered a prayer. When the remains were buried, the coffin was strewn with flowers, offerings of her little schoolmates, with whom the dead child had been a great favourite.—The Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, March 20, Luke xviii. 18—30; Monday, March 21, Luke xviii. 31—43; Tuesday, March 22, Luke xix. 1—10; Wednesday, March 23, Luke xix. 11—27; Thursday, March 24, Luke xix. 28—38; Friday, March 25, Luke xix. 39—48; Saturday, March 26, Luke xx. 1—18.

"Open the Door to the Children."

This is the appropriate motto adopted by Miss E. M. Stirling, founder and hon. superintendent of the Children's Aid and Refuge, Edinburgh. A sympathetic correspondent sends us the following little sketch of this devoted worker among the helpless babes:—

A "baby-lover" from her birth, Miss Stirling scattered seeds of love and kindness amid the homes of fisher folk when I first knew her. Blessed with ample means, as well as with a large heart, she rapidly extended her care and interest, and was led to start rescue homes and crèches in various parts of Scotland. Of late her zeal has led her, after experimental tours in America and Canada, to purchase a farm in New Brunswick, thus to enable her to offer a free field to her boys and girls for their future maintenance. For their sakes she has crossed the Atlantic thrice, although in precarious health, and meditates another trip in April.

As her work increases, her minute personal devotion keeps pace with it. So truly motherly and tender, so all-embracing a heart I have seldom known. Many can manage a Home cheerfully and dutifully, who find a difficulty in the details of nursing and nursery work, in the kissing tears off a little face, in a soothing embrace, the gentle touch on a curly head that stills as by subtle "mother-magic" all the plaints and sorrows of orphanhood. It needs all the inspiration of love to Christ and love for others, to be whole-hearted and soft-hearted and great-hearted in a work that calls a woman to dirty dens (for homes they are not, mostly), to the police-office, to the nursery, details of food, clothing, sickness, to the lonely night-watching, to the closet-wrestlings of prayer and pleadings for tiny sufferers who cannot appeal, but by her voice. Miss Stirling has laid all her gifts on this altar of devotion to the children. I would ask that her hands may be upheld by prayer and sympathy.

The published reports of the work speak more eloquently than I can do. Copies of little books written by Miss Stirling, describing the work, may be had from Mr. John Macdonald, Royal Bank, 3, Pitt-street, Edinburgh. With the exception of some elderly and more experienced helpers, her nurses, farm men and maids are all "her own bairns," as they have grown up into useful ways. I can testify she has thus the best and most trustworthy service of grateful hearts.

INFANTS' NURSERY, BRISTOL.—The great value of this Home is attested not only by its work of blessing to little children, and by the changed lives of many of the mothers, but also by the witness of Dr. Elliott, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, and many others, who speak of the work here done as unique and truly Christ-like. At the close of the year there were twenty children in the nursery, making a total since the opening of the institution of 111, and in the same period 52 mothers have been received. Unfortunately, through a falling off in funds, the work had to be much curtailed last year, and the fear is now expressed, unless considerable aid is immediately forthcoming, that the nursery may have to be at once closed. The Home is at Manor House, Old Park, Bristol, and the matron is Miss Hardwick.

THE "HALL OF FREEDOM," BRISTOL, built for the encouragement of atheism, having fallen into the hands of a band of earnest Christians, has been the scene of a gracious work, and is crowded night after night with men and women anxious for salvation. Instead of oaths and blasphemy, and subtle sophistry, there are now heard the sobs of the penitent, the prayers and praises of God's people. The free grace of God, the love of the Saviour, and the power of the Holy Spirit are magnified in the salvation of precious souls. An old man, who had been a great drunkard and fighting man, after signing the temperance pledge, has been led to Christ, and now, to use his own words, is as happy as he can be. Gospel Temperance meetings are held on Saturday evenings, and many have been led to sign the pledge. The Gospel in all its simplicity is faithfully preached, and sinners of the deepest dye are acknowledging its power and sufficiency by coming to Jesus for pardon and peace. The evangelist is Mr. Payne.

Manchester Working Lads.

Following in the wake of similar work in London, Oxford, and other cities, there was opened a few months ago, the Hulme and Chorlton-on-Medlock Lads' Club and Gymnasium, in Mulberry-street, Hulme, Manchester. The district is one of the most densely populated in Manchester, and the club membership at present is over four hundred; a considerable number more have applied for admission, who have had to be refused on account of the lack of workers.

The Institution embraces the following useful departments:—Penny savings bank, recreative evening classes, Sunday evening service, gymnasium, situation agency, out-door sports, reading room, Saturday evening entertainments. The object, briefly stated, is to help these lads to provide innocent, healthy, and manly recreation; and lead them away from evil surroundings. The working committee is composed of gentlemen representing all the various sections of the Christian Church.

"OLD CLO'!"

Dear Friends,—May I put in a plea for old clothes? Constantly, in working down here in East London, one feels what a comfort it is to have articles of clothing to be able to give to our poorer friends, and the lack of such a store is at times sadly felt by us. There are, perhaps, friends into whose hands The Christian falls, who are living in some of our pleasant country towns, where the poor do not abound as here, who really hardly know at times what to do with their cast-off garments.

Anything will be useful: babies' little garments, ladies', gentlemen's, or children's clothes; any old warm shawls, or under-clothing, and boots are always specially acceptable. The other day I was asked by a widow, a respectable and Christian woman, for a pair of boots for her son, who was out of work, as he had worn out his own in walking about in search of employment; but I was obliged with sorrow to refuse, not having any.

(Miss) B. Code.

Harley House, Bow-road, London.

ST. MALO AND ST. SERVAN SAILORS' REST.—This was efficiently maintained, and enjoyed by nearly 5000 officers and men of the Merchant Service last year. The number of visitors is good evidence of their appreciation of the comfort they here find. The attendance at the Sunday services has increased, and temperance and evangelistic work is earnestly carried on. The "Rest" is at 16, Rue des Cordiers, St. Malo, France.

THE PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.—The thirty-fourth annual report of this body deserves the careful attention of all who are earnestly concerned in the maintenance of true religion in this Protestant realm. Attention is drawn to the many insidious ways by which in Church and State Rome is attaining power and influence in the country. In regard to these the Alliance is continuously and actively engaged in unearthing what is secret, and in drawing public attention to those acts of politicians and others, of which there have been many lately, which prove how many adherents Rome has in positions of power. It is quite evident the work of the Alliance is one imperatively needed in face of the events continually occurring around us. Mr. A. H. Guinness (9, Strand, W.C.) is the secretary.

THE GERMAN CHURCH AT BRIGHTON.—The semi-jubilee of this church was duly celebrated, recently, by the German community and a large number of French and English friends. Dr. F. W. Baedeker preached in German in the afternoon of Sunday, and Pastor Massis, in French, in the evening. At the social meeting on the following day, Mr. Marriage Wallis, who presided, said the German services were commenced in a very humble way in 1862. Mrs. Rickman Ross, having noticed how large was the number of Germans engaged in various ways in the town, was deeply anxious that something should be done for their spiritual benefit, and it was through her efforts that the work was begun and had been sustained to the present time. Dr. Baedeker, in the course of a stirring address, narrated many incidents of his missionary tours in different parts of the world.

The Late Dr. KENNEDY, of Dingwall.*

Dr. Kennedy was a power for good in his generation. His words always carried weight, and his example was followed with unhesitating confidence. This made him a man of mark. It was natural that a biography of him should be written, and that the writing of it should be committed to one who enjoyed the full trust of his family, and was in sympathy with the aims which dominated his life. Mr. Auld has done his work well, but we think he might have done it still better. He gives us a faithful record of what Dr. Kennedy did, but he fails somehow to present us with a portraiture of the remarkable personality which gave strength to the words spoken and the deeds done.

John Kennedy was a son of a minister, and was brought up under evangelical influences. He chose the ministry without duly realising the importance of the office. At College his religious convictions were not strong. Novels fascinated him more than theology, and the stage appeared nearly as attractive as the pulpit. His father's sudden death changed all that. It led him to face the realities of eternity, and to see the vanity of earthly pleasures. The sense of his sinfulness pressed heavily on him. Extracts from a diary written at this time show how dense was the darkness and how rough the way through which he had to pass before the peace of believing came to him. The perplexities and fears of this season of groping for fuller light fitted him to lead doubting souls to the feet of the Saviour. Prayer was his constant solace. One who knew him well said of him that as a young man he was a man of prayer even more than a preacher, and that he prayed better than he preached.

Before his studies in Divinity were completed, he was called to undertake the pastorate of a congregation at Dingwall. His people had gone out of the Establishment at the Disruption, and wished for a preacher thoroughly imbued with Free Church principles. Such a preacher they found in Mr. Kennedy. On the day of his ordination he got an advice which he was not slow to act upon. "John," said the minister of Cromarty to him, "I think I know you now. Take one bit of advice from me: Don't write your sermons. Spend your time in thinking; for be assured, if you do not express clearly, it will be because you have not thought sufficiently." So the young minister thought out his sermons fully and carefully, and delivered them with the freshness of extemporaneous speech. He possessed many of the qualifications which go to make an orator. His commanding presence secured attention at once; his deep, melodious voice pleased the ear; his massive style of argument laid hold of the mind; and his fine play of imagination lightened up the topics he discussed. Add to these, burning evangelical fervour, and you need not wonder to learn that the minister of Dingwall soon stamped his impress on the Highlands. Scotland is the land of sermons, and good preaching is the shortest road to the best kind of popularity. This was specially true in the years immediately after the Disruption.

Dr. Kennedy remained faithful to his first charge. There he laboured for forty years, till the summons came which called him to higher service. He received many invitations to other congregations, but he turned a deaf ear to them. It was his joy to dwell among his own people. They loved and revered him with a passion verging on hero-worship, but they were not selfish enough to claim for themselves gifts which were meant for the whole Church. They allowed him to travel from parish to parish in the summer season, officiating at the Communion of the Lord's Supper. Wherever he went, crowds followed. Generally, the building could not contain the congregations attracted by his preaching powers; so out on the green sward or on the side of a hill the thousands gathered. Men and women left such meetings with hearts on fire and minds filled with new purposes. The one subject of their conversation was the truths they had listened to. The sermon was rehearsed point by point, and its lessons pondered. If he had devoted himself wholly to preaching, and never entered the heated arena of controversy, his influence would have been still wider and stronger. The impulsive nature which fitted him for speaking well, unfitted him for debating well. In his later years he had to face storms of opposition. The question of Union with the United Presbyterian Church, the agitation in favour of Disestablishment, the strife raised by Professor Robertson Smith's views, and the discussion about the introduction of instrumental music tried him severely. He took what was in the South counted the unpopular side in these combats; but even his bitterest opponents admired the fearless courage and great ability with which he defended his convictions.

We need scarcely say we do not endorse all that Dr. Kennedy said or did. He had not the breadth of charity or the sympathy with evangelistic work that might have been expected from one holding his office. His denunciations of the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey showed his intolerance at its worst, and pained many of his friends. But in the presence of much that we can praise, we do not care to emphasise what we must condemn. We admire the man, true as steel; the preacher, fervent and eloquent; the pastor, diligent and wise; and, above all, and in all, the servant of God, who, by "the visible rhetoric of a holy life," as well as by his words, preached the Gospel with unceasing energy and success.

HOME FOR AGED GOVERNESSES, DUBLIN.—This Home, whose foundation dates back 48 years, while the present house was built in 1878, provides accommodation for twenty-nine governesses and other unmarried ladies, whose age and circumstances place them in a position to require such help. Everything possible is done for the comfort of the inmates. There are seventeen single and five associate bedrooms, with sitting-room on each corridor, all comfortably furnished, and supplied with coal and gas. When requisite, the services of a qualified nurse are provided for the very aged and delicate. It is the only Home of the kind in Ireland, and whenever a vacancy occurs it is immediately filled by one of the many expectant candidates. Ministers of different denominations are regular visitors. The committee having always sought to secure the faithful ministry of the word of life. Miss Moore (Harcourt-terrace, Adelaide-road, Dublin) is the superintendent.

HOME OF REST, WALTON-ON-NAZE.—Already the lengthening days and occasional gleams of warm sunshine are turning the thoughts of many to scenes where rest and recreation may be found. Especially is this the case with invalids, and the report of this Home comes very timely to hand. It is established for needy women requiring rest and change of air, and during the year, including twenty-one free cases, 161 were received. Not a few of these, besides gaining renewed strength of body, have also there realised the blessing of a renewed spirit, and have come to look upon the Home as a haven of rest, where they obtained such a sense of pardon and peace in believing, such grace and strength as enabled them to go back to the hard duties of life with new feelings and courage. Communications in reference to the reception of patients should be made to Mrs. R. H. Moore, 102, Regent's Park-road, N.W.

JEWISH MISSION IN WHITECHAPEL.—In an interesting communication to The Presbyterian Messenger, Rev. Theod. J. Meyer gives an account of the progress of this Mission. There is a great deal of pressure in consequence of the increasing immigration of Jews from the Continent; but this, of course, opens up many new opportunities for speaking of Jesus, "the Mighty to save." There is a regular visitation of Jewish houses and of coffee-houses and dining-rooms frequented by Jews, and interesting conversations are frequently held, in which the missionary seeks to prove that Jesus of Nazareth is indeed the Messiah promised to the fathers. The meetings are better attended than formerly, and since the meeting of last Synod fifty-four inquirers have received regular instruction in the truths of Christ. Since December three persons have been baptized, and a fourth will be shortly. At the anniversary meeting recently held a large number of Jews were present, and listened earnestly to the

Mr. Henry Varley on Social Purity.

At Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, March 8, a body of over two thousand men assembled to listen to an address upon this subject. For two full hours Mr. Varley sustained the attention of his large audience whilst he pleaded earnestly and enthusiastically the cause of righteousness and enlightenment upon this vitally important matter, upon which the Word of God is not dubious, though the exponents of that Word, with all too uncertain sound, are prone to minimise its teaching. That such teaching would not be disregarded, and is not uncalled for, is demonstrated by the attendance in such large numbers of men, who evince, as at this meeting, their interest in that which is felt to be of intense personal application.

Bearing in mind the facts narrated by Mr. Varley, which had come under his notice both at home and abroad, it is mournful to reflect upon the wide-spread evils which have thriven apace under the fostering influence of "the conspiracy of silence." "The people perish for lack of knowledge," truly quoted Mr. Varley, and the physical, mental, and moral deterioration of the nation and her dependencies through the canker of vice continues unchecked. Whilst acquaintance with the vices of impurity and immorality is so fatally easy of attainment (notoriously so in our great towns) the diffusion of the antidote ought to be equally widespread. Mr. Varley is nobly attempting to meet this need. The corruption spreads most rapidly in our cities, and the influence of vicious men infects our youth and maidens in every department of commercial life; and even the villages are not allowed to escape.

Eloquently the contrasts between vice and virtue were set forth by the lecturer, and particularly wise and timely were his remarks upon parental responsibility for watchfulness and warning. The corruption of boys in school, by the well-nigh inevitable contamination of bad and vicious companions, can only be averted and arrested by the vigilance of parents and guardians, whose neglect of the morals of their charges will be visited, in later life, by a fearful Nemesis. Few are sufficiently alive to this dangerous and terribly prevalent evil, especially in these days, said the speaker. In the daily life of those assembled, how were they to deal with the assailments of impurity, and with the moral lepers, forming a true "Devil's Own Army," who abound? These must be denounced and reproved, and others must be warned against them. Medical men who connive at immorality are in this class: such were scathingly denounced by the speaker. Their false teaching is not only in direct opposition to the Word of God, but also to that of other eminent members of their own profession.

Sin and hell God hath joined together, and what He hath joined no man shall put asunder. Mr. Varley concluded his address amidst a hearty and unanimous response to his eloquent appeal to seek the true source of strength, moral and spiritual.

MR. B. SMITH, who lately went to New South Wales to engage in Gospel work, sends an interesting account of experiences on the voyage. He was enabled to conduct many meetings. Twenty-five pledges were taken, and fifteen professed to find peace in believing. Mr. Smith says the Church Army is getting on well at Sydney.

SOUTHSEA.—In connection with Y.W.C.A. work here, which has been much blessed during the past year, we are opening a larger house as Home and Institute, where we hope during the summer months to welcome many young women from London and other inland cities. It is very central, a few minutes' walk from the common and sea. We need help in fitting it up; also to raise a little fund to enable us to receive, free of charge a few of these city toilers who are unable to pay.

E. C. Lowder, Hon. Secretary.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

BY John Foxe.

Handsomely bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A new edition of 'FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS' has been issued by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, which is well worthy of attention from those who have not already placed this famous work upon their shelves. The present edition is well bound, and contains the Rev. J. Milner's valuable notes and comments, and an essay on Popery by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin."—The Rock.

"We are pleased to see the 'BOOK OF MARTYRS' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

The Veil Lifted:
OR,
The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.
By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."
Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."
Berwick Warder.

"Convent life is death to all the finer feelings of our nature, and an outrage upon the plainest teachings of the blessed Gospel which has come to us to make us free. And here is a chapter on 'Righteousness by Works,' which is, of course, the great aim of the miserable bondage of the poor prisoners. The book is elegantly written, with a feeling and a pathos becoming such a dismal subject. Ye lovely maidenhood of England, beware of the fearful convent!"—The Christian World.

Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism.
By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "The Veil Lifted."
Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and thankfully a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly domination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is ...effective and invaluable."
The Freeman.

"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore, but in what was once a Protestant Church we have converts and the Confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details."
Evangelical Christendom.

"Any of our readers who may have friends or neighbours journeying Romeward will do them a great kindness, and perhaps save them from much suffering, by giving them a copy of this pleasantly-written book."—The Christian World.

A Few of the Opinions of the Press.

"With all the power of a devoted heart and a practised pen Mrs. Josephine Butler pleads for a just judgment on behalf of Rebecca Jarrett; every one should procure a copy of her sketch of the life of this poor woman."—Sentinel.

"Much light is thrown upon the past life and character of Rebecca Jarrett, and it must call forth the sympathy of all who read it for the one now undergoing punishment. The writer, in a most earnest and devoted manner, lays bare many incidents of Jarrett's history. On the one side we have her early and sinful associations. On the other hand her new life and religious earnestness. The finger of scorn will not be so ready to point at this weak woman after a perusal of Mrs. Butler's well-timed vindication of the latest phase of her life's character and work."
Erith Times.

"The interest centres in the explanation given by the Author of the conduct of Jarrett while under cross-examination. . . . Jarrett appears to have been a woman of deep affection, who cheerfully performed revolting offices in rescue work. . . . Mrs. Butler has loyally stood by her humble helpmate; and for that she deserves the thanks of every honest man and woman."
Hastings and St. Leonard's News.

"In this pamphlet Mrs. Butler defends Rebecca Jarrett in vigorous terms from the cruel aspersions cast upon her during the late trial. . . . Truly Mrs. Butler's defence is a heart-stirring one, and places the poor woman in a much more favourable light than she is generally regarded. . . . Those who peruse this story will find it of great and pitiful interest."

CHRONIC PHTHISIS—CASE of Mrs. JONES, of WIMBLEDON.

This patient, seeing my cases in The Gospel Standard, came to see me at Coombe Lodge. Her mother had died of Consumption, and all her family had suffered from weakness of the chest. For three years symptoms of Consumption had been gradually, but slowly, gaining ground. Both lungs were affected in the upper lobes, with a slow form of disease. She had taken my medicine on and off with benefit; but now sought my full advice. (It is always better that patients should do this, if not personally—which often is impracticable—by letter.)

The breathing had been very bad; she had been losing both flesh and strength; but since she had taken the medicine, she had improved in both respects, and the cough had decreased.

She continued the medicine on and off for many months; left it off in the summer, and took it again, the result of which was she got thoroughly well.

I had lost sight of this case till writing me, a short time since, on behalf of another patient, she says:—"You will be pleased to hear I am continuing beautifully well since leaving off your treatment. Make use of my case if you think proper.—Ann Sophia Jones, The Lodge, Belvidere, Wimbledon, Surrey.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

LETTERS FROM ROME.—4.

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

THE risen Saviour not only gave his disciples a commission to "go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," He also instructed them how to carry out the commission—"Beginning at Jerusalem;" then "among all nations," in this order, "in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The commission was given them in Galilee, whither Jesus went, and whither the angel bid the disciples follow Him:—"Behold He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him: lo, I have told you." Indeed, before his death Jesus had appointed to meet them there after his resurrection (Matt. xxvi. 32; xxviii. 16). By this very appointment, away from Judæa, and in Galilee of the Gentiles, it would seem that the Lord Jesus indicated that their commission extended beyond the favoured people to all the nations. But, in sending them back to begin at Jerusalem, then to be his witnesses in all Judæa, after that to Samaria, and then to the ends of the earth, He showed that there was a Divine method which it was essential that they should follow.

British Christians, by the favour of God, have become his witnesses, and in some degree occupy a like position to that of the disciples at the first. We have become missionaries to the world, but we have not given sufficient heed to the primitive order of evangelisation. We have begun at home, and for seventeen centuries we had little thought of going further. And when we did awake to this duty we largely overlooked Samaria. The Continent of Europe is our Samaria, and it lies between us and the uttermost parts of the earth. Just as in Samaria there was a hybrid religion, "they feared the Lord, and served their own gods," so, on the Continent there is a Christianised Paganism, a Paganised Christianity, and in the evangelisation of the world Europe should be regarded as primary to Africa and Asia. Therefore every effort should be made to send the Gospel into the Roman Catholic countries of Europe, and to afford every encouragement to those who are already labouring there, of whatever nationality they may be.

The same reason which exists for promoting, first, the evangelisation of the nearer and more influential nations, as a means to that of the less influential, and the more distant, applies also to the importance of influencing

CHILDREN FROM THEIR YOUNGEST YEARS.

"Suffer the little ones to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." There is no comparison between the conversion of a child and that of an adult, as a factor in the spread of the Gospel. The child has not been paralysed by years of mental and spiritual disease; has not formed habits of thought and feeling which the adult seldom entirely shakes off; and there is no such persuasive, pervasive, and perpetual influence, in a home, and upon the parents' hearts, as that of a child who loves Jesus, and is daily learning of Him.

In Spain, parts of which I visited last year, the schools were the first consideration. It is not so in all places in Italy. The municipal education is good and free, and some evangelical schools have actually been given up under the idea that the free education of the Government schools could not be competed with. In other places, however, the strongest dissent is expressed to this view, because the teachers in the municipal schools are generally either sceptical or Romish, or at best indifferent, so that the first stage of life, the impressible period of childhood is worse than lost, and the ground has been thickly sown with weeds, which are never entirely rooted up after adult conversion.

Another reason and encouragement for the multiplication of evangelical schools is the fact that wherever a good education is given there are applications for admission beyond the capacity of the schools, proving that in spite of priestly influence or terrorism, there are parents not a few who value the evangelical teaching, and will run risks and incur loss to secure it for their children. Even, therefore, if the evangelisation of a population through the medium of early education were the more costly per individual (which is doubtful), it is far more effectual, and, considering that one child is equal in years and influence to two, or four, or more adults, it cannot be too strongly urged and insisted upon that the training of the young from earliest childhood should take precedence of every other evangelistic agency; and that the teachers should be devoted Christians, lovers of children, and wise to win their souls for Christ.

"The child is father of the man," this generation is the father of the next, and the same amount of labour, time, and money expended during ten or twenty years upon children would give us far greater results than upon grown-up people.

This is not written in any wise to depreciate or discourage the latter form of effort, but to appreciate and encourage the former.

OBITUARY.

REV. PREBENDARY ANDERSON.

THIS well-known clergyman, who has been incumbent of the Octagon Chapel, Bath, since 1872, passed away unexpectedly on the 5th inst., aged 63. He preached on the previous evening, and two days before spoke at the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. He was a pupil of Archbishop Whately, and inherited much of his intellectual power and breadth of character. After holding several livings in Ireland, he came to this country on the disestablishment of the Irish Church. He had the reputation of being the most learned man in Bath, and often lectured in different parts of England for the Christian Evidence Society.

MRS. CROSS.

Many friends will be grieved to hear of the sudden death of Mrs. Cross (née Lina A. Gibson), who went out from Glasgow last June to join her affianced husband (Rev. Dr. Ker Cross), in the Livingstonia Mission, East Central Africa. She arrived in the country in August, and was married at Mandala on Sept. 18. Shortly after, Dr. and Mrs. Cross left for Bandawé, en route for Mwaniwandi's country, the scene of their future labour. They reached the north end of Lake Nyassa about the end of November, and were looking forward to being in their new home at Cherenji in the course of a week. The cablegram received last week, announcing her sudden death on Dec. 27, has caused deep sorrow to a large circle who looked forward to Mrs. Cross spending a long life of usefulness in that dark country.

CHILDREN'S DAY REFUGES.—These Refuges, which for thirteen years have been at work in Glasgow, provide temporarily the place of home. They are open every day, and the children assemble in the morning, and after breakfast and worship go to certain of the Board Schools. At midday they return to the Refuges, and receive soup and bread. In the evening they are again supplied with porridge and milk, and after being helped with their lessons, and having family worship, they return to their homes. There are three of these Refuges in Glasgow, and the number on the roll at the beginning of the year was 438. The treasurer is Mr. John R. Miller, 2, Somerset-place, Glasgow.

IRISH CHURCH COLPORTAGE MISSION.—The colporteurs of this Society sold to Roman Catholics in various parts of Ireland last year over 7000 copies of the Scriptures. This, surely, is an important fact, and one which should in itself lead to a wide extension of efforts which have so far been blessed. The Mission is largely supported by the bishops and clergy of the Irish Church; the sphere of work, the number of colporteurs, and the sales have steadily increased in the last few years. It is earnestly desired that in every diocese active agents should be at work for carrying out this grand work of spreading the Scriptures amongst the Roman Catholics of Ireland. Communications may be addressed to the honorary director, Rev. J. F. Bickerdike, 4, Windsor-road, Rathmines, Dublin.

Letters to the Editor.

SELF-SUPPORT ABROAD.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of Feb. 10, I read a letter from "M. E. D." on the above subject. If any lady or ladies, possessing means, "who would prefer to support themselves rather than depend on a society," would be willing to devote themselves to evangelical work in Sardinia, I should be glad to hear from them. One good step is to know of a place to go to. I believe none would regret coming, if once they knew the place. The climate is mild throughout the year; the Sards are an affectionate people, and this island is not far from England, only a few days' trip from Paris to Leghorn by rail, and then a day's voyage will land you in Portotorres, near Sassari.

My wife would be greatly comforted by the arrival of any sister in Christ, who would assist her in visiting, and in distributing tracts, &c., as she is often alone during my absences, when engaged in Bible work, in the villages around. We would offer a home with board to any lady who would thus help, provided she could supply the remainder.

Yours very sincerely, JOHN E. THOMAS.

Sassari, Sardinia.

RICH AND POOR.

DEAR SIR,—My heart rejoiced over the letter recently published in your pages. Truly the hearts of the clergy who issued it were moved in the right direction. The spirit of the age is imbued with much bitterness; men are smarting under their wrongs, real and imaginary. The only way to meet it is a spirit of real deep Christian Socialism.

The needs, bodily and mentally, of the poor are great, the sense of their unfortunate position almost upsetting their reason; and when a man, especially if he be a professing Christian, is indifferent to this, and does not seek to improve their surroundings, then envy and bitter hate are germinated in their hearts. But, let a man be Christlike, sharing his good things with his poorer brother; the dormant spark of good is lighted up, and a better feeling circulates directly.

Suppose, for instance, a Christian man riding in his carriage passes a weary, tired brother, having perhaps a very discontented bitter look in his face; he pulls up, offers a seat, takes the man up, does not patronise him, but speaks words of real Christian love. At the end of the journey, the poor man jumps out, courteously thanks his richer brother, and a kindy feeling on both sides is created.

May I ask my Christian brothers and sisters never to neglect any opportunity to give another "a lift." I can testify from experience that many a blessing has come to my soul from a talk with a stranger. May the Lord Jesus Himself teach us other little ways to help and cheer.

Truly yours, M. E. SERJEANT.

West Holm, Launceston.

A CRY FROM THE VILLAGES.

SIR,—Amongst your readers are a great many people not bound by business or imperative claim to reside in any particular place. Many hundreds of such Christians congregate at Torquay, Bath, Cheltenham and similar towns, because they are luxurious places of residence, and there they enjoy the privilege of listening to their favourite preachers. Meanwhile, hundreds of villages in our country are totally destitute of enlightened Christian workers. Why should not a thousand of these people, who have neither to toil nor spin for their daily bread, and who may not perhaps be qualified for foreign mission work, come and help in these dark country places? A good work may be done everywhere, but it is notorious that the cottagers of such towns, as I have mentioned, complain that they have more tracts brought to their door than they can "contend with," and more district visitors than they have time to entertain, whilst close at hand they have the Gospel preached by able men.

Outside my own village there are some half-dozen smaller villages, in which I preach as often as I can. But what is wanted more than an occasional Gospel discourse is the continual presence, in these places, of earnest Christian people who can devote themselves entirely to the Lord's work. We welcome summer visitors who thus add to the happiness of their holiday; but the winter, with its long, dreary evenings, is our busy time. I place this matter before your readers with the conviction that the love of Christ is still strong to constrain men to make such sacrifices, and undertake such work as I have indicated, and pray that many of your readers will be prompted to a cheerful and eager devotion to this good work.

Yours faithfully, A VILLAGE PASTOR.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mrs. Daniell, founder of the Soldiers' Homes, Aldershot.

The following brotherly and characteristic tribute from the pen of Dr. Theodore Cuyler appears in The New York Evangelist:—

> Next week my well-beloved neighbour, Dr. George F. Pentecost, closes his honourable and fruitful pastorate in the Tomkins-avenue Church, and goes "on the road" as an itinerant bearer of the Gospel torch from city to city over the land. He has built up a noble church here, and made a deep, indelible mark on the religious life of Brooklyn. A bold, earnest, heart-rousing preacher, he feels that his "effectual calling" is to be an evangelist. His robust health enables him to preach twice a day the year through; his lungs have never been enfeebled by preaching "new theology;" he carries everywhere with him the precious signet-ring of the Master's blessing on his powerful and pungent ministry.

It is stated that Prebendary Grier, speaking at a recent Conference at Lichfield, said:—

> Claims upon the clergy were increasing, and, as it was, a parson was expected to know everything, to do everything, and to be everthing—an eloquent preacher, a fluent speaker, a diligent student, a convincing controversialist, a learned theologian, a perfect organiser, a successful catechist, a ready debater, a good man of business, a diligent visitor, a lively conversationist, a skilful hand at lawn tennis, and a finished beggar.

Taken in connection with this list, how strange does St. Paul's "in weakness and in fear, and in much trembling," appear, and yet upon what a glorious foundation it was based; not that of "excellency of speech or of wisdom," but the noble "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." The motive was the high one that the faith of his hearers "should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

Mr. Henry Ward Beecher did not survive the serious attack of apoplexy to which we referred last week, and his mortal remains now rest in the great Greenwood Cemetery at Brooklyn. A very striking proof of his popularity among his own townsmen was found in the fact that on the day of the public funeral service business was almost wholly suspended in the city; vast throngs of mourning sympathisers filled and surrounded Plymouth Church.

Mr. Beecher's services to his nation, in connection with the Slavery question, deserve to be embalmed in its grateful memory, and will be remembered, we believe, when his theological speculations are forgotten. We wish his great powers of intellect had been less devoted to undermining the cherished faith of the evangelical churches; but he has now passed beyond human judgment, and we prefer to emphasise the undoubted services he has rendered to humanity in the department of social and national ethics, both by tongue and pen. At the time of his fatal seizure he was busy completing his book on "The Life of Christ."

We draw attention to the announcement, in our column of forthcoming meetings, of two Conferences to be held this month, in connection with the Congregational and Baptist bodies.

The plans for the General Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in London next year, are in good shape. All the Evangelical Societies seem to be united in its furtherance, and there is every prospect that the occasion will be one of exceptional and far-reaching importance. In an interesting circular the Executive Committee state their desire to receive early intimation of subjects that call for discussion at the Conference. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, General Mission Conference, Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

The very title of Mr. Belfort Bax's new book, "The Religion of Socialism" (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.), is a misnomer. The author might with propriety have used the word "irreligion." To those who are familiar with Mr. Bax's writings it will scarcely be necessary to say that the volume now being widely advertised under the above name is far from being a contribution that would be found helpful in the study of "Christian Socialism." Full of inaccurate statements with regard to, and distorted views of, modern Christian life, the book can only do harm to the cause of those whom it is only charitable to suppose Mr. Bax had a desire to benefit.

Unless we are determined to be wilfully blind to the current of events, we cannot help seeing that the Irish agitation is slowly but surely evolving itself into the adoption by the Legislature of some form of what is called "Home Rule." How that will affect the progress of true religion in the sister island it would be very hazardous to say. Amid the gloomy anticipations naturally entertained by many, it is somewhat consoling to find more hopeful views expressed by some who are in a position to judge fairly. Dr. Hamilton Magee, in a letter in this month's Missionary Herald, says:—

> That there are extremely grave questions, and perhaps conflicts, before us, does not admit of question. But it is not the case that the door is closing to kindly and judicious effort: quite the contrary. And it is too soon to take for granted that the present agitation is about to bring a great accession of strength to the Church of Rome. The most far-seeing of the clergy in the Roman communion do not take that view; and, so far as I can judge, they have little reason to take it.

Any scheme that will restore order and contentment among the masses of the Irish people, without resultant injustice to the Protestant minority, ought to be welcomed by all Christian patriots; and we pray that God will so guide the events of the near future that this end may be accomplished.

The official report of our English Consul at Salonica is at once faithful and painful. He speaks of frauds practised by native dealers and connived at by merchants at home; of false marks as to size and quality affixed to Manchester yarns; of sewing-thread marked for 200 and even 300 yards, which is only 160 yards; of rice-bags, which pirate the Italian trademark for inferior produce. How long is English conscience to slumber as to disgraceful frauds which discredit our religion, dishonour our name, and provoke the judgments of God?

It is gratifying to know that the effort made eighteen years ago to supply nurses to the poor in East London is still being maintained, and that at present, to the number of twenty, they go from house to house, wherever there is need to allay suffering, to assist the convalescent, or to smooth the pillow of the dying. We hope the meeting held at the Mansion House last week will prove greatly helpful to this most necessary and Christlike work.

"The Jew is to-day, as much as he was in the Middle Ages, a puzzle and a riddle, in fact, a walking mystery." So said Heine, a quarter of a century ago, and M. Edouard Drumont's two volumes, "La France Juive, Essai d'Histoire Contemporaine," of which nearly three hundred thousand copies have been sold during the past ten months, certainly go far to deepen the interest which gathers round the chosen people. Unfortunately the narrative has been written in a spirit of ferocious antipathy, which, to some extent, mars its value and causes one to doubt the accuracy of some of the conclusions at which the clever author has arrived. In most other respects, the volumes are unexceptionable, and the student who is looking forward to the fulfilment of the prophecies with regard to Israel, may with advantage turn to the book to find much which will be of use to him in the consideration of the past and present of the Jewish race.

The story of the progress and position of the Jews in France certainly reads like exaggerated fiction, and it affords strong testimony to those exceptional powers of mind and body the exercise of which have in all ages enabled the Jew to outlive persecution and calumny and cruelty. More than one-half of the capital of France, we are told, is possessed by Jews; nearly all the Parisian papers are owned by them, at least one entire railway (the Northern) is theirs, and in so many other ways have they acquired the power of affecting and controlling public opinion, the Stock Exchange, and the market, that, perhaps, the statement is not in any way inaccurate that they are absolute masters of everything which concerns the security, the vitality, and existence of France.

If, as M. Drumont states, "the people" will by-and-by "take the law into their hands," and deal with this Semitic invasion, in what direction are they so likely to go as in that of confiscation? And if religious intolerance is stirred up, in addition to the crusade against wealth, we fear we shall soon see inaugurated in France an era of cruelty towards the Jew. Such an unreasoning persecution M. Drumont's striking study is only too well calculated to bring about.

Colonisation is a subject we are certain will continue to attract public attention. We have read with interest the details of a scheme submitted by Mr. Arnold White to a Hampshire audience, whereby he hoped to assist about twenty-five families to an agricultural life in South Africa. Total abstinence, we are glad to see, is an essential condition of acceptance. It is somewhat surprising that advocates of drinking customs do not publicly object to such terms. May their silence be taken as proof that after all they do not consider it a substantial grievance?

Growing heathenism among our kith and kin in Western Australia was a subject of comment in our last issue, but circumstances in Canada, almost as appalling, have come under our notice. The Scottish Churches surely cannot be aware of the spiritual condition of the Gaelic-speaking inhabitants of Cape Breton, or this touching cry, "Come over and help us," would ere now have pierced our ears. Rev. Thomas Hall, now on a visit to this country, writes:—

> A few years ago we had a Gaelic preacher, but our funds did not warrant his retention. The people are now without any religious teaching. Last summer a Gaelic missionary, from the West, spent a couple of months with them, gathering in a large number. I have most imploring letters from the people to send a missionary. Will not someone, qualified to go, in view of these facts say, "Lord, what wilt Thou me to do?" If Christian Scotchmen knew how many of their countrymen are famishing for the bread of life, surely they would make an effort to supply it.

We trust that Dr. Washington Gladden's nine lectures at Yale Seminary on the relations of the Church and the ministry to modern industrial problems will be printed in a convenient form, as they were based upon those simple Scriptural principles which, as we have so frequently urged in these pages, ought to be the basis of all economic theories. That society needs to be Christianised most people are quite ready to admit, but it is not so willingly acknowledged, although it is equally true, that the present industrial system, with its black shadows of competition and starvation, will not, and cannot be thoroughly reorganised until, not only society, but also the units, have undergone that change. In America, as in these islands, it is coming to be recognised that self-interest has become too largely dominant in the realm of trade, and that inexorable laws of supply and demand have in too great a measure been put in the place of those ethical considerations which ought to be paramount in the warehouses, factories, and shops of a Christian country.

Dr. Gladden's appeal to the divinity students who listened to him to "appreciate the present need of preachers of righteousness," and his declaration of the blessedness of "applying Christ's law and life to the multifarious needs of society" should find an echo in thousands of hearts in other lands than America; for the laissez-faire doctrines have their martyrs in almost every country, and in social matters, such as these, perhaps the ablest preacher is the man who lives out in his daily life, so far as his surroundings and circumstances will permit, the plain teachings of Christ with regard to duty to the neighbour.

How refreshing it is to receive daily testimony of the power of the Spirit of God accompanying the spoken and the printed word! Mr. Spurgeon met with a large circle of friends at the Stockwell Orphanage last week, and said that almost all the sums sent to him for the institution were thankofferings from those who had received blessing through his published sermons. For instance, on the previous Thursday £100 had been thus received; next morning more money came in, including £100 from one who said that eternity alone could reveal the good the printed sermons had produced. Such letters come to the famous preacher from all parts of the world.

A company of Mr. Spurgeon's little men from the Orphanage, under the charge of Mr. Charlesworth, purpose making an extensive tour. They leave on the 23rd inst. for Newcastle, going as far north as Edinburgh, Dundee, and Glasgow, visiting some English towns on the return journey. "Singing as they go," they hope to bring home with them some tangible proof of the kind hearts of the people of the North. Need we bespeak for them a kindly reception?

There are myriads of men and women who owe their knowledge and love of God's Word to the teachings received at a mother's knees; but Rome does not recognise the Bible in the family, and that means of imparting sacred history is, therefore, closed to most of her followers, as is evidenced by a remarkable admission in a Romish periodical, The Month. In noticing the issue of "Texts for Children," the reviewer says:—

> Texts for every day in the year are common enough among Protestants, but we, for the first time, see the plan recommended to Catholic mothers for their children. It comes with Father Gallwey's high authority; but, in spite of this, we scarcely think it will find much favour in Catholic households, or prove attractive to the childish mind. It smacks somewhat of the "charm" theory of Holy Scripture, and we must confess that we doubt if learning texts will be a very effective method of implanting in the little ones the love and fear of God.

The same magazine praises as "attractive" a recently-published biography of "St. Germaine Cousin," one of those marvellous volumes, the publication of which, in this nineteenth century, is indeed a noteworthy sign of the times. What an eventful life must be, according to Romish views, it is not easy to imagine, for Germaine Cousin's is classed as uneventful; and yet it is recorded that—

> God glorified the faith of his lowly servant by removing material obstacles which prevented her from fulfilling her duties; impassable torrents checked their impetuous course to allow her to go to Mass; the wolves never molested her flock, nor was a single sheep known to stray during her absence at church. Once, when she was detected carrying to a poorer neighbour some pieces of bread saved from her scanty pittance, the same miraculous transformation of the bread into flowers, which occurred in the case of St. Elizabeth, was repeated to shield the lowly peasant girl from the anger of her infuriated stepmother.

At the age of twenty-two she was found dead in bed, and it is asserted that "during the preceding night two religieuses beheld a company of angels escorting her soul to eternal happiness." Surely this must be a little oversight; for where in it is the doctrine of Purgatory?

A Hindoo has stated in a daily paper that money-lenders in India hold the tillers of the ground completely in their grasp. Money is borrowed at from thirty to a hundred per cent., and the system has utterly impoverished the country. Every year's crop is in pledge long before it is ripe. It is hard to say whether it is Christian teachers or Christian legislators that are most required in our Eastern Empire.

Bishop Moule is, we regret to hear, returning to China with only one young missionary recruit. It was his hope to take back more, and the Church Missionary Society shared this hope. We should be glad to hear even now that the results are otherwise. Surely this lack would be supplied if our pastors and congregations were to take a deeper individual interest in the evangelisation of the heathen. Prayer and practical common-sense should go together.

We are called to sympathise with our Protestant brethren in France. Two candidates have been nominated by them for the vacant chair of theology at Montauban. The Government has revived a technicality, dead for thirty years, and appointed a young lay Professor of Philosophy. The Socialistic Radical party in France want to discredit and banish religion from the land. Nothing will meet the threatening danger but for the Church to throw itself on Christ, and cease to appeal to Cæsar.

At a recent meeting of the Common Council there were presented, by deputations of clergymen and others, petitions for grants of money in aid of erecting and restoring churches and in building mission halls in the suburbs. We are glad to note that there was a healthy expression of opinion upon the matter by one member, who stated that he attended a Congregational church which was in debt, but he should scorn to ask or receive funds of the Corporation to liquidate it.

An interesting article in the current number of The Sunday at Home ought to be circulated broadcast in those districts of our land where Mormon emissaries are at work. It goes far to unmask some of the grosser delusions of the teachers and professors of Mormonism. The statement that "the doctrines of Mormonism are rankly materialistic" is amply proved, and it is difficult after reading the paper to imagine how anyone acquainted with the beliefs of the followers of Joseph Smith ever could bring himself to accept so abominable a creed.

The recently published sixth volume of Mr. J. A. Symonds' "Renaissance in Italy" (Smith, Elder & Co.), forming a portion, as it does, of the section devoted to "The Catholic Reaction," must have given a great shock to those Romanist students who have unsuspectingly followed the able historian through the former parts of his noble work. Written from the elevated standpoint of a calm and dispassionate thinker, more competent, perhaps, than any other living man to deal with the subject of the social, intellectual, and moral conditions in Italy during the sixteenth century, the judgments which are contained in it may safely be taken as unprejudiced by bias of any kind. The book is a striking contribution to Protestant literature, and, doubtless, the Romanist tribute to its worth will soon take the practical form of an entry in the "Index Expurgatorius."

SPRING FLOWERS.—Now that violets and snowdrops are springing up everywhere, could not a few be spared for those who never have a chance of seeing flowers unless sent them by friends? Any friends who would like to help forward the work in one corner of the Master's vineyard, are invited to send flowers so as to arrive on Thursdays before 2 p.m., directed to Miss F. A. S., care of Mr. Clarke, Porter's Lodge, Greenwich Infirmary, Greenwich, S.E.

LETTERS TO MERCHANT SEAMEN.—6000 letters monthly have for a long time been sent to merchant seamen, lighthouse, and lightship keepers. They are sent to English and foreign ports for free distribution, and hitherto the effort has been carried on by voluntary contributions. Many letters received, both from the distributors and sailors prove that the letters are acceptable. This month the balance-sheet shows that the number is reduced for want of funds. The author, Mrs. Jeffery, 15, Lansdowne-circus, Leamington, will be glad to hear from friends who sympathise in her endeavour.

“FOR THOSE in PERIL on the SEA.”

THE MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Dear Sir,—During the past five years and a half I have very frequently had cause to exclaim with intense thankfulness, “O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together;” and now I seek the fellowship of your readers in praising our God for yet another token of his “good hand” upon us.

When in Hull a few weeks ago, I was repeatedly stopped while passing along the quays by men who betrayed the utmost anxiety to have a Mission vessel cruising with the Great Northern Fleet. “You have sent the Salem to the Red Cross Fleet—why don’t you send us one?” exclaimed a big burly skipper. “Why do you want one?” I asked. “Why do we want one! We wants one for the same reason as the seven fleets that have got one already. We wants the blessed Gospel; we wants the dispensary; we wants the warm woollen wraps as ladies makes for smacksmen; we wants books to read; and we wants to be able to buy our bacca without going to the coper.”

While this good man was so clearly expressing the various needs of his mates, quite a crowd had gathered round, and there was a general chorus of “Ay; that’s what we want.” I replied, “My friend, I’ve heard the same tale before, scores of times, and I have only the one answer for you which has served in other cases, ‘God sends Mission vessels. God has sent seven already in answer to prayer, and his arm is not shortened. Can you trust Him?’”

Several of the group were Christian men, and we parted after agreeing to pray without ceasing that God would incline the hearts of his people on shore to send help to their brothers on the High Seas.

I duly kept my share of the compact, also relating the story at various meetings, and subsequently writing a special appeal on behalf of these poor fellows in the March number of Toilers of the Deep, to which you made kindly reference in your last issue.

A week ago, the sad news reached me that a foreign coper was cruising with the Great Northern Fleet and causing trouble by reason of what my informant styled “a roaring trade in that cursed aniseed brandy.”

This story pained me exceedingly, and special petitions were offered at the throne of grace for speedy help. Ever since this Mission was established there has been daily prayer in the offices at 9 a.m., and last Friday our morning text was, “Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee.”

After praying for grace to trust Him implicitly for all the needs of his work, I proceeded to open my letters, and found one announcing the gift of £2300 from two friends, who had heard the story of our urgent need, to cover the entire cost of building and equipping a Mission smack for the Great Northern Fleet.

There is scarcely need to add that the next steamer leaving for that fleet took out the good news, and many a Christian smacksman will exclaim, “The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad!” while every man in the fleet—godly or unsaved—will rejoice in the promised advent of a Mission vessel with all that it implies of comfort and cheer for men cut off for weeks together from all home ties, and all medical or surgical aid. In one single morning, after a gale of wind lasting for three days, we have had forty cases of illness and accident in the dispensary on board one vessel, and the total number of patients treated on the Mission ships last year was 3633. Let your readers consider the amount of human suffering thus alleviated, and also remember that every man who treads the deck of a Mission vessel, whatever his errand on board, hears of that blessed Physician, our Lord Jesus Christ.

Having asked for fellowship in our joy and thanksgiving, may I solicit the prayers of your readers on behalf of this Mission work, carried on amid all the risks incidental to life upon “the wild North Sea?” This new vessel will be merely a white elephant to the Mission unless her maintenance can be guaranteed.

Yours faithfully, E. J. Mather.

WORKHOUSE EMPLOYMENT.

Lady Brabazon writes:—A request has been made for particulars concerning the scheme for employing infirm patients, which has been successfully worked in St. Mary Abbott’s Workhouse, to which I alluded in a former letter. These can be readily obtained by applying to Miss Blanche Medhurst, the Secretary of the Pauper Employment Scheme, 83, Lancaster-gate, W., for a copy of a small pamphlet, called “The Idle Room.” I would briefly state that a sum of about £20 was advanced, and with this materials were purchased for employing the inmates of the Infirmary, whose maimed or decrepit condition debarred them from engaging in the work given by the authorities. A band of ladies formed themselves into a committee, and some constituted themselves teachers of knitting, carving, and fancywork. Their efforts were crowned with such success that, amongst all their pupils, there was not one, to my knowledge, who could not be taught some useful work, by means of which the patient was able to earn some little reward. This scheme was organised with the full consent of the guardians, who have more than once expressed their appreciation of it. It has also been introduced into Fulham, Lambeth, Paddington, St. Pancras, and Kingston workhouses.

DR. BARNARDO’S HOMES.

THE FIRST EMIGRANTS OF THE SEASON.

The appearance at the Aldersgate noon prayer-meeting, on Monday last, of over two hundred boys and young men from Dr. Barnardo’s Homes, who sail to-day for Canada, brought vividly to the crowded assemblage the lesson taught by our Lord in his reply to the question, “Who is my neighbour?” As Mr. R. Paton pointed out, all these healthy, happy-looking lads, rescued from evil surroundings and from a life without a ray of hope in it, stood there with bright prospects before them because of the manner in which this lesson had been learnt and applied by Dr. Barnardo and those who support him.

Dr. Barnardo, in a brief address, gave some interesting particulars concerning these lads, who are from several counties. Only twenty-six of the whole number have a father living, and the majority are orphans. Altogether Dr. Barnardo has sent out nearly 2700 lads to Canada. He made the cheering announcement that at the present moment he could place 200 more than those now going out. All are settled with farmers, and he was happy to say religious life in Canada is more real than with us. There is scarcely a farmhouse where there is not family prayer every morning and evening, and where the Sabbath is not observed.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—A public meeting of the Anti-Sunday Travelling Union was held last week, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Mr. C. M. Todd stated that the Union had existed about three years, and there had been issued more than 4,000 tickets of membership. Rev. Dr. Gritton, Rev. E. Brewer, Rev. H. Sharpe, Mr. Wheatley, and Rev. W. H. Stone addressed the meeting, dwelling specially on the religious aspect of the question and condemning the inconsistency of Christian people in taking omnibuses or trains when going to a place of worship on Sunday.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS’ REST.—The report presented at the annual meeting of this institution, held on Friday last, bore strong witness to the appreciation in which it is held by sailors, foreigners, and emigants visiting the port. Altogether, over 1100 meetings were held during last year, and more than half of these were for Frenchmen, Germans, Scandinavians, and other nationalities. A Christian sailor who has known the “Rest” for nine years, states that he has met with sailors and others, in all ports of the world, who have expressed their gratitude to God that they had been brought under its influence. The workers have all been greatly encouraged by the many passing strangers who have professed to receive blessing. During the year 219 bags filled with books, Bibles, tracts, &c., have been put on board ships. Rev. J. H. Atkinson said he felt that a good work had indeed been done at the “Rest,” which is at 24, Park-lane, Liverpool.

ARMY AND NAVY PRAYER UNION.

Under the auspices of this Union some 200 officers, representing all branches of the army and navy, met for prayer in the Cannon-street Hotel on Saturday afternoon. Sir Robert Phayre presided, and delivered a brief but soul-stirring address. It was a very cheering sight, he said, to see so many belonging to our army and navy uniting in praising God for what He had done for them personally, as well as for what He has been doing, is doing, and what they hoped He would yet do for these services. Within the last few years the number of witnesses for Christ in the army and navy had increased greatly. For one Christian that there was thirty years ago there are now one hundred. He urged all to take Christ, the Captain of our salvation, as their guide wherever they may be and under whatever circumstances; and cited as worthy examples, “Havelock and his saints,” who by the grace and power of God were able, under the most trying circumstances and amid insuperable difficulties, to gain great and glorious victories for their Queen and country. Rev. G. A. Williams, chaplain of the Royal Navy, in a few remarks showed that the highest position any believer can hold is to be a servant of Christ.

A conference followed on “Experiences and Suggestions as to Advancing the Cause of Christ in the Army and Navy.” About twenty officers spoke, all of whom bore testimony to the saving power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and to the gradual extension of his kingdom among our soldiers and sailors. The adoption of total abstinence, it was stated, frequently resulted in acceptance of Christ. It was complained that in some regiments certain restrictions as to the holding of religious meetings are imposed, and it was prayed that these hindrances may be removed. An increase in the number of Scripture-readers was desirable, and appeals were made on behalf of the Army Scripture Readers’ Society, which is doing a noble work.

A CRUEL PRACTICE.—A case of interest to poultry exhibitors came before the Birmingham magistrates, in which a respectable poultry exhibitor was charged with cruelty to game fowl by cutting their wattles. Defendant pleaded that the practice was universal, but the Bench declared it cruelty. Being the first case of the kind, they only fined defendant half-a-crown and costs.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following missions:—Mr. John Bennett, of the London Evangelisation Society, at Hazelbury, Plucknett, to March 21; Mr. F. E. Marsh, at Sunderland, March 20 to April 3; special mission being conducted at Culvert-road, Wandsworth, by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant; Mr. Henry Thorne, at Burnley; Mr. John Elliott, now at Victoria Park, Torquay For children:—Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Abbey-road Chapel, St. John’s Wood, March 27 to April 1; Mr. J. H. Greene, at Wickhambrook, March 12 to 18; Mr. Martin J. Hall, at Great Berkhamstead.——That it may please God to restore the power of walking to a Christian medical man.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. ROBERT RAE.—The proposition to present this well-known advocate of the temperance cause with some substantial acknowledgment of his services is sure of a warm response. Following upon twenty years’ work in connection with the Scottish Temperance League, Mr. Rae has fulfilled for a quarter of a century the duties of secretary to the National Temperance League, these duties including the editing of The Temperance Record and three other publications. Mr. Rae has played an important part before the public for a long number of his years, and has done much to influence public opinion in a direction for which we are all thankful. The hon. secretary of the Testimonial Fund is Mr. John Taylor, 5, Tokenhouse-yard, E.C.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE WELFARE.—In the report of work presented at the annual meeting of this Society last week, special reference was made to the registry for servants, matrons, &c., and to the past year’s united sale of the industrial work of twenty-seven of the affiliated institutions for women and girls of good character, which realised over £700. After an address by the Lord Chancellor, Rev. J. Bennett, D.D., in commenting on the work being done by these institutions, spoke of a visit recently paid to the Schools of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East at Nazareth. Here he found over one hundred orphan girls, once belonging either to the Greek Church, or to Mahommedanism, now being educated in the Christian faith, and, moreover, being practically brought up.

FOR HIS SAKE.
A Deeply-Interesting Narrative.
BY S. J. HUMPHREY,
Author of "Blessings on the Bees."

"A year ago this winter our house took fire. It was in the middle of the night, and we were all asleep. The flames were first discovered by a poor neighbour, who at once gave the alarm, and then burst in the door. . . . It seems almost a miracle that we were got out alive. We were dazed and suffocated, and it was only the heroic courage and great strength of our neighbour that brought us down the blazing stairway into the open air; but it nearly cost him his life."—Extract.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Notman has experienced no little blessing during a three weeks' mission at Kirkintilloch. He is now at Crawley, Sussex.

Mr. S. McKenzie, having closed a fortnight's Gospel mission at Portknockie, N.B., is now busy at the neighbouring town, Findochty.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, during the past week, have been much blessed in their abundant labours at Leicester. The mission is continued during the present week.

Rev. Walter Bradbury sailed last Thursday for a mission to the garrison troops at Gibraltar; he will afterwards make a mission tour amongst the Berber tribes of North Africa.

Mr. Thos. Payne had growing congregations and many tokens of Divine approval, in connection with a visit to Gloucester. He is now holding a ten days' mission at Abergavenny.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has concluded a Gospel tour on the East Coast, during which he visited Eyemouth, Fenwick Steads, and Waterhouses. At each place there was much encouragement. His next sphere of labour is Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. George Clarke's mission at the Presbyterian Church, Upper George-street, W., was prosecuted last week with increasing congregations and a growing spirit of inquiry. Last Sunday evening the evangelist preached an earnest discourse, addressed especially to young men and women, many of whom at the after-meeting indicated a desire to be prayed for. Mr. Clarke addresses men only at the Polytechnic next Sunday afternoon, and in the evening begins a mission at the Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond concluded his meetings in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches at Washington Heights, New York City, on Friday, February 25. The meetings were held during the preceding two weeks, and from the first were marked with great interest. Mr. Hammond made his first efforts among the children and younger people of the neighbourhood, and through them the parents and older people were in many cases reached. Though Mr. Hammond has gone elsewhere, the special interest awakened will be followed up by the churches.

Liverpool Evangelisation Society.—The eleventh report of this Society speaks of much encouragement, both in respect to the opening of doors for the preaching of the Gospel and the blessing attending it. The main feature of the year has been the special missions, nineteen having been held in different parts of the city. Altogether no less than 753 evangelistic services were held, with, in many cases, just those results for which the workers are praying and looking. Many have written expressing their thankfulness for having been led to attend the tent meetings. The agent for the Society is Mr. T. Lydiatt, 3, Hackins Hey, Liverpool.

NOT TOUTS OR DRUNKARDS.—Over 200 bonâ fide working men, without work, were provided last week with a free tea at the Cubitt's Town hall of the North-east London Gospel Missions. There was no mistake as to the distress of which these men and their families are the unfortunate victims, though they did not present the same woebegone appearance so often seen at such gatherings. After tea the Gospel was earnestly and feelingly preached, and a recently converted dock labourer gave a telling account of his experiences. His directness of appeal and happy assurance of salvation evidently made a deep impression.

WORKING GIRLS IN THE EAST END.—Una House has recently been opened as a Home for Working Girls, at 30 Commercial-road, Whitechapel, under the supervision of Rev. J. Robinson, Rector of Whitechapel. Several young women, nearly or quite destitute on reception, have been already not only rescued from danger, but set in paths in which they may earn an honourable livelihood. If the girls were in employment, and could pay regularly, the Home would be self-supporting; but sometimes they have work only a few days in the week, and do not earn sufficient for their support. There is perfect freedom in the Home, beyond the one rule which binds them to be in by 10 p.m. It is made as unlike an institution and as much like a home as possible; the premises are cheerfully situated, and the rooms are spacious, convenient, and comfortable. At present there are only eight beds, but there is room for eighteen more, if means are forthcoming to provide them. Miss Marian Phillips is the matron. As a hospital nurse she saw much suffering, which might have been avoided in many a young girl had there been a friend in time of need, and these

HOW WE GOT OUR BIBLE. By J. PATERSON SMYTH, A.B., LL.B. Third Edition. 1s. Samuel Bagster & Sons. Interesting in style, lucid in arrangement, and painstaking in the amassing of information, this little volume is indispensable to the Bible reader who wishes to have in small compass an account of ancient manuscripts and early versions. It supplies a felt need.

THE GREAT SALVATION and other Sermons. By Rev. JOSEPH POTTER, Christ Church, Londonderry. George Herbert, Dublin. The line of thought in these sixteen textual discourses, though quite orthodox, is simple, almost to superficiality, and their publication might well have been spared. If Paul had been in the habit of preaching such formal sermons, we could easily understand the unfortunate accident that happened to Eutychus.

MARION'S STORY. By Mrs. MILNE RAY. 1s. Nelson & Sons. A very beautiful story is this, telling how one rescued from a life of sin, following with a true heart the new path opened up to her, was blessed therein; how she was able to supply a mother's place to the little ones of the family in which she served, winning their love. A more touching story, awakening longings after truth and holiness, it would be difficult to find.

A FRAGMENT ON THE PROBLEM OF PROBLEMS. By A. C. H. JONES. Remington & Co. Mr. Jones, like some other critics, excels at pulling down, but he is a poor hand at building up. Our readers may judge of the teaching they will receive at his feet, when we state that he thinks himself successful in showing that the life and substance of Christianity are belied by its forms, and that the principle of utility is capable of supplying a religion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EARLY FATHERS. By Rev. ALFRED PLUMMER, D.D. 2s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co. The history of Christianity during the anti-Nicene period is sketched in this volume with fulness of knowledge and skill in condensation. Busy men and women, who have little time for reading larger ecclesiastical histories, will find here an admirable picture of the heroes and scenes of the early days of the Church. The value of the book is enhanced by a carefully drawn up list of books on the same subject.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SMITH THOMSON. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The history of a life given to God in youth, devoted to his service, and culminating in twelve years' labour as a medical missionary at Travancore, is given in this little volume. In these labours he was wonderfully cheered, not only by the comfort he was able to give to crowds of suffering people, but by the evidence many patients gave of having become new creatures in Christ Jesus. And such signs of the silently-spreading influence of the Gospel were to the eye of his faith heralds of the time when India shall be won for Christ.

THE MAN OF SCIENCE, THE MAN OF GOD: Leaves from the Life of Sir James Y. Simpson. By Rev. CHARLES BULLOCK. "Home Words" Office. We are weary of hearing the current falsehood that the man of science is necessarily opposed to what is called the credulity of Christianity. True science knows its limits, and recognises the sphere of faith. This truth is exemplified in the life pictured in this volume. Sir James Simpson showed how high scientific attainments could be united to humble trust in the revelation of God, and for this, if for no other, reason his biography is interesting. Mr. Bullock writes with characteristic skill and clearness.

MODERN HEROES OF THE MISSION FIELD. By Right Rev. W. PAKENHAM WALSH, D.D., Bishop of Ossory. Third thousand. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. In this book the reader finds himself in a gallery, the walls of which are lined with admirable portraits of the missionary heroes of our country. Each sketch catches the distinctive features in the work and character of the man portrayed. Fulsome eulogy is carefully avoided, but due praise is given. Dr. Walsh is thoroughly catholic in his sympathies, and cordial in his homage to self-sacrificing enthusiasm for souls. His book serves a double purpose—it supplies interesting and trustworthy information about men who have made humanity their debtor, and it is a powerful appeal to the Christian chivalry of students whose ears are open to the cries of heathendom.

NATURAL HISTORY NOTES AND ANECDOTES; PRACTICAL SOCIAL SCIENCE. 3d. and 6d. each. Religious Tract Society. In the first of these neat little volumes, which are marvels of cheapness, we have some delightful stories of the lesser creation, which add so much to the charm and beauty of this fair world of ours. In the second, there are a number of discourses by Rev. H. Jones on subjects which affect very much the comfort and happiness of every-day life.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW. No. i. 1s. 6d. David Nutt, 270, Strand. This new magazine will, we think, have an appreciative welcome from the friends of Grecian and Roman literature who are well posted up in the classics. Its main aim is the interpretation of ancient texts. It is not intended to deal with "philosophy or law theology in the abstract," but simply "with their literary basis." The first article in the Review—on "Myron's Pristae"—is a rare classical "tit bit." An erudite article follows on "Some Political Terms Employed in the New Testament," and a third on "The Greek and Latin Classics and English Literature." These, together with several excellent reviews of recent classics, make up a capital first number. The editor is Prof. John B. Mayor, one of the foremost scholars of the period.

THE ATONEMENT. By THE BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH. 1s. 6d. Cassell & Co. The object of this work is to set forth the Atonement as much as possible in the language of Scripture, and apart from the phraseology of the schools. In many respects it is well fitted to take rank in the series of "Helps to Belief," to which it belongs. We have the feeling, however, as we read it, that the learned author is too apologetical and too deferential to critical scepticism. We cannot speak in too high terms of Dr. Magee's exposition of the Christian doctrine of sin. It is amongst the finest we have ever seen; clear, incisive, powerful, cumulative in its effect, and calculated to weigh powerfully with any well-balanced mind. In the chapter on "Forgiveness," amid much that is excellent, there is something also of metaphysical subtlety, which does not help the average reader to any practical conclusion. We likewise demur to the Bishop's finding that "there is no animus, no conscious animus at least, on the part of man against his Maker when he breaks his law." We do not see how this statement can be harmonised with Scripture. We must also differ from the Bishop in his finding in respect of Atonement. A plain interpretation of the revealed Word teaches that there was a Divine wrath that was actually borne by Jesus Christ in his agony and death upon the cross. The words are clear and unmistakable, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Brighton.—The new general secretary of this Association, who succeeds Mr. Ashby Wiffen, is Mr. J. W. Shuttle, of the C.E.Y.M.S., Norwich.

New Brighton.—Special services have been held in Victoria Hall, conducted by Mr. Thomas Lydiatt and other preachers of the Liverpool Evangelisation Society. The local workers were much encouraged, and it is expected that much permanent blessing will follow.

Exeter.—A largely-attended meeting was held in the Arcade Lecture Hall, on March 9, followed by a conference on the 10th, to hear an address from Mr. Hind Smith on the advantages of the Y.M.C.A. Steps are being taken to resuscitate the Association, and make it a missionary centre for young men in this cathedral city.

Sydney, N.S.W.—The annual meeting of this Association was held on January 28. It was stated that special missions had been conducted during the year by Mr. George Müller, Dr. Grattan Guinness, and Mr. William Noble, resulting in many conversions. During the year, 471 new members joined, the number now being 950.

South-Western District.—The following towns in this newly-formed district have recently been visited by Mr. Hind Smith, and in many cases meetings held on behalf of the Y.M.C.A.:—Penzance, Truro, Liskeard, Bodmin, St. Austell, Falmouth, Devonport, St. Ives, Redruth, Camborne, Totnes, Newton Abbott, Dawlish, Torquay, and Moreton Hampstead. In several of these towns old members of the Y.M.C.A., who were brought to Christ through its instrumentality, and many more converted at the Mission in the West of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, are "holding the fort," and praying and working for increased blessing amongst the young men of this south-western district. Special efforts are being put forth in many of the above places for which prayer is asked.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 20.—PSALM XLIII.

This Psalm is clearly to be connected with the last. Many regard the two as but one Psalm. "The similarity of the situation, of the general impress, of the structure, and of the refrain, is decisive in favour of these Psalms, which are commonly reckoned as two, being one."—Delitzsch. Dr. Kay makes a good distinction when he says, "They clearly form one pair, xlii. looking backward, xliii. forward."

1.—An ungodly nation. — "An unloving nation."—Kay. "A people without love."—Hengstenberg. The deceitful and unjust man.—"The man of deceit and roguery."—Delitzsch (who adds):—"There is some uncertainty whether one chief enemy, the leader of all the rest, is intended to be mentioned side by side with the unloving nation, or whether the special character of his enemies is thus individualised." The same uncertainty is found in our Lord's words to Pilate, John xix. 11, "he that delivereth me unto thee," which may refer to Judas, or to the nation thus personified, or to the great enemy himself as seen in the background.

3.—Thy tabernacles.—Delitzsch explains the plural as being "an amplificative designation of the tent," but there is an easier explanation in the fact that, during the greater part of David's reign, there were two tabernacles, that which contained the Ark at Zion, and that which contained the Altar, &c., at Gibeon (see 1 Chron. xvi. 29; xxi. 29). This is the more probable, as the next verse refers to the altar, which was not at Zion, but at Gibeon.

5.—The health of my countenance.—The Hebrew is, literally, "the salvations of my face."

MONDAY, MARCH 21.—PSALM XLIV.

Commentators are much perplexed to discover the circumstances which suggested this Psalm. Hengstenberg finds them in the events of David's reign, referred to in the title of Psalm lx.; Delitzsch and others in the times of the Maccabees. But it is best, as no clue is given in the Psalm itself, to regard it as being what has been well called "A Litany for Israel, hard pressed by the enemy, and yet faithful to its God." Such an inspired "Litany" would be available at any time that it was needed, and the prophetic Spirit could forecast its adaptation, even to Gospel times, in reference to which verse 22 is quoted in Rom. viii. 36, a preparation, no doubt, for the terrible persecution of Nero, which six years later burst upon the Christians at Rome.

4.—Thou art my King, O God.—The Hebrew is literally, "Thou art He, my King, O God!" Thus identifying the God addressed with the God who had wrought such wonders of old, and claiming his power for deliverance for present emergency. The same phrase occurs Psalm cii. 27, where it is rendered, "Thou art the same."

7.—But Thou hast saved us...and hast put to shame.—Better, "Thou savest us," and "dost put to shame." So Delitzsch and Hengstenberg. God's saving character is being recorded, though present circumstances (ver. 9, &c.) seem to contradict it.

17.—Yet have we not forgotten Thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.—There were very few occasions in Israel's history when, under defeat from foreign foes, they could have used such language as this. This Psalm would, therefore, remind them that in order to claim God's deliverances they must be walking in his ways.

26.—Arise for our help.—"Arise to be our help."—Kay. Redeem us.—The word often used before (xxxi. 5, xxxiv. 22) of forcible deliverance.

TUESDAY, MARCH 22.—PSALM XLV.

The title of this Psalm shows its mystical character. "Upon Shoshannim" means "upon lilies," and a "Song of loves" is literally "a song of the beloved ones," both which expressions seem to point to those who collectively constitute the Bride, the Queen, whose marriage to the King is the subject of the Psalm. The Queen is the "Israel of God" the spiritual seed of Abraham, the nucleus of the afterwards constituted Church of Christ (Matt. xvi. 18) with whom believers from amongst the Gentiles are being now incorporated, and who is spoken of hereafter as "the Bride, the Lamb's wife" (Rev. xxi. 9).

1.—My heart is inditing a good matter.—The original is more clearly represented by R.V. "My heart overfloweth with a goodly matter."

2.—Grace is poured into thy lips.—Comp. Luke iv. 22, "All . . . wondered at the gracious words (lit. words of grace) which proceeded out of his mouth" in which passage (says Hengstenberg) there is a very pointed reference to this verse.

4.—Meekness and righteousness.—The "and" should be struck out, as there is none in the Hebrew. Meekness-righteousness is one idea, "a righteousness which primarily and chiefly manifests itself in meekness."—Hengstenberg. Comp. Matt. xi. 29, "I am meek and lowly in heart."

10.—Forget also thine own people, and thy father's house.—These words addressed to the queen show that it is not Israel after the flesh, nor yet Israel hereafter converted and restored that is addressed, but those called with the heavenly calling, as we learn from Heb. xi. 10—16 was the case with the Old Testament saints. The call is like that of Abraham: "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house."

13.—The King's daughter is all glorious within.—"Within the palace is all glorious" (R.V).

16.—Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children.—The glory of Israel of old was in the fathers, "whose are the fathers;" but to the Israel of God the Apostles are of higher value, and our Lord explains, in Matt. xix. 28, how they shall be "princes in all the earth," though it need not be limited to the Apostles only.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 23.—PSALM XLVI.

As the last Psalm corresponds with the early part of Rev. xix., where the marriage of the Lamb and the triumphal progress of the King is described, so this Psalm corresponds with the latter part of the same chapter, where the enemies of Christ are defeated, and "wars made to cease in all the earth," a consummation attained in the Millennium (chap. xx.). The convulsions of nature spoken of are those that attend the coming of Christ (see Rev. vi. 12—17).

4.—There is a river, &c.—"In opposition to the raging and destroying sea stands the quiet and soft flowing, refreshing and quickening river. Happy those who have passed out of the sphere of the sea into that of the river."—Hengstenberg. Comp. Rev. xxii. 1.

5.—God shall help her and that right early.—Or, "God shall help her at the morning dawn."—Kay. It is the expression used in Exod. xiv. 27.

8.—Come, behold the works of the Lord, &c."—This latter part of the Psalm is clearly millennial. Then, and only then, will God's purpose be attained. "I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth."

11.—The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. — Cheyne renders this, "Jehovah Sabaoth is with us; our sure retreat is Jacob's God."

THURSDAY, MARCH 24.—PSALM XLVII.

Another millennial Psalm, as the second verse clearly testifies. The state of things contemplated on earth must be after Rev. xi. 15. "The kingdom of this world (R.V.) is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ."

The attempts of commentators to find circumstances in David's reign that would at all suit the subject of the Psalm are lamentable failures, as for example, "The only thing that suggests itself as a fit reference is the victory of Jehoshaphat over the combined Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, and Arabians, in 2 Chron. xx."—Hengstenberg. "The victory of Hezekiah over the Philistines (2 Kings xviii. 8)."—Hitzig. "The time after the return from the exile."—Ewald.

2.—The Lord most high is terrible.—"So has God shown Himself in the destruction of the enemies of his people. He has proved Himself to be a great King over the whole earth, as opposed merely to being King of Israel, by the victory over huge masses of people who threatened to devour Israel" (see Rev. xix. 19).

5.—God is gone up with a shout.—The reference to the Ascension is questionable, for the Psalm points to events yet future. There is reason to believe that after the Lord has come down from heaven, as described in Rev. xix., so that his "feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives," He may again "go up" "with a shout, with the sound of a trumpet" (? Rev. xi. 15) to assume that sovereignty over the earth which is to be apparently exercised, not in the earthly, but from the heavenly city, which is the sphere from which Christ and his saints reign over the earth during the Millennium.

9.—The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham.—This seems to point to the Church associated with Christ in the future government of the world (see Rev. iii. 21). They are "the people of Abraham's God" (see Rom. iv. 12—17).

FRIDAY, MARCH 25.—PSALM XLVIII.

The last of this series of millennial Psalms. The stability and safety of the city of the great King, from all possible attack, forms its subject.

2.—Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion.—Travellers have often been disappointed at Jerusalem, as it now is, so little fulfilling this description. But it will not be so when "the time to favour Zion, yea, the set time is come." Zech. xiv. 4—11 speaks of great changes in the physical condition of the land which will make it very different to what it is now.

4.—For, lo, the kings were assembled.—Some such conspiracy against Jerusalem may possibly occur even in Millennial days, for sin on earth will by no means as yet be fully extirpated. See the punishments on nations that come not up to Jerusalem (Zech. xiv. 17). The plague described (Zech. xiv. 12) as falling upon those "people that have fought against Jerusalem" may refer to such an attack as is here described, which comes to nought by sudden panic. Comp. Zech. xiv. 13 with verse 6, "Fear took hold upon them," &c. Even Judah may be partially involved in such a conspiracy (see Zech. xiv. 14). As to the final assault at the close of the Millennium there can be no doubt from Rev. xx. 8, 9.

14.—He will be our guide even unto death.—The Hebrew is "over death." For Israel with all its Millennial blessing will still have death before it.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26.—PSALM XLIX.

This Psalm brings us back to a very different subject, "The transitoriness of the prosperity of the ungodly." Its construction is symmetrical. First, four verses of introduction, and then two groups of eight verses each, each one ending with the same refrain.

2.—Both low and high, rich and poor, together.—This Psalm speaks a word in season to Socialism, for it puts all on an equality in sight of the great realities of eternity.

5.—The iniquity of my heels.—"He who has bathed in the laver of Divine grace (i.e., the death of Christ, Rom. vi. 3) 'needs not save to wash his feet' (John viii. 10). The corruption of nature—the venom of the serpent that bit the heel of man—is not yet purged away."—Kay. Though remaining, it is subdued in sanctification, and will be removed in the "redemption of the body."

7.—None of them can by any means redeem his brother.—"He cannot with all his riches redeem another, to say nothing of himself."—Hengstenberg.

8.—It ceaseth for ever.—Better in R.V.:—"And must be let alone for ever." "One must desist (from that attempt) for ever."—Kay.

12.—Man being in honour abideth not.—Better in R.V.:—"Man abideth not in honour."

14.—Death shall feed on them.—Lit. "Death shall shepherd them." So R.V.:—"Death shall be their shepherd." Happy they who can say "The Lord is my Shepherd," for they can add "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

15.—But God will redeem my soul, &c.—The kernel of the whole Psalm.

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. W. Haslam has concluded a successful ten days' mission at Trinity Parish Church, Bath.

A mission was held at Canterbury last week. The Archbishop gave an earnest address to the workers in the cathedral.

Rev. Canon Claughton having been presented to a canonry at Worcester, has determined to resign the vicarage of Kidderminster.

Towards increasing the church accommodation in the neighbourhood of Stockport, the Duke of Westminster has promised to contribute £1000 every year during his life.

A united prayer-meeting of Episcopalians and Primitive Methodists, recently conducted by Rev. W. H. Ganton, vicar of West Stockwith, near Gainsborough, was most gratifying in the spirit of harmony it evoked.

The Church Missionary Society has lately received offers of service for the mission field from two clergymen, one layman, and two ladies. It is stated that Rev. R. P. Ashe will shortly return to Eastern Equatorial Africa.

Mr. Aitken's mission at Oxford concluded on Monday, last week, with an address on the claims of Christ. There were considerable grounds for thankfulness in reference to that part of the work, in which the missioner came to close quarters with men in the after-meetings and at his lodgings.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new mission church is being built at Gleaston, Lancashire.

Dr. Conder, of Leeds, is giving on Sunday mornings a course of lectures on "Present Day Politics."

Rev. Joseph Davies has been set apart for evangelistic work in connection with the churches in Wales.

The congregation and school of the church at Lye have more than doubled since the pastorate of Rev. J. Tucker.

During his three years' pastorate at Providence Church, Uxbridge, Rev. J. Adams has received seventy-six members into fellowship.

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road (pastors, Rev. Newman Hall and Rev. H. Grainger), with a membership of 985, is doing much work. Thirty services for the poor are held weekly in the Mint and adjoining districts. There are fifteen Sunday-schools, with 420 teachers and 5460 children. The Lambeth Mission to working men is vigorously carried on.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester, has completed a week's mission at Horsforth, near Leeds. There were conversions every night.

Miss P. H. Peckover, of Wisbech, conducts a monthly Bible-reading in St. Ives. The interest deepens, and the attendance improves. The adult school also grows.

A hospital has been opened in connection with the work at Ramallah, Palestine. The patients have received some acceptable presents from the Missionary Helpers' Union.

By the "Christian Band," of Hopetown Hall, North Darlington, fifteen villages around have the Gospel carried to them. They also preach in the Market-place. Temperance work forms a part of their mission to seek and save the lost.

The "Meeting for Sufferings" sent out 65,000 copies of the address on war; clergy and ministers of all denominations were supplied, and so were members of Parliament. Many hundreds of replies have been received, almost all sympathetic and favourable.

Frederick Sessions has been lecturing in Almeley on "The Use and Abuse of the Good Creatures of God," "The Lord for the Body, and the Body for the Lord," "The Bible and Total Abstinence." The meeting-house was filled every night, and important pledges were taken.

Mission work in Bristol has long been vigorously sustained. The late Geo. Thomas and Robert Chorleton, with other friends, gave it an impetus by building the New-street Mission Hall over the court-yard of an old workhouse. Ever since, the surrounding slums have had "kindly light" shed on them.

William C. Collyer, evangelist of Cardiff, has held a three weeks' mission in Penybont, Radnorshire. The meetings were held in eight different places over the district, and the interest grew to the close.——Much blessing seems also to have rested on a week's mission held by him in Park-street Mission, Gloucester.

In the "Triennial Report," issued by "Darlington monthly meeting," which includes 13 congregations and 1193 members and adherents, the cheering fact is stated that in their "first-day schools" they have 145 teachers, and 2207 scholars, with an average attendance of 1237. They have also at the mothers' meetings, within their compass, 1387 members, with Bible-reading Union, and a variety of useful clubs, savings bank, library, &c., &c.

Wm. Day, evangelist, who was educated at Great Ayton Friends' School, has been conducting a sixteen days' mission at Bunhill-fields Hall. "From the first the meetings were well attended. At every meeting we had the joy of seeing some come out on the Lord's side, and in the after-meetings, which were held almost every evening, many a poor sinner, who came in wretched and burdened with sin, went away rejoicing in the full assurance of pardon."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Lord Radstock has been giving addresses in Croydon Presbyterian Church.

Special Evangelistic and Temperance services have been held at the church in Sale.

Dr. Rainy has intimated his acceptance of the Moderatorship of next Assembly.

The evangelistic work in the Broomielaw Church Glasgow, is being carried on with good success.

The mission hall in connection with the church at Rockferry has eight senior classes in full operation.

During Mr. Smith's ten years' ministry at Shelleston, a suburb of Glasgow, 500 members have been admitted.

Rev. W. Macdonald, of Killin, has been invited to become the first minister of the new church at Highgate. One minister states that Mr. Macdonald is the greatest pulpit power in the Highlands of Scotland.

In connection with the departure of a body of missionaries to the Church of Scotland's stations in the heart of Africa, a service was held on Sunday week in St. George's Church, Edinburgh. The mission party includes Rev. David Clement Scott and Mrs. Scott, Dr. Bowie and Mrs. Bowie, Miss Beck, Mr. M'Ilwain, Mrs. M'Ilwain, Mr. Tanner and Mrs. Tanner.

SALVATION ARMY.

Nearly forty soldiers have been enrolled at Kilburn within the last ten weeks.

Since January 1 over 800 persons have applied for the position of officer in the Army, and 350 have been accepted.

The Marechale and Colonel Booth Clibborn are now back at their old post, and at a crowded meeting in Calais several professed conversion.

Ten more soldiers were solemnly enrolled in Paris on a recent Sunday evening, and after the consecration eleven others came forward. Similar numbers were enrolled at St. Etienne.

It seems, says Evangelical Christendom, that the Salvation Army has really begun to work in Germany, by opening a hall at Stuttgart, but nothing has been heard yet about the success of the enterprise.

At Swadlincote, in the open-air, hundreds of people were listening eagerly to the testimonies of the new converts—poachers, drunkards, &c., and at night in the hall twenty-five more came out for salvation.

The annual report just issued states that during last year 148,200 persons in the United Kingdom came to the penitent form. Half-a-million indoor services and 345,800 open-air meetings were held in the same period.

BAPTIST.

The total membership of the Metropolitan Tabernacle is now 5351.

At the newly-formed Baptist Church at Old Southgate, twenty new members were received during February.

Mr. H. Johnson, "the singing evangelist," has completed a two months' mission at Henrietta-street Chapel, Brunswick-square, W.C.

There are now in union with the Metropolitan Association of Strict Baptist Churches forty-six churches, in which during the year there have been 124 baptisms.

Another entertainment was given last week to over three hundred sandwich men in Bloomsbury Chapel mission-hall through the kindness of Hon. Thomas Holt.

The mission effort at Hampton Court, of which Rev. A. Hall has for two years been the minister, has made considerable progress, and a church was formed recently.

About forty new members have joined the church at East-street, Newton Abbott, during the two years' pastorate of Rev. S. Syne, and the Sunday-school has largely increased.

Stoke Green Chapel, Ipswich, from which many have gone forth to engage in the ministry at home, has now sent one to the foreign mission field—Mr. Edgar Smythe, who is going to China.

At the annual meeting of the mission at Bell Green, Lower Sydenham, held last week, it was stated that all departments of Christian work are in a thriving condition. Mr. Charles Inglis will shortly commence a special mission.

During the twenty-four years of Rev. C. B. Sawday's pastorate at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, he has received about 2400 persons into church fellowship. There is now a membership of 535, and the various agencies in a flourishing condition.

METHODIST.

A very successful mission has been conducted at Ilfracombe by Mrs. Markham, of London.

A very successful revival mission has been held at Palsgrave, Scarboro', by two Yorkshire evangelists.

During a ten days' mission by Captain Warner Dennis, at Temple Chapel, Taunton, over sixty inquirers' names were taken.

Sixty new members enrolled themselves last year on the rolls of the Working Girls' Parlour, in connection with Hornsey-road Church.

A number of persons professed conversion during the services conducted at Littleborough by Mr. John Sampson, the Cornish evangelist.

Crowds flocked to the services held during Rev. T. Waugh's twelve days' mission at Bideford, many persons entered their names as inquirers.

Special mission services have been held at Queen's-road Wesleyan Church, Peckham, and at Knight's-hill Wesleyan Chapel, West Norwood, the evangelists being Rev. Frederick C. Stuart and Mr. Nix.

Seven hundred poor people a week have been provided with soup by the Benevolent Society of the Barry-road Wesleyan Church, Dulwich.

£15,000 has, it is said, been promised towards the £50,000 necessary for commencing the proposed West London Mission. There is to be a Convention on a large scale at Exeter Hall in April, to make a resolute effort to carry the project through.

A fortnight's mission at Rayston, Barnsley Circuit, conducted by Mr. Thorpe, of Nottingham, has resulted in the turning of many to Christ. Much blessing has also resulted from missions held at the Grove, York, at Borough Bridge, and at Greet Green, West Bromwich.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Turnbull, of St. Mary's, Edge-hill, Liverpool, aged 72; Rev. Richard Burdsall Lyth, M.R.C.S., of Fulford, York; Mr. Joseph Phythian, of Manchester, a trustee of the United Methodist Free Churches Theological Institute; Mr. T. Watson, M.P., a prominent member of the Methodist bodies.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

More than 9000 pledges have been taken at meetings of the Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission during last year.

At Leeds, recently, Mr. Joseph Henry, Poor Law Guardian, said he had never known a teetotaller apply for parish relief.

Dr. D. Thomas, one of the metropolitan coroners, has moved with a view to having inquests held elsewhere than in public-houses. They are generally profitable to the landlords.

Mr. George Blaiklock has been lecturing on temperance at Padstow, Polperro, Mevagissy, St. Austell, Tregoney, Teignmouth, Dawlish, Exeter, Dartmouth, and Holsworthy.

During the last eight years, over 61,000 seamen, fishermen, and bargemen, besides members of their families, have taken the pledge of total abstinence in connection with the Missions to Seamen.

Mr. Wm. Catlin, of the Cowcross Mission, Clerkenwell, has been giving a series of free illustrative lectures on temperance at Bangor. As a result about 450 persons have signed the pledge.

On the initiative of Rev. Charles Garrett it is intended to present to the Queen a memorial from the women of England, praying that her Jubilee may be marked by the passing of a national Sunday Closing Bill.

Mr. Spurgeon says that if under the pretence of a club drink is sold at all hours, and gambling is carried on without restraint, and men are decoyed from the ways of honesty, it is time that clubs were knocked on the head.

A bequest of £225 has come into the hands of the committee of the National Temperance League, 337, Strand, W.C., to be employed in offering prizes for the three best essays "in advocacy of the principles of total abstinence." Sir Nathaniel Barnaby, Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, and Dr. B. W. Richardson have consented to adjudicate upon the essays offered for competition, which should be sent in before January 1, 1888.

FOREIGN.

A Prohibition conflict has been raging in the State of Michigan.

The Queensland liquor law is a copy of Mr. McLagan's Veto Bill for Scotland.

Mr. Francis Murphy has had a successful series of meetings in Cincinnati.

Out of 1588 convicts in Illinois Penitentiary, last year 1559 were acknowledged drinkers.

Tristan d'Acunha is a teetotal island, without quarrels, without crime, and with remarkably little disease.

The U.S. Senate has passed a Bill to inflict penalties on persons, other than parents or guardians, supplying minors with intoxicants.

Sir William Fox and Mr. Glover have founded a branch of the New Zealand Alliance in almost every town and village in the Colony.

A clergyman in Pennsylvania lately declined to perform the marriage ceremony, because the bridegroom was under the influence of liquor.

In the Bechuanaland "Blue-book," just published, Government officials strongly commend the severe restrictions on trade in drink with the natives.

Judge Meech, Chicago, advises ministers to drop into his court and see the ruin wrought by drink. He thinks it would deepen their interest in temperance work.

More than 5000 ministers, in the Southern States of America, have been supplied by the National Temperance Society, U.S., with books and pamphlets on temperance.

A great welcome meeting in honour of Miss F. E. Willard, president, National W.C.T.U., was recently held in New York. Miss Willard lately addressed an immense meeting in Philadelphia.

If any member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers (U.S.) is found guilty of drunkenness, he can be expelled by a majority vote of those present; if he is convicted of keeping a saloon, he is declared expelled without a ballot.

The year has begun well for Prohibition in the United States. Five State legislatures (Michigan, Tennessee, Oregon, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania) have voted to submit to the voice of the people a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants as a beverage. It is quite probable that the legislatures of Texas and Alabama will decide in favour of submitting the issue to the people.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

WOMEN AND WAR.—Some French religious papers have published a very touching and earnest appeal to French and German mothers, entreating them to use all their influence against war.

BOHEMIA.—A Roman Catholic paper concludes an article upon a certain town with "Poor W——! Sunday-school Union—Baptists! It requires now only the plague to complete its misery."

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Paris Committee invite the ministers and churches of Paris to prepare for a series of meetings, with a view to their own revival, and then for evangelisation.

MADAGASCAR.—On Monday, December 13, two new churches were opened at Ambòhimànga. The Queen and Court attended the ceremony, and the Prime Minister spoke some words of encouragement.

PERE HYACINTHE.—Bishop Jenner, of "the Gallican Catholic Church," writes to The Daily Chronicle contradicting the statement that Father Hyacinthe has given up the work of Catholic reform in France and joined the Protestant Episcopal Church.

NEW YORK.—The Methodists are building a large hospital, the expenses of which will be covered by assured revenues. A foundation capital of £1000 is required for each bed; a great number have thus been founded, either by individuals or by groups of Christians.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The present Prime Minister is a decided Christian. When he visited Berlin in connection with a commercial treaty it was his practice to attend Bible readings on Sunday nights, and so he found it easy to decline diplomatic invitations on the Lord's day.

SMOKING.—A circular from the Moorish Government has been passed round the Diplomatic Body, at Tangier, stating that henceforth the sale of tobacco, kif, opium, or any preparation for smoking, would be illegal in Morocco, and that when the present contract for the monopoly expired, no new one would be granted. —Times of Morocco.

JEWS IN SPAIN.—It is a curious fact that Spain, from which the Jews were expelled four centuries ago, is evincing a hearty disposition to welcome them back. It is believed that the fourth centenary of their expulsion 1892, will see thousands of them once more dwellers in a land which they have never ceased to regard with a peculiar affection.

BOSTON.—There are several Sunday-schools for the Chinese. About ten years ago Miss Carter began one with two Chinese; now over one hundred are in attendance. As each scholar has a monitor to himself, this supposes a good deal of activity. They are taught not only the Bible and Christian truth, but reading, writing, English, singing, &c.

PARIS RACING.—The Municipal Council has been trying to put down "bookmakers," through whom so much money is gambled away at races. The shopkeepers, wine merchants, &c., have, however, petitioned the Council not to interfere, on the ground that they make much money, and are thus enabled to pay the taxes, by the race-course.—Le Christianisme.

DENMARK AND THE BIBLE.—There is good news from the State of Denmark. The Bible Society of that country has hitherto received monetary aid from the Bible House, Queen Victoria-street, in order to produce and circulate the Scripture. But the good Danish people are increasing their subscriptions in number and in amount, so that the British subsidy may be set free for use in some other land.

WURTEMBERG.—Much freedom in preaching the Gospel is enjoyed, though opposition is sometimes shown. At a recent burial the superintendent of the cemetery announced that no address must be given at a grave by a Baptist, under pain of punishment. The corpse was therefore left by the grave, and all adjourned outside, where a much larger audience gathered, and two telling Gospel addresses were given.

DRUMBO, ONTARIO.—Sabbath-school work has a firm and extensive hold in this province. The County of Oxford Sabbath-school Convention was held here, Wednesday and Thursday, February 9 and 10. Delegates attended from different schools in the county, and many profitable topics were discussed. The Convention formed into a Bible-class, when the International S.S. Lesson for the following Sabbath was taught. The Convention was held in the largest church in the place, and was well attended throughout. J. S. R.

ST. ETIENNE, FRANCE.—This mining town has just been the theatre of a frightful accident. Over eighty miners have lost their lives from an explosion in one of the principal mines, and only twelve bodies have been discovered. The whole town is plunged in consternation, as nothing previously indicated the approach of such a catastrophe. God is blessing very much this branch of Mr. McAll's Mission. Every week we have some new conversions. The Free Dispensary is doing very good work. The Word of God is freely given and preached, and the "Asile de Nuit" has always its thirty beds occupied. HASTINGS BURROUGHS.

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.—On January 25, Galo Parumo, a colporteur of the National Bible Society of Scotland, was at work in the village of Gordejuelo, near Bilbao. He was assaulted by a group of men, and so mercilessly beaten that he was left for dead. He was just able to crawl to the door of the village Maire. There was a light in the window, but his knocking and pleadings failed to open the door. He then dragged himself about a mile to the station of the Civil Guards, and made his complaint. The police took him back to the village, and after investigations sent him in a cart to the hospital at Bilbao. It is to be hoped that the tribunal which now has it in hand will see that justice is done; but the shadow on the dial of Liberty in Spain has gone back many degrees since the present ministry came into power.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Japanese Mission counts 400 adherents, of whom 200 are thought to be converted, and are received into the Church.

MALTA.—The bazaar on behalf of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Rest on Margherita Hill, was very successful. The purses presented to the Duchess of Edinburgh amounted to over £400, and sales, &c., made up a total of over £700. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh each contributed £25, and at the same time sent a donation of £25 to the funds of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Floriana. The soldiers and sailors themselves did right nobly, a considerable sum being collected in the different regiments and ships. All classes combined and worked most heartily to make it a great success.

Sunday Postal Labour.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The Humble Petition of

Sheweth

That in London and in more than 4,000 Rural Districts the Postmen rest on Sundays. That in Provincial Towns and in many Rural Districts the Postmen work on Sundays. That the Sunday work is unnecessary, and injurious, physically and morally, to the Postmen.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that Sunday Postal Labour may be abolished in all parts of the United Kingdom.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

The above Petition, with letters signed by

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK,
GORDON CALTHROP, M.A., Vicar St. Augustine's, Highbury,
JAMES FLEMING, B.D., Vicar St. Michael's, Chester-square,

JOHN THOMAS WIGNER, President London Baptist Association,
W. BALANTYNE, Presbytery of London,
R. FLETCHER, President Primitive Methodist Conference,
CHARLES HILL, Sec. Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, are being sent to Clergymen and Ministers in all parts of the Country in support of the following resolution, to be moved by Dr. Clark, M.P., in Parliament on the 22nd March:—

"That in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that on "and after Sunday, the 26th of June next, the Sunday "delivery of letters, &c., by letter-carriers and rural "messengers should cease throughout the United King"dom, except in those districts where, after the date "named, the receivers of two-thirds of the correspond"ence of the district petition the Postmaster-General "for a Sunday delivery."

Petitions, &c., may be obtained of The Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, 13, Bedford-row, London, W.C.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, [illegible] Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and [illegible] Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. [illegible] is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the [illegible] of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

THIS Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent fallen young women, for whom little provision had been made. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room in the Homes. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character, and position, to mix with others.

Since the Homes have been established 2920 have been admitted; of this number 1060 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 310 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others. While inmates of the Homes, the young women are trained in household and domestic duties, with a view to their becoming good and useful members of society. The great object, however, kept most anxiously before the Committee is, to afford them opportunities of religious instruction, and to impress upon them the extreme importance of turning to God with all their hearts.

The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

H. THOMPSON, Esq., Treasurer,
38, Mincing-lane, E.C.
W. HORNIBROOK, Secretary,
4, Regent-square, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

(1) For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.

(2) For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five shillings would pay for a child for a week.

(3) For law expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

Donations received at the Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY (Commenced 1863).

President:—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

THE COTTAGE HOMES AT FARNINGHAM

Are for 300 Little Boys, homeless or in danger of falling into crime. They are clothed, fed, educated, and taught a trade, and then provided with outfit and placed in situations, while they are looked after as "Old Boys."

THE ORPHAN HOMES AT SWANLEY

Are for 200 Orphan or Fatherless Boys, who are wholly maintained and educated, and receive technical instruction in lithography, telegraphy, photography, chemistry, and other subjects, to fit them for a working life.

BASIS:—"The Institution is Scriptural, but Unsectarian; and the boys are educated in the fear of God and in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 500 Boys now in the Homes. Over 1000 have already been sent out into the world.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Congregational Collections, and Bequests are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary,

A. O. CHARLES.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

RESCUE ALL-NIGHT WORK.

This is the third year that we have opened for a Night Shelter our Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, for destitute and homeless men; with an average picked up from the streets of from 100 to 150 each night, when open. The men were given a good breakfast, and a religious service held in the morning, when they have been faithfully dealt with. Work has been secured for some, and a great deal of other help given in deserving cases.

Besides this, lodgings for destitute women and children. Bread and tea tickets are given to several every week, to meet the terrible distress of this severe season.

To sustain this heavy work, besides the general expenses, help is urgently needed, and asked for. Donations in money or articles suitable for relief, will be gratefully received by the Secretary, as under. The Editor of The Christian will also receive donations.

RANSOME & CO., 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

THE UTMOST ANXIETY IS FELT for the welfare of one of the most time-honoured Children's Missions in London. For 85 years a glorious work for Christ has been carried on in Castle-yard, among the very poorest children in Southwark.

Sick children have been visit[illegible] Gifts of Clothing and Money made to necessitous cases, Summer Excursions, and numerous other benefits conferred.

All these useful operations are now threatened with collapse, through want of means to restore the greatly dilapidated building. For nearly two years the Teachers have been fervently praying for help against such a calamity, but the much-needed aid has not yet come.

The Committee of the Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall, have just voted a grant of £100 towards the £2,000 required. They strongly commend this urgent appeal to the best support of the Christian public.

Contributions most gratefully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-bu[illegible]gs, E.C., and acknowledged in THE CHRISTI[illegible] Treasurer, Rev. ROBERT TUCK, [illegible]ford-road, Lewisham-park, S.E. Bankers: London & Westminster Bank, No. 1, St. James's-square, S.W., account "Castle Yard Mission."

THE "DORCAS" THIMBLE.

STERLING SILVER.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

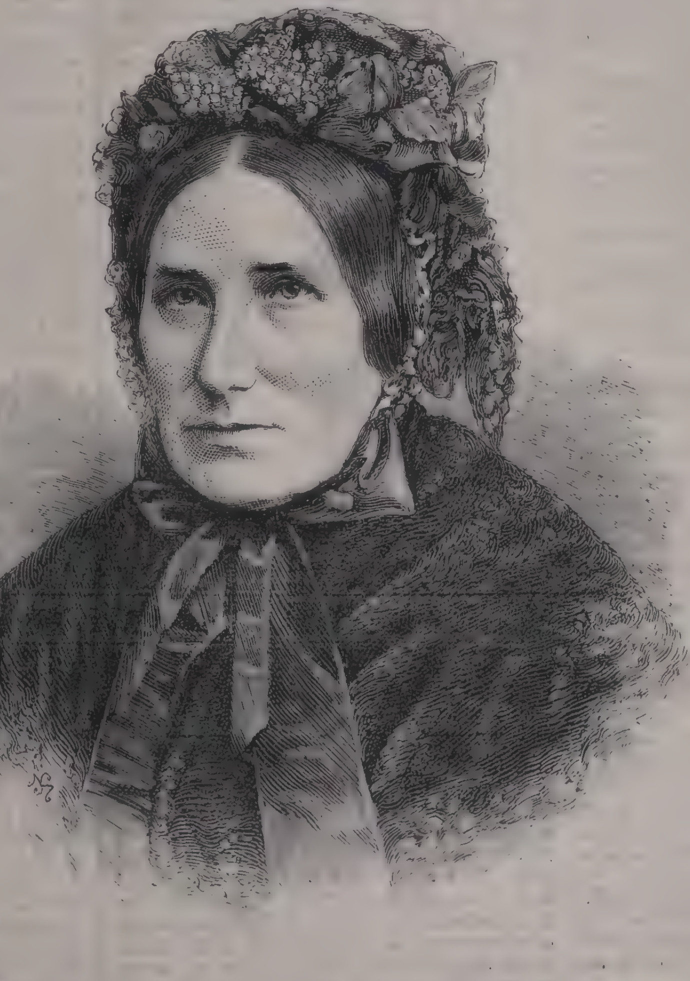
THE LATE MRS. DANIELL, ALDERSHOT.

MANY an old soldier's heart, all the world over, will throb as he takes up this week's CHRISTIAN, and looks upon the well remembered face of Mrs. Daniell, and almost hears again the familiar voice which so often entreated him and his comrades, in Christ's stead, to be reconciled to God. Certainly there can be few more fragrant memories in the British army than hers, as she was the founder of Soldiers' Homes, and the pioneer of the many devoted women who have since laboured much in the Lord, on behalf of our troops.

The story of the first Soldiers' Home and of the high courage and noble devotion shown by Mrs. Daniell in its foundation is truly "a romance of missions." She was the widow of an officer in the Hon. East India Company's service, and thus had a sort of prescriptive right to feel an interest in soldiers. But for many years after her widowhood, her lines were cast in quiet places. She was engrossed in the education of her children, in occasional literary work, and, as time went on, in earnest effort on behalf of the neglected poor in two or three isolated villages. God was thus manifestly enlarging her fitness for the more public labour for which He had designed his servant, and also preparing the very circumstances whereby the spark should be struck which was to fire a train of blessing. Mrs. Daniell had connected her Village Missions with the Country Towns' Mission, and in the year 1862 the secretary of that society, when conferring with her upon business matters, paused to lay upon her heart the state of Aldershot, which was just then attracting notice and correspondence in the papers. As is well known, the camp had grown out of the terrible deficiencies in our military system, which had been revealed by the Crimean war. In the midst of the wild heaths of Bagshot and Aldershot, consecrated hitherto to the exploits of the highwayman, a city of tents and huts, and eventually of brick barracks had sprung up; and with it the fungus-like growth of a wretched town, which only existed for the camp, and throve not less upon its sins than upon its needs. Above a hundred public-houses, many with dancing saloons of the lowest class, existed; whilst within camp there were at that time neither reading nor recreation rooms, libraries nor schools. The town was simply a sink of iniquity.



Mr. Wilson, to whom belongs also the happy privilege of having compiled the "Daily Light" which shines upon the "daily path" of thousands of God's people, was now the chosen instrument, as we have said, to press the needs of Aldershot upon Mrs. Daniell. "I wish you would adopt Aldershot," he repeated; but, as she said herself, she knew no more than a child how to set about it. Still it was her Master's voice she heard, and it was "as a burning fire within her bones," pressing her onwards in spite of "weakness and fear, and much trembling." She wrote to the beloved Mr. Pennefather, asking his counsel and prayers, and a portion of her letter was read at the Barnet Conference, and followed by fervent prayer. How abundantly those prayers have been answered, eternity alone can tell. From that sacred spot, Mrs. Daniell turned again to the project which lay before her, doubtless much refreshed and strengthened in spirit. Courageous as she was, she could not go alone to the camp, and for a time it seemed as though no suitable friend could or would accompany her. "Oh no, I couldn't go," was the response of the widow of a general officer, upon whose company Mrs. Daniell had set her mind. Silently she lifted up her heart to God, saying, "Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst incline her to go." Whilst leading family prayers one day in this lady's house, the text, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door," was specially laid upon Mrs. Daniell's heart, and in every letter written at this time she asked her friends to plead this word. A few days after, taking her friend's hand, she said, "I have told my daughter I hoped you would go with me to Aldershot." To Mrs. Daniell's surprise, she said, with tears, "My dear, I am going."

"Are you really? Thank God! What decided you?'."

"Oh, that verse, 'Behold, I have set before thee an open door."'

Thus the first step was made clear; and a letter from a lady in Scotland brought word that a Christian officer, known to both, was then in camp. Here was again the open door. With him Mrs. Daniell communicated, receiving the answer, "Come at once, we leave on September 6;" this was at the end of August. It need not be said that the invitation was promptly obeyed. "They went forth, not knowing whither they went."

To give the details of these eventful days, pregnant with future untold blessing, would be impossible. Those who would follow them must do so in the pages of "Aldershot," the volume in which Miss Daniell has affectionately enshrined her mother's memory and work. But a fragment of Mrs. Daniell's own account, given as she sat next year in the door of one of the tents at the Barnet Conference, and reported in The Christian, or, as it was then called, The Revival, must be quoted:—

"A few days had fully convinced both ladies that their immediate need was 'A public-house without the drink.' They dreaded the idea of bricks and mortar; nevertheless they were given the name of a gentleman who owned a good deal of land in the place, and drove out to see him.

"Mrs. Daniell having stated the principles upon which she proposed working, the gentleman replied, 'If these are your principles, ma'am, I shall be delighted to help you.'

"I then asked him if he had a piece of land which would be suitable, and if he would sell it to us at a low price. Mr. —— expressed his readiness to do so; and the evident interest which his countenance evinced led me to say, without premeditation, and as it were in joke:—

"'Perhaps, Mr. ——, you will give us a piece?'

"'Well, ma'am,' he replied, 'I will do so, with pleasure.'

"I was perfectly astounded, and said, 'What! give us a piece of land? Do I understand you aright?'

"'Yes; quite. I am sure you are working on the right principle, and I shall be happy to give you the ground.'

"The following day Mr. —— most kindly fulfilled his promise to show us the plots of ground which he thought suitable. As we came to one open space I asked to whom it belonged. He replied, 'That is mine, and is one of the pieces I intended to show you.'

"'Oh,' said I, 'my friend has been looking at that spot, and has set her heart upon it.' Mr. —— replied that we were welcome to that piece, but he had two other plots to show us, and would rather we reserved any decision till we had seen them. We came to another piece, preferable to the former. I said, 'But you don't intend to give us this?'

"He replied, 'Yes, ma'am, that is at your service, if you choose it; but I should wish you not to decide, till you have seen the third piece.'

"We went on further, and again stopped, when he said, 'This is the other piece.' I turned round with grateful surprise, and said, 'Surely you do not intend to offer us this piece for our mission-hall?'

"'Yes, I do,' he replied; 'if this meets your wishes, it is yours.'

"'Thank God,' said I, taking his hand. 'It is not given to me, but to Him. And, believe me, if there is one gift in that fast on-coming day of which you will never repent it is the ground on which we are standing. It is the Lord's, and so far as human law can make it, shall be consecrated to his work for ever.'"

And that blessed spot, dear and sacred for ever to many and many a heart, is surely written in the title-deeds of the Zion which is above, with these clauses, "This and that man was born there; and the Highest Himself shall establish her." Before the next year ran out, the beautiful hall, in every room of which, we think we may truly say, souls have been born again, stood a witness to the faithfulness of Him who had set before his trembling yet believing servant "an open door."

Mrs. Daniell immediately hired a house, in which her work was carried on till the Home itself should be ready. The foundation-stone was laid on February 11, 1863, by "the good Earl" of Shaftesbury; and on October 11 the first service was held in the large hall, when the saintly Mr. Pennefather spoke, as perhaps few other living men could so appropriately have spoken, of him who "walked with God, and was not, for God took him." How many of those thus united in this holy enterprise have met each other again, and heard the King's "Well done"!

Soldiers' Homes have been so often described that everyone at least who reads The Christian knows something about the refreshment bar and coffee-room, the reading and game-rooms, the baths, the class-room, and the large hall, which generally go to make up the skeleton of the work; and of the nightly Bible-class, the services, the singing, the night school, and the Bands of Hope, mothers' meeting, &c., wherewith this framework is clothed. Two principles stood foremost in Mrs. Daniell's mind. From these she never swerved, nor has the daughter, who was her "true yoke-fellow," and is now her faithful successor. The first was, ever to set the spiritual before the secular; to make no secret of the fact that whilst providing every suitable comfort and simple amusement which could attract, and interest, and elevate the men and their families, it was the salvation of their souls which was her first and final aim. The other was to stand on neutral and independent ground. If the Home is to be honestly and fairly for the benefit of the service at large, church distinctions must be unknown. In work for an army composed of men of all religious denominations, no man must run the chance of hearing anything said against the church of his choice, or being harassed by solicitations to unite himself with any other. We believe it is to the hearty belief and conscientious carrying out of these two principles that, under God, Mrs. Daniell's work owes the success which has made it a watchword throughout the British Army, and given it the honour of being followed by such a host of more or less consistent imitators.

In September, 1871, the labourer's long work was ended. A prolonged and suffering illness was the last trial which ripened her active ardent spirit for "the rest of the inheritance." "I have the royal word of a King to go upon," was one of her frequent sayings as the end drew near. The last words to which she responded were the name of Jesus, and the verse, "I will never leave thee." Shortly after, she bowed her head, saying, "Let me go;" and so she "went in to see the King." She lies in the military cemetery at Aldershot, amongst the soldiers for whom she literally poured out the last years of her life. She was but sixty when she died, but the doctors said that her constitution was worn to that of a woman of eighty. Her natural gifts, which were remarkable, were lavishly and rejoicingly devoted to her Saviour. We have heard many speakers, but few whose pathos and holy enthusiasm, above all, whose intense realisation of what she spoke, so carried the hearers with the speaker. Night after night we have seen the room thronged with soldiers hanging on her words; and who can say how many owe their salvation or their quickening in the divine life to those either publicly or privately spoken? A remarkable combination of courage and sound judgment fitted her for work which probably hardly one woman in a generation could achieve. It is comparatively easy to follow; but to be the pioneer who conceives and originates a hitherto unheard-of undertaking, and establishes it upon principles, which not only abide, but command the approval and imitation of others, is not vouchsafed to many. In saying this we would not overlook the fact that a small Institute had been established a few months previously at Sandgate, by the late Miss Lucy Papillon; but "it takes a woman to make a Home," and the idea of a Soldiers' Home actually worked by ladies devoting themselves, instead of merely supplying means for the support of paid labourers, was unknown till Mrs. Daniell turned it into a fact.

Since her departure, her work has but expanded in the hands of her daughter, who, besides a considerable enlargement of the mother-house, has added Branch Homes at Colchester, Manchester, Plymouth, and Chatham. How truly it may be said of the founder of Soldiers' Homes, "Her works do follow her." To tell of the constant stream of spiritual blessing continually pouring forth from these Homes would need volumes. It is souls which are sought, and souls which are given as the hire of the labourers who are reaping the fields of "the Lord of Sabaoth." Far beyond Mrs. Daniell's utmost dreams, when she first entered upon her untried path, is the "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over" which the gracious Lord has given, not only into her bosom, but into that of the devoted daughter who now so effectually carries on the work which her mother founded. To the King Eternal, Immortal, Invisible, be all the praise!

MISS DANIELL'S WORK.—The Soldiers' Home at Chatham has been considerably enlarged, and the re-opening services were attended with much blessing. A friend has offered £100 conditionally toward the £900 needed to free this branch of Miss Daniell's work from debt.

MISS MACPHERSON will be present at the noon prayer-meeting to-day (Thursday), with her fiftieth (Jubilee) party of children leaving for Canada. On Thursday, the 31st, Rev. Mr. McAll, of Paris, will speak.

UNPAID NATIVE AGENCY IN HEATHEN LANDS.

The following paper was commenced as a postscript to a letter written to a few missionaries joyfully toiling amongst the heathen. It was thought that others might be interested in the statements advanced, and we gladly give it a place in these pages.

SHOULD not the despatch this year of a hundred British workers to China stimulate us in a direction that may be more far-reaching —namely, in praying for, and expecting and working for, a vast army of natives, and the bulk of these natives entirely unpaid? The words of Dr. Nevius, American missionary, published in China's Millions, on his more recent methods, are exceedingly important. Is there not altogether a difference between a man such as Paul, who had to travel from place to place, and the localised overseers of the flock of Ephesus? Paul might have been paid, and often was paid; but how many read Acts xx. without noting that Paul enjoins all those elders of the flock at Ephesus, whom he styles bishops, to accept no salary. He who might have well received pay reminds these same overseers (Acts xx. 34, 35) that by his own hands he had supported himself and his co-workers, in order to set these overseers an example, that they should so labour, in order not only to sustain themselves, but to have an overplus to contribute to the weak.

We do not say that the New Testament lays down the same rule for all places. But with regard to the elders [overseers (A.V.) or bishops (R.V.)] of the flock of Ephesus, Paul is very particular on this point. Now, in the face of the allegations of Rev. James Johnstone, returned Presbyterian missionary, that since Carey's day the heathen and Mahommedans have increased 200 millions by births alone, whilst in the same hundred years Protestant missions have won only three millions out of them, might we not in our present emergency consider Paul's plan with the flock at Ephesus? In the face of the disaster of the simulated awakening excited by the love of money, experienced by Dr. Nevius in his earlier work, might we not in many places adopt that plan? When we hear of so many nominal native Christians in India, has not the time come, especially when we are told again and again that India believes in self-denial?

In vast China what can the few hundred European missionaries do of themselves, particularly if they are prevented imitating Paul, because so much of their time has to be occupied in overseeing a flock which Paul committed to the native overseers? But if these Europeans could mostly be engaged in initiatory work, as we venture to think Barnabas and Saul were, whilst almost every flock was speedily committed to a plurality* of native overseers, how efficiently might the converts thus be watched, whilst the work would not be hindered from spreading.

Then there is another most important point brought prominently to notice at this time on account of the success attending the work in China, connected with Dr. Nevius. This was detailed at a recent Conference, by Rev. Donald MacIver, of the Presbyterian Mission in Southern China. He says that the rapid increase of the converts of from 100 to 800 has been accomplished, not by set sermons of Dr. Nevius or his assistants, or by his other missionary instrumentalities, but by the simple witnesses for Christ of the converts themselves.

Let it be remembered that just about the period of William Carey's appeal, Sunday-schools were started by Raikes, and he arranged that each teacher should receive wages. From this one circumstance, the Sunday-school movement for a time came to an absolute collapse; and it was left, not to Raikes, but to another, to devise the re-starting of the movement with a then unheard-of idea, viz., that all the teachers should be unpaid. Now, how many thousand Sunday-schools are at work over the world, and still they spread, and seem to have in them an element of indefinite expansion. It is hard to say whether they confer the greater blessing on the children or on the self-denying teachers. Many of us can tell what a blessing has been conferred upon ourselves during the years of our being privileged to be Sunday-school teachers. Why, then, should not our Indian, Chinese, and African fellow-Christians have a similar benefit by being made overseers of many a flock of their fellow-countrymen? By such means as are thus pointed to, might not the work have an indefinite expansion?

We at home are bound to confess that our work in Britain often sadly lacks the element of go, of expansion, or of self-propagation. But still, may we not be allowed humbly to pray and long and expect for our more honoured brothers and sisters from every church, now toiling amongst the heathen, a better success than we have at home? Surely we may say, without giving offence to any, that our methods in Britain, in America, and in many parts of Christendom, are often altogether too cumbersome, too unyielding, and too expensive, for rapidly overtaking the evangelisation of the untold millions of the heathen and Mahommedan world.

Full well we know that to lean on any method would be to lean on a vapour. We must—may we not say we shall?—lean only upon the living God. But in leaning wholly and only upon Himself, as those who have neither any wisdom, nor any might, will He not teach us how to go forward? Seeing He says, "Advance," we must obey, if we love Him.

It is good for the hundred to be despatched to China, and for hundreds to follow them from Europe and America into India, and to Africa, and into other parts of China; but surely the time has come for us to cry for thousands of natives to be sent forth by the Lord of the Harvest. Yet, let there be no haste in recruiting; remembering that Gideon's 32,000 had no "go" in them. It was God's 300 who broke and chased the heathen multitudes; for, before the recruited 32,000 God went not; but before the decruited 300 He led the way to victory upon victory, even when they were hungry and faint, but still pursuing. To our honoured brothers and sisters especially belongs the most emphatic promise of our Lord, in the three last verses of Matthew.

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.
March 16. JAMES E. MATHIESON.

The following are the words used by Rev. Donald MacIver at Mildmay Missionary Conference, 1886:—

"Dr. Nevius, one of the most prominent missionaries in China, in answering the question, 'Which methods of work have really brought the greatest number of converts into the Church?' states in The Chinese Recorder the various methods, as follows, beginning with what appear to be the least fruitful:—

"(1) Bible distribution; (2) tract distribution; (3) chapel preaching; (4) translation and literary work; (5) schools; (6) itinerations.

"Such is Dr. Nevius' list, and it is probably correct as far as it goes. Medical Missions and work among women should have been included. Both have been much blessed in recent years. Many Christian friends may be grieved at the low place assigned to Bible distribution; and yet I believe the experience of almost every Chinese missionary would confirm what Dr. Nevius says. Millions of Scriptures have been distributed to the Chinese during the past forty years, and the instances of good accomplished by them, without the living preacher, are comparatively rare. Doubtless there have been many instances of good done that will not come to light till 'that day.'

"But in connection with this question of comparative fruitfulness of methods, the most important statement has yet to be made. Dr. Nevius says of these methods, 'I am disposed to think that the number of conversions due to each of them would be found to increase about in the order in which they are mentioned above; and that the number traceable to them all together would be but a small fraction of the whole, and that by far the greater proportion is to be referred to private social intercourse.'

"That is certainly our experience in the South of China. Probably seven-eighths of our membership have been brought in, not directly as the result of the preaching, either of the European missionary or of the appointed Chinese evangelist, but simply from private Christians telling to their friends and neighbours about the Saviour they have found. This state of matters is, on the one hand, cause for thankfulness, for the evidence it gives of the reality of the religion of these Chinese Christians; and it also is full of hope as to the future of Christ's kingdom in China. If every individual member of the 30,000 Christians in China were a true missionary, then the Middle Kingdom would soon be evangelised.

"But it seems to me that this state of matters is full of important lessons for all interested in the progress of the Gospel in that land. We are to give most attention to the method God's Spirit uses most. We are not to give up our preaching tours, nor our distribution of Scriptures and tracts; we are not to close our hospitals and schools; but we, as foreign missionaries, should give most attention to the work of training our converts in the knowledge of Scripture, developing their gifts and graces, and superintending and guiding their efforts to bring to the truth their friends and kindred."

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY ATLAS.*

A MORE valuable contribution to the literature of missionary enterprise than that contained in the two parts of this atlas already issued can scarcely be imagined. Part I. is occupied with Africa and the Mohammedan lands of the East, and in it there is a complete synopsis of the history, the religions, the languages, the condition of the peoples of the Dark Continent, as well as an account of the different missions working there. All these particulars, as well as the accompanying map, are brought up to the latest point of knowledge and discovery, and are simply invaluable to the missionary student and to all who seek to understand the varied position of affairs and the various efforts by which this has been attained. The chronological tables show at a glance what is known of Africa, from the discovery of Sierra Leone to the appointment of Bishop Parker.

The second part conducts us through the whole of our great Indian Empire, and, proceeding on the same method, gives succinctly a view of its many races, and peoples, and tongues, as well as a complete summary of the history of the missions there established. There are about ten maps to each part. Other parts will be issued as soon as ready.

THE SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH have sent lately several hundred Scripture rolls in French and English to Pastor Chiniquy, and some of his co-workers in the United States; grateful letters have been received. The Society are about to publish a similar roll in the Norwegian language, and intend, if they receive sufficient support, to extend the publication to other languages. The secretary is Mr. F. Woodhouse, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

SCHOOLS OF PROPHECY.

ONE chief value of prophecy lies in the light it gives upon the present—"We have the more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn and the daystar arise in your hearts." Tested by this inspired declaration of the use of prophecy, the historic interpretation of the Apocalypse, so eloquently described in Mr. Guinness's impassioned lectures at Exeter Hall, is more than vindicated. Nothing could be more timely at this juncture, when false notions of liberty are helping forward the Popish reaction which threatens to reassert its tyranny in England, than these grand expositions of the murderous history of the Papal Beast.

We agree with Mr. Guinness in believing that the Futurist system of interpretation has done much to withdraw attention from the vast and adulterous apostasy of Rome—the unnatural union, for worldly and carnal ends, of Pagan idolatry with corrupted-Christian superstition. We cannot too emphatically express our rejection of the artificial division of that glorious book, the fruit and flower of all preceding Scripture, into past, present, and future, with a gap of two thousand years between the two last periods. That is to say, we totally dissent from the idea that the Revelation made to John, the beloved disciple, one of the four Evangelists, and one of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb to his Church during her sojourn on earth, has nothing to do with the Church in her external relation to her three great enemies, the world, the flesh, and the devil; but that her portion in it is confined to the seven Epistles, which relate to her internal life. To us it is incomprehensible, that in the face of the assurance which closes its first paragraph—

> Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand

—it should be maintained that the words of the prophecy relate not to the Church, but mainly to the Jews when the Church shall have been caught up to heaven; and that the blessing on reading the words and keeping the things contained therein is not consequent upon our taking heed to the prophetic word as to a light that shines in a dark place, and gives us light in our own present circumstances; but upon our study of things which are to take place when we have been caught up to meet the Lord in the air and to be for ever with Him. Thus we have an endless series of guesses and speculations as to what shall happen on earth when (according to some) we shall be in heaven—

> When glory yet unheard of
> Shall shed abroad its ray,
> Resolving all enigmas,
> An endless Sabbath day;

or (according to others), while we are still on earth, passing through the fires of "the great tribulation."

But while we are in perfect accord with Mr. Guinness in believing that the Revelation has been throughout the ages a lamp shining in a dark place, to which in the darkest periods our brethren did well to take heed, until the day dawned and the daystar arose in their hearts, we do not think that all their interpretations of the Apocalypse were correct. Notwithstanding the great value of the Horæ Apocalypticæ, we think that some of Elliott's translations of symbols were far-fetched. Above all, we do not think that any one interpretation exhausts the fulness of the fullest of all prophecies. "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of private (or special, R.V. marg.) interpretation." The Revelation was full of meaning to the sufferers under Pagan persecution, before the Papacy existed, and so will it be to others, even to the end.

It is impossible to prove that there will be no last personal Antichrist, and no crisis of great tribulation in which this age shall end. Indeed, a process of events necessitates a crisis; and all over the world there is the expectation of a crisis—the predicted looking for of those things which are coming on the earth. And if there is to be a crisis, as all experience would lead us to expect, and as prophecy not uncertainly foreshows, then the analogy of history would lead us to anticipate the rising of some master mind, some mighty individual on whom all will depend. Every great period of history has had its man on whom, as on a pivot, all has turned. And it is impossible to prove that the great conflict between good and evil will not be at last decided between the incarnate and risen Son of God, and the greatest, wisest, most commanding, most kingly man that fallen humanity has ever produced. There is no inherent unlikelihood in the expectation that one will arise the concentration of all Satanic subtlety and force; that all that is earthly, sensual, devilish; that all the virus of Paganism, Popery, and Mahommedanism; all hatred of God and of his Christ—should be concentrated in one person, and that he should be the ultimate man of sin, the son of perdition, whom the Lord will consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming.

We think that Futurists are entirely and unreasonably wrong in denying the historic interpretation, root and branch, notwithstanding abundant evidence of its reality. We think Historical interpreters equally at fault in refusing to admit the possibility of a personal Antichrist and the great tribulation.

It would be of immense advantage not only to themselves, but to Christians generally, if the advocates of opposing systems would be content to believe that there may be truths invisible from their own point of view which would become visible if they would put themselves in each other's places.

If each would try to find out what is true in their opponent's system, and what is untrue in their own, then God would reveal to each what now He cannot unfold to either. M.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN FINLAND.—In a letter to Mr. Joseph Malins, G.W.C.T., Mr. Forstadias, of Abo, Finland, states that the new year opened, as regards temperance matters, under pleasing and joyful conditions, a new and improved law for the regulation of the liquor traffic having come into force on January 1. This is partly formed on the local option principle, and has so far proved effective. But already it is proposed to introduce a Bill on the pattern of the Maine Law, when the Diet again assembles. Meanwhile new temperance societies are springing into existence, and the older ones are establishing themselves in houses of their own. Temperance taverns and dining rooms have been opened in several places, and wealthy citizens are supporting the cause with their gold and influence. The hands of the brethren have been further strengthened by gifts of tracts for mission purposes, and by the cooperation of Mr. F. D. Lonnbeck, who supports the movement in his journal, besides lecturing on the subject in different places. A great temperance meeting will be held in Abo at Midsummer, when it is expected that representatives from all parts of the country will be present, and a solemn religious service will be held in the Cathedral—the Westminster Abbey of the country.

CHURCHES AND MISSIONS.

HAVING returned recently from the East, where, as a layman, I took a deep interest in the work being carried on by the different Missionary Societies, perhaps you will permit me to make a suggestion, which, if carried into practice, will, I am persuaded, create a more intelligent and earnest interest in missions among our countrymen at home. The consequence of this would be more workers, more funds, and greater strides than have ever yet been made in converting those nations who know not the Lord.

The majority of supporters of the various missions subscribe to a general fund, and have a notion that it goes in a general way to support all sections of mission work. Consequently, they have a very general interest in mission work, and know a little about many, but very little about any one foreign field. Thus their prayers in this direction are vague and indefinite.

From my own experience, I know that I should much more readily subscribe for the support of a mission which I actually know about, and from which I frequently get direct reports, telling of special needs and definite progress, than to a general fund which is scattered over the globe, and the results of my share of which I cannot trace. In this way, I venture to say, we are almost all alike; we want to lay out our Lord's money to the best advantage, and see that it is bearing good interest.

I would submit, therefore, that each missionary in the foreign field, have a direct correspondence with one congregation (or more, as the case may be) at home; that money subscribed by that congregation go, through the general secretary, to support their own missionary and his work, and that he send home occasional letters to the congregation, and to the children of the Sunday-school, reporting progress, interesting cases, &c., and setting forth any urgent door for extension or other special appeal for help in the way of prayers, workers, or funds. These letters could be read at a monthly missionary prayer-meeting, where their own missionary could be specially remembered, and where a letter in reply might be drawn up. When the missionary comes home on furlough, they would be specially interested to see him, and he them. By this means I believe the following objects will be attained:—

(1) A great force—definite prayer—will be set to work for the conversion of the world.

(2) Missionaries will know that they are being individually prayed for at a certain time, and this will fill them with fresh zeal and courage.

(3) Old subscribers will increase their subscriptions, because they learn that definite good is the outcome of their money.

(4) Non-subscribers will become interested in a definite work which they can grasp, and will become subscribers.

(5) Sunday-school children and other young people—boys specially—will be particularly interested in a letter from abroad, and thus the missionary spirit will be planted and grow in them as they grow, giving us in the rising generation one hundred earnest missionaries where we now have ten, ready to "go into all the world."

The scheme is at work already on a very small scale, and proves most successful. The writer will be glad to receive any suggestions, or answer any inquiries sent to the address given below. D. A. HUNTER.

BRISTOL OLD PARK LOCK HOSPITAL.—Of the fifty-one cases treated last year in this hospital, forty being new ones, no less than thirty were discharged cured, while seventeen went to their relations or to service, and only two proved unsatisfactory cases. Three-fourths of those who leave the hospital are restored, the report states, not only to health, but to virtue, and thenceforth live useful lives. Stronger testimony could scarcely be borne as to the value of the institution, which was started in 1874, as a protest against the system of Government hospitals. Letters from old patients speak most gratefully of the kindness received from nurse and matron, and show also that they have learnt what is still more precious, the story of the love of Jesus, in whom they trust for strength against temptation. The hospital is at Old Park Hill, St. Michael's, and the hon. superintendent is Mrs Thomas Thomas, Hyde Lodge, Westbury Park.

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

MR. GRATTAN GUINNESS'S LECTURES.

VI. POST-REFORMATION TIMES.

As Mr. Guinness proceeds in the development of the great subject on which for six weeks he has been lecturing with such power at Exeter Hall, the force of the cumulative evidence he brings forward is more and more palpable. Having already reviewed the whole period which may be said to have closed in the glorious triumph of the Reformation, Mr. Guinness, last week, spoke especially of the interpretation and use of anti-Papal prophecies in the three last centuries. These centuries have, he said, a double aspect—a Protestant and a Papal. On the one hand, they present the spectacle of an era of liberty and light, and, on the other, of reaction and revolution. After pointing to well-known facts, such as the emancipation of the human mind, the breaking forth of the light of God's Word, and the understanding of prophetic Scriptures, and the Papal reaction and the revolutions with which this advance was encountered, he passed to a brilliant apostrophe on those great spirits upon whom the brunt of the struggle fell. He then glanced at Rome's reply to the prophetic teachings of the Reformers, as embodied in the works of the Jesuits, Ribera and Bellarmine, who advocated the futurist interpretation of prophecy, concluding, of course, that the prophecies of Daniel, Paul, and John, with reference to the Antichrist, had no application whatever to the Papal power.

Mr. Guinness proceeded to give a rapid but masterly survey of the writings of leading prophetic interpreters during the last two hundred and fifty years. Protestant interpreters, he said, had done more than answer the false futurism of the Church of Rome. "They had built up the true historic interpretation of prophecy; they had built up a solid and symmetrical system, which has developed slowly, which has progressed constantly, which has been born, not of diligent investigation only, but of profound experience; a system whose truth has been sealed and demonstrated by its ever-growing correspondence with the actual course of events." A complete pillar of intrepretation is to be found in the works of Joseph Mede, Sir Isaac Newton, Jurieu, Vitringa, Daubuz, Fleming, De Cheseaux, Bishop Newton, Faber, Cunningham, Keith, Bickersteth, Wordsworth, Elliott and Birks. Referring to these in detail, Mr. Guinness said that Mede, who lived in the century immediately succeeding that of the Reformation, had a deep insight into the Divine Word, and made prophecy his special study. He exhibited, in a striking and remarkable way, the synchronism and succession of the prophetic visions, and demonstrated their fulfilment in the events of history. These events have, during the last two and a half centuries, confirmed Mede's interpretation, and have also shown that the prophetic periods should be reckoned from an era rather than from a point of time; and that their termination is a corresponding era. For a full expansion of this the lecturer referred his audience to his recent book, "Light for the Last Days." It was about the same time as the publication of Mede's work that the Westminster Confession of Faith was drawn up, a document, said Mr. Guinness, that endorsed the historical interpretation of prophecy, and declared the Roman Pontiff to be the predicted "Man of Sin." The famous Puritan writer, Thomas Goodwin, described the Apocalypse as "the Story of Christ's Kingdom"—a simple and significant phrase.

Sir Isaac Newton investigated and traced out the connections of the prophetic visions with the course of history and chronology, utilising his unrivalled astronomical skill. He interpreted the periods of time on the "year-day" system. In alluding to the symbol of the angel flying through the midst of heaven with the everlasting Gospel, he said that "if the general preaching of the Gospel be approaching, it is to us and our posterity that these words mainly belong." How marvellously has his anticipation been accomplished in this respect. One of the most important features of his work is its exposition of the use of symbolic language in prophecy. Futurists utterly degrade these solemn and majestic predictions by their pernicious attempts to expound them on the principle of a literal fulfilment. Robert Fleming, in a small but remarkable work, published in 1701, entitled, "The Rise and Fall of Rome Papal," mentioned the dates 1794 and 1848 as probable crises in the overthrow of the Papal power; and also speaks of 1866. The French Revolution fell out at the first of these dates, and the second brought another tremendous crisis in Papal history in Europe. The third and last date saw the introduction of the series of Papal defeats which culminated in the overthrow of the Romish monarchy in France, and the fall of the Papal temporal power in Italy. As to De Cheseaux's work on the astronomic character of the prophetic times, the lecturer referred those interested, to the full exposition of it in "The Approaching End of the Age."

In dealing with the progress of prophetic interpretation during the present century, Mr. Guinness made special reference to the writings of Bishop Wordsworth, Rev. E. B. Elliott, and Professor Birks. The first of these demonstrated conclusively that Rome Papal is the Babylon of the Apocalypse. His testimony on the point is such as to settle the question finally for all intelligent and unbiassed minds. Even Dean Alford, a semi-futurist, commended Wordsworth's view of Papal Rome as the harlot of the vision in Revelation xvii. The allusion to Dean Alford led Mr. Guinness to remark that such eminent Greek scholars as the learned Dean, Tregelles, and Ellicott, are not to be implicitly trusted as prophetic interpreters. "The instrument they employ in their researches is the microscope, not the telescope. They pore over manuscripts, words, letters, points; but they do not grasp the meaning of history or prophecy as a whole." Elliott and Birks, however, were able equally to use the microscope and telescope. The Horæ Apocalypticæ of the former is unquestionably the most learned and able work ever written on the Book of Revelation, and will remain a masterpiece of exposition, while the study of the sure word of prophecy endures. Professor Birks' "First Elements of Sacred Prophecy" is an overwhelming answer to Futurism. The most learned works in the exposition and defence of that system it shivers to fragments and scatters to the winds.

Mr. Guinness concluded his historical resumé with a strong impeachment of the "Futurist" scheme of interpretation:—

> The historic interpretation is no dream of ignorant enthusiasts. It is no speculation of fanciful, ill-balanced minds. It has grown with the growth of generations; it has been built up by the labours of men of many nations and ages. It has been embodied in solemn Confessions of the Protestant Church. It forms a leading element in the testimony of martyrs and reformers. These holy men, like the prophets of old, bore a double testimony for the truth of God, and a testimony against the apostasy of his professing people. The providential position which they occupied, the work they accomplished, gave singular and special importance to their testimony; and this was their testimony, and nothing less, that Papal Rome is the Babylon of prophecy, drunken with the blood of saints and martyrs; and that its head, the Roman Pontiff, is the predicted "Man of Sin or Antichrist." To reject this testimony of God's providential witnesses on a matter of such fundamental import, and to prefer to it the counter doctrine advocated by the apostate persecuting Church of Rome, is the error and guilt of modern Futurism.
> And that Futurism is self-condemned. Futurism is literalism, and literalism in the interpretation of symbols is a denial of their symbolic character. It is an abuse and degradation of the prophetic Word, and a destruction of its influence. It substitutes the imaginary for the real, the grotesque and monstrous for the sober and reasonable. It quenches the precious light which has guided the saints for ages, and kindles a wild, delusive marsh fire in its place. It obscures the wisdom of Divine prophecy; it denies the true character of the days in which we live; and it hides the nearness of the Advent of Christ in the power and glory of his kingdom.
> But in spite of the injurious effects of these false interpretations, "the foundation of God standeth sure;" none can cancel the prophecies which He has written in his holy Word, and none can deny or destroy the mighty and far-reaching results which their true interpretation has already accomplished in the world. They have given us—and this is their glory—they have given us the Reformation. They have broken the iron chains of superstition and despotism, and lifted nations from the depths of their abasement. They have reared a Temple whose walls no enemy can ruin. They have reopened, they have given back to the world, that Book whose teachings have led millions into the way of life and peace. And the sacred light of these prophecies is still guiding the Church of God across the wide ocean of her dangerous way. Those steadfast stars of prophecy lighted of old the persecuted Waldenses through the darkness of the Middle Ages; they lighted the progress of the Lollards and the Bohemians before the Reformation; they lighted the noble Reformers through gloom and tempest three hundred years ago; they have lighted since the watchful saints through troubled centuries; and they are shining still in that high and holy firmament whence no mortal hand can pluck them down. And they shall shine on—those thousand glittering stars of prophecy—till they have fulfilled their glorious mission; till they have guided the Church in safety to her celestial haven, and their long-enduring radiance melts at last in the rising splendours of eternal day.

The concluding lecture of the series was on "The Double Foreview of the Reformation, afforded by Old Testament types and New Testament prophecies," including a survey of "the present position of the Church of Rome and the Reformed Churches," and a statement of "our duties and prospects." A summary of it will be given in our next. The complete course of lectures, we understand, will in due time be published in book form by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

MR. JOSEPH RABINOWITZ.

We are permitted to give the following extracts from a letter written by Mr. Rabinowitz to Dr. Saphir. Clearly the Lord is with him, and we trust that friends of Israel at home will strengthen his hands to finish the work God has given him to do.

I found many letters from Jewish brethren in different towns in Russia, who are anxious to enter upon the way of peace through the Prince of Peace. All the Jewish newspapers in Russia made mention of my journey to London, and of my addresses there, and many of our Jewish brethren, to whom my work for Christ is dear, are expecting great results. Passing through Liepsig I saw Professor Delitzsch, who called upon me three times to confer about the work.

My journey to St. Petersburg was well timed, and by the grace of God blessed and successful. I am permitted to preach the Gospel, and to distribute the New Testament among Israel without any hindrance whatever, till the proper hour comes for establishing the community of the "Sons of Israel of the New Covenant." In the spring I hope to obtain permission from the authorities of Bessarabia to build a place of worship. I can obtain a site in one of the best parts of Kisheneff, and will prepare the building materials when I have the necessary money in my hands.

I found in St. Petersburg a man who could assist me in my work here. He is about fifty years of age, and was brought to Christ through the movement in Russia. He is known to Prof. Delitzsch, speaks Hebrew and Russian, and is familiar with the Talmud and the Kabbalah.

THE "STRANGERS' REST," RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The stern conflict with sin which for nine years has been waged by Christian workers in this notorious rendezvous has wrought a wonderful change in the locality. So great is this change that a Christian Norwegian captain expresses himself as unable to believe that the street where the Rest stands is identical with the terrible Highway which he knew twenty years ago. The main features of the work are well known to our readers, but the report before us gives abundant illustration of its many-sided character, and of the way in which it is made effectual in restoring the poor wanderer. Into the Rest come many burdened ones, and here find a peace and joy the like of which was never before known to their hearts; there also come not a few who have been stripped of all they possessed, by the thieves amongst whom they had fallen, but who find consolation in some word from the Book of Life, and live to thank God that when in deepest distress they found a heavenly treasure. Between 1500 and 2000 meetings are held in the course of the year, people of many nationalities being reached thereby. The work carried on amongst the children and youths of the district is also full of promise. Mr. J. T. Isaac (163, St. George's-street) is the honorary secretary.

LETTERS FROM ROME.—5.

SOME men of progress, travelling to an imaginary Paradise restored by human legislation, have scornfully compared Lord Tennyson's "Locksley Hall: Sixty Years After," with the earlier poem, much to the disadvantage of the later one. Yet the dreams of youth are not generally found to be nearer the reality than the experience of age. The poet's pessimism is that of Jesus and his apostles in their predictions of the last days. The superiority of the later to the earlier poem seems to me more manifest each time I read it. But, however this may be, there is one line in "Sixty Years After" worth more to this generation than the whole of its predecessor. It is this:—

> Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name.

Here is the insight of the seer and the utterance of the prophet. The ideal of modern government would seem to be the time of the Judges, when every man did that which was right in his own eyes. That means freedom for the bloody and deceitful man to oppress the weak and deceive the inexperienced. "Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name." The men of Gibeah free to glut their passion, to the destruction of the defenceless woman, whose dead hands upon the threshold cry for vengeance. The Romish adultery free to build its convent prisons in the name of freedom of worship; her priests free to confess, or violate, or murder England's imprisoned daughters; and the Government not free to pass inside those doors, barred by fraud and violence in the name of liberty. Liberated Italy has rejected and forbidden the monastic system. Liberals in England complacently give it room, and scoff at their fellow-citizen who rightly reads their folly, and writes upon it: "Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name." Romanism is not a religion, but a superstition; not a worship, but an idolatry; not a church, but an apostasy; not the bride, the Lamb's wife, but the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth.

I have before me the photograph of a shrine in the church of Santo Agostino, containing a bronze statue of a so-called Madonna and Child, before which I saw men and women bow and worship, and kiss the feet of the image. The priest in attendance gives to those who apply to him, packets containing cotton wool dipped in the oil of the lamp which burns before the idol, that they may be healed thereby. The shrine is covered with offerings from those who have been healed by faith in the lifeless thing. The superscription is VIRGO TUA GLORIA PARTUS. The subscription—Vero Originale della Madonna del Parto che si venera nella Chiesa di S. Agostino in Roma.

Leaving the church, we went to a neighbouring shop and bought this photograph. My companion asked:—"Who are these figures?" "Agrippina and Neroni" [i.e., Nero and his mother Agrippina]. "But they are worshipped as the Madonna and Child?" "Oh, yes! but everyone knows what they are." "Do you ever go there?" "Occasionally." "Do you kneel before the image?" "Yes." "How can you do that?" "It is an affair of faith" (with a shrug of the shoulders). "Can you accept a thing so evidently idolatrous?" "We accept so many things." "Is it not a solemn thing to do so in the face of eternity?" Then followed a conversation, in which the Gospel of Christ was opened up, and the offer of a New Testament accepted.

Notwithstanding the evident and flagrant idolatry of Romanism, the apologists for it, as a religion with which Protestants ought not to interfere, are not few nor far between. And sometimes, when this is not done directly, it is done by implication. On Sunday week, at the American Chapel in Paris, the preacher expounded Matt. xvi. 19 to the effect that the binding and loosing relate to the conscience; that whatever a man sincerely and with all the light he has binds his conscience to do, or looses his conscience from doing, on earth, is bound or loosed in heaven. What one has bound another might loose, and in each case it was bound or loosed in heaven. The devout Roman Catholic who worships the Virgin and confesses to a priest binds his conscience, and it is bound in heaven. It is the right of the Christian Church to decide cases of conscience and of duty for itself. It may have its own creed, and administer its own ordinances as it will; and must accord the same liberty to others. No wonder if, under such teaching as this, American and English women go over to Rome; no wonder if English and American men become infidels; for there is no more a standard of truth; truth is not a fixed, but a variable quantity. Be sincere and believe anything. Administer the sacrament in one kind. Devoutly and affectionately kiss Agrippina's iron toes; anoint yourself with oil conveyed in cotton wool dipped in her dim lamp. The conscience, however superstitious, ignorant, or deceived, is bound on earth, and it is bound in heaven. Or if loosed from all bonds on earth, it is loosed in heaven. I do not think the minister meant all this, but it was fairly deducible from his premises.

To turn to something of better worth, let me write of the noble and useful work of Mr. and Mrs. Wall at Rome. They went to Bologna some twenty years ago, and in 1870 they removed to Rome. They represent the Baptist Missionary Society, but their work is as little sectarian as anything in Rome. In driving through the city I saw a large bill on the hoardings containing the Ten Commandments. Mr. Wall rents a hundred spaces in different parts of Rome where he posts up passages of Scripture, such as "God so loved the world," &c.; but in view of the then approaching Carnival the Ten Commandments seemed most appropriate. They cannot but be largely read, and they are very rarely torn.

Mr. Wall is just now making an important new departure in keeping his mission rooms open every night. Doubtless, in crowded populations, this is essential to success. The only difficulty in the present case is the fewness of the labourers. So far as it had been tried, previous to my leaving Rome, the result had been very encouraging.

Mr. Wall's work at Rome is very similar in kind to that of Mr. McAll in Paris, and, in proportion to its smaller extent, its usefulness bears favourable comparison with the work in France, which is saying a great deal.

One chief secret of success is keeping in touch with the people. Religion dies of respectability. When ministers or missionaries get above their work, it is all over with them. Mr. and Mrs. Wall and their helpers are in sympathy with the poor and with all who need them, and the people know it. One day a gentleman asked him to bury his child. He was a patriot and a sceptic—no more a Catholic. When the child died the father would not have it buried by the priest, nor the mother without religious rite—so they compromised by applying to Mr. Wall. On the way the lady said her faith in Romanism was failing. When women are ill the Santo Bambino (a lay figure of the Holy Child) is taken in a carriage for them to pray before it. In one case when this had produced no good effect, the priest told the woman there was nothing left for her but to get a bit of the linen of Pio Nono and make it into pills. She managed to get the linen; the child took the pills, and died. This shook the faith of the poor bereaved mother in the Romish church, and she has ever since come occasionally to the evangelical meeting.

One Saturday night I went with Mr. Wall to Tivoli, and was delighted to find a meeting of fifty, nearly all men; and about twenty on the Sunday morning round the Lord's Table. At the beginning the work had been strenuously opposed by the priests instigated by the bishop, but in vain; and now it is almost unopposed.

Mrs. Wall's work among the poor of Rome, the mothers' meetings, and the medical missions, are of deep interest. Mrs. Wall says in her report for 1886:—

> The past year, the priests redoubled their efforts to break up, if possible, our meetings for the poor; often sending spies, who would take the names of our poor people, to prevent their receiving help in any way from the parish priest or his friends. Food and shelter have been offered by them, to some of our very old and infirm, and, whilst many have refused, a few accepted from sheer necessity, though they tell us their opinions are the same as before.
> Our experience in the Medical Mission has convinced us that this is one of the most efficient means of breaking down prejudice, and awakening in the hearts of the people a desire to hear and receive the Gospel.
> The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society have very kindly given us a grant of £15, towards opening a third Medical Mission, in another quarter of the city. For this we shall need to engage an Italian doctor, which will incur much more expense, but we hope our friends, seeing the importance of this branch of work in a Roman Catholic country, will kindly assist us, so that we may be enabled to open it at once.
> The attendances during the year at the two Medical Missions have been 4990, but many more have been present at the meetings.
> We are very much indebted to those of our friends who have been so untiring and constant in their help at our Medical Missions, and our Mothers' Meetings; and also to Dr. Gason, who gives his services gratuitously in Trastevere, and undertakes the entire charge of the little Hospital, which is in connection with our work there.

The report gives many cases of great interest in which this work has been blessed of God. One of the evangelists tells this story:—

> Passing near the Pantheon, I received a small printed notice of some new shop being opened. Looking in the face of the giver, I recognised one, who, many years ago, had been a sacristano in one of the large Roman Catholic churches. He took the malarial fever, was ill for many months in extreme misery, and abandoned by the priests. After being at the public hospital, he one day came to our meetings, and there heard of the Medical Mission, to which he was invited. He attended for some weeks, and received much benefit. After his recovery, I lost sight of him for a while, so my delight was great to see him again, and still more to see the change in his manners and dress. He had commenced by selling journals, the Signora having given him the first franc. He has now his regular families to whom he takes the journals daily, and so earns an honest living, without, as he says, being obliged to serve the priests.

As Mr. Wall's annual report will shortly appear, I wait till then for further reference to his experiences.

A STORY OF THE EARTHQUAKE.

Dr. Comandi told me in Florence that he had read in the Fiera Mosca, a Florence newspaper, a paragraph to this effect. The writer was not a believer in miracles, but, as a journalist, it was his duty to record events that came to his knowledge:—In one of the towns in the Riviera a young lady, Miss M——, was in her room, when the femme-de-chambre rushed in, and begged her to come away from the house, as there was great danger in remaining in it. Miss M—— fell on her knees and prayed. The maid again besought her to leave the house. She replied, "No, she would remain there, and pray her heavenly Father to preserve the hotel and all that were in it." The result was that the hotel remained uninjured, though there were ruins all around it. I believe it was the Hotel Westminster, at Mentone. I should be very glad to know whether this story can be authenticated.

EAST-END EMIGRATION FUND.—Particularly bright and hopeful is the report just issued by the committee of this fund. In four years over two thousand persons have been removed from the squalor and moral unhealthiness of East London, to lands where there are work and plenty for every willing hand. The thought of so many persons thus permanently benefited, settled in comfortable homes, from which they write earnest letters of advice to friends to come out to them, cannot fail to exert a stimulus upon all who desire to relieve those in distress in this country. The report of cases visited by Captain Hamilton during a recent journey is most encouraging as to the position and prospects of those who have been transferred from streets and alleys where they were "cabin'd, cribb'd, confined," and wretched, to fields of labour where there is plenty of room for themselves and their children. The committee last year sent out three hundred and sixty-six persons, providing in the majority of cases about half the passage money, and they are most anxious now to send out as early as possible this spring the many who, by the advice of friends already there, are anxious to go out. All communications should be addressed to the Hon. Secretaries, 31, Mile End-road, E.

For the Young.

JACK'S VICTORY.

Miss Verity's Bible-class for boys was held on Sunday afternoons, in a room set apart for it in the lady's own house near the village of Kirkfield. It was pleasant, on fine days, to see the boys gathering together, each with a Bible in his hand, at the gate of the avenue leading to the house. They would then walk steadily up to the house, and enter by a side-door, as arranged for them, go at once to their class-room, and be ready for their teacher at the time appointed for the lesson. On the table they always found a supply of books and magazines for Sunday reading, The British Workman, with its capital pictures, being one of the favourites. As we all know, boys are restless creatures, and very ready to get into mischief. It was well to provide them with pleasant reading and pictures, to avoid the noisy talking and scuffling they seemed to enjoy, when left to their own way of passing the time.

They would sometimes arrive at the house half an hour before the time fixed for the lesson; there always seemed a great uncertainty about the time of day by the village clocks. Perhaps, also, it was a real affection for Miss Verity and her teaching which made them fear to be late. She on her part was very fond of her Sunday pupils, knew them all in their own homes, and was looked upon as a friend by each. Her aim in teaching the boys was to make them love their Bibles as God's own Word, to be their guide through life, and with its precious promises to those who know the Lord Jesus as their Saviour, pointing to a bright hereafter. Of many of the boys it could be said they had chosen the good part; were young soldiers in the army of the Church on earth, with Christ as the Captain of their salvation. The Scripture lessons which interested them most were generally those of the triumph of good over evil. The story of David had a special charm for them, and their teacher tried to impress upon them how that it was only with the Lord's help, and in his strength, David was able to do such great things.

The subject of the lesson one day being the passage of the Israelites over the Red Sea, with Pharaoh and his army in pursuit, when they reached the point where the Israelites get safely over, and their enemies are drowned, the boys gave a loud "Hurrah!" With such a lively set of scholars Miss Verity felt it a blessing to have them in a room by themselves, and not in a class-room with others. At times the singing of favourite hymns was so very hearty and vigorous, that the notes of such as "Hold the Fort" could be heard in the furthest corner of the garden. It has been said of some of the boys in this class that they were soldiers in Christ's army, and had given themselves into his keeping. How greatly their teacher longed that this might become true of all!

Among the youngest members of the class were two brothers, Henry and Jack Campbell. Their mother was a widow, and she had also a little daughter called Elsie. The father had died soon after Elsie was born. From that time Mrs. Campbell had, indeed, a struggle to earn money to keep her little ones in food and clothing. She was a woman of much prayer and strong faith. God raised up many kind friends for her, and she was never tired of telling of his goodness. The eldest boy, Henry, grew up a great comfort to his mother. As a child he gave his heart to the Saviour, and at the age of fourteen was a fine, manly little fellow. He had then just left school, and was beginning to earn a little money. Jack was very like his brother in appearance, with the same large grey eyes, but the two boys were very different in character. Jack was idle and mischievous, seldom prepared with his lessons at school, and often found trying to make other boys as idle and inattentive as he was himself. Still he was warm-hearted and affectionate, and his mother and teachers tried to be patient and hopeful about him, praying for God's Holy Spirit to touch his heart.

One Sunday afternoon his behaviour in the class was so mischievous and disturbing to the other boys that Miss Verity stopped the lesson, looked gravely at Jack, and said, "You must leave the class at once. Go home now, and do not return next Sunday, unless you can behave well." For a moment Jack looked surprised; then, snatching up his cap, marched quickly out of the room, slamming the door behind him. Such a dismissal from the class had never taken place before; the boys seemed awed into unusual quietness for the rest of the time. Miss Verity sympathised with Henry's evident distress on his brother's account, and knew he would do all he could to bring Jack to a right mind.

The little offender was not forgotten in prayer that week, and on the Sunday following Jack came to the class looking much subdued, and several times his eyes filled with tears. When the lesson for the day was over, Miss Verity asked the two brothers to remain after the others had left. Not many words were spoken, but Jack stammered out, "Please forgive me; I've asked God to forgive me, and I want to be a soldier in Christ's army." The teacher rejoiced in heart, and, kneeling down with the boys, gave God thanks for the victory.

All this happened some years ago. The Bible-class is no longer carried on by Miss Verity, as she has left the neighbourhood. Still she knows, by loving letters received from Jack Campbell (which, however, is not his real name), that he continues faithful, and is a good son and brother in his home-life. He looks back with thankfulness to the time when he gave his heart to Christ, and, through the Holy Spirit's power, gained the victory. Greta.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, March 27, Luke xx. 19—36; Monday, March 28, Luke xx. 36—47; Tuesday, March 29, Luke xxi. 1—13; Wednesday, March 30, Luke xxi. 14—24; Thursday, March 31, Luke xxi. 25—38; Friday, April 1, Luke xxii. 1—13; Saturday, April 2, Luke xxii. 14—23.

A TIME-HONOURED SCHOOL.—The Committee of the Ragged-school Union have contributed £100 towards the re-building of the venerable school in Castle-yard, Holland-street, where for eighty-five years a devoted Christian work has been carried on among the poorest children of Southwark. Previous to voting the grant the school was visited by a deputation from the Union. Great interest was taken in the inspection of the building, as it is one of the very first Sabbath-schools established in London, and the reputed birthplace of the great Ragged-school movement. The hon. sec. is Mr. Harry Ebdon, 44, Richmond-terrace, Clapham-road, S.W.

STAR VILLA ORPHAN HOME.—This Home, originated five years ago by Mrs. Henry W. Willis, is conducted upon the family system, its aim being to rescue friendless orphans or other destitute children of tender age, and, whilst giving them a Christian education, to train them as domestic servants. A few months ago one delicate little boy was adopted by a kind-hearted Christian couple, and thus made room for one more to be admitted. Unfortunately, whooping cough of a very violent nature has just broken out among the children in this Institution, and this, doubtless, will lead to an increased manifestation of sympathy with the work, and those who have to conduct it, during a period of so much trial. The Home is at Napier-road, New Brompton, Kent.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. CONVENTION.—This Convention of Delegates from the Sunday-schools of the United States and British American Provinces is fixed to be held in Chicago on June 1, 2, and 3. Reports from the States and from foreign lands will be received, and addresses given on general subjects connected with Sunday-school work. The following is an outline of the programme: (1) Ingathering, or the Sunday-school Missionary and Mission-work; (2) Upbuilding, or the work of Sunday-school Instruction; (3) Uniting, or the Work of Sunday-school Organisation. It is hoped, if possible, to make the work truly international, as the Y.M.C.A. work is, and to consider the question of holding a European Convention in 1888 or 1889. One of the secretaries of the London Sunday-school Union has promised to attend, and others from this country and France are expected. Communications in reference to arrangements for reception, &c., should be addressed to Mr. J. M. Hitchcock, secretary of Committee of Arrangements, 148, Madison-street, Chicago.

*JOTTINGS FROM JAIL.

This volume of notes and papers on prison matters from the pen of one of our most experienced Jail Chaplains, Rev. J. W. Horsley, will prove deeply interesting to the many who sympathise with efforts on behalf of the criminal classes, and who desire to do something towards lessening those evils which are so potential in developing and fostering crime. As the chaplain of Clerkenwell House of Detention, Mr. Horsley has had a great and varied experience of criminals of all classes, and there are few men better qualified to deal with questions affecting criminals and crime. The chapter entitled "Prison Notes" is extremely valuable. Consisting as it does of a large number of extracts from a journal, it goes over very wide ground, and each paragraph is suggestive of lessons, many of which might with advantage be taken to heart by our statesmen and politicians.

To the temperance reformer much of the information given throughout these notes would prove very useful, for they contain strong direct and indirect testimony against the evil of intemperance: direct where the author gives illustrations of the injurious effect of public-houses, or, as he terms them, "public curses;" indirect where he almost unconsciously gives evidence of a negative kind, as for instance when in dealing with the question of suicide and its relative prevalence in European countries, he quotes Dr. Morselli's statement, that the reason Norway is the only country which does not show an increase proportionate to the increased population is the severe legislation of the last twenty years against drunkenness, and the state restriction in Norway of the sale of alcohol.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Horsley lays more stress upon environment than upon heredity, recognising the painful fact that numbers go wrong "because they have never been fitted to go right," and urging that from Reformatory and Industrial Schools comes the cry, "If the lads or lasses have no homes or friends they will probably do well." In illustration of this it is stated that from one large reformatory, Feltham, 23 per cent. of the lads who go home are re-convicted, but only 5 per cent. of those who are otherwise provided for.

The chapters on "The duty of the Church towards criminals," "Why are our prisons failures?" "Workhouse or Prison," "Premature Marriages," and "Atheism in Prison," are singularly interesting; but perhaps the one on "Our children and our prisons" is most valuable, as certainly it is most encouraging. Cutting off the supplies assuredly is the best method of reducing the number of criminals, and it is pleasant to find Mr. Horsley recognising the better training of the young as one of the most effective agencies in bringing about that reduction.

Although there is much in this volume of an encouraging nature there is much also that is extremely painful and sad, for it is impossible to read of the cases to which Mr. Horsley refers on almost every page without feeling that in many instances the criminal was one who scarcely had a chance; defective education, lack of moral training, vile surroundings, and the evil example of parents, all rendered the upward path almost impossible. The thoughtful reader will rise from the perusal of the book with a feeling of intense pity for those black sheep who war against society and for whom society has done so little save in the way of punishment. That our modern preventive work is being successful is easy to see, but that it should still be so limited both as regards workers and means is not creditable to the age, and we shall hope that Mr. Horsley's deeply interesting contribution to the literature of the jail and its occupants, will go far to increase the number of those who are trying to save the child from becoming a criminal, and to rescue the criminal from his evil and sorrowful ways.

SOUTHEND.—A branch of the Railway Mission has been established in this watering-place.

THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY have secured as their lecturers this year at the Hall of Science (the headquarters of "Freethinkers and Secularists") Rev. Dr. S. Macfarlane, on "Cannibalism, Christianity, and Civilisation;" Rev. J. J. Lias, on "Is there a God?;" Mr. W. Carruthers, F.R.S., on "Evolution;" Sir Charles Wilson, F.R.S., on "The Land and the Book." In no other place in London can so many opponents of Christianity be addressed.

BUNYAN AND DANCING.*

By Dr. ALEX. WHYTE, Edinburgh.

Scrupulosity and tenderness of conscience made themselves manifest in Bunyan as soon as religion laid hold of him. From early boyhood he had delighted in bell-ringing, but he now felt that "such practice was but vain." Conscientious scruples should always be honoured. Whenever the Church is in earnest, she is scrupulous. The world laughs at such tenderness of conscience, and calls it by hard names. The Methodists in Oxford, and the Pietists in Germany, had to endure the persecution of mockery. It is fashionable in some quarters, such as the pages of the falling courtier who wrote "Hudibras," and the columns of The Saturday Review, to sneer at Puritanism; but we need not trouble ourselves about sneers from such quarters. To know the company we are in, we have but to read Professor Masson's Industrious Life of Milton, Milton's poetry, and Lucy Hutcheson's tender and gracious biography of her husband. Learn from the lessons taught in the lives of the heroes of those days to prefer your conscience to your tastes, likings, and emoluments. Such a preference is an infallible mark of true religion.

Bunyan gave up dancing after a year's hard struggle. It is evident that he loved the amusement dearly. I sometimes wonder whether Bunyan got his wife at any of the Elstow dancing parties. I do not think he did. Men are not so foolish as to go there in search of a wife. When they want a dance, they go to your pleasure-loving daughters, but when they wish a companion for the fireside, they seek for her among the Sabbath-school teachers. Great issues turn on apparently small matters: if Bunyan had quenched his conscientious scruples about dancing, he might have prostituted his genius by writing plays for the England of Charles II., and we should have had no "Pilgrim's Progress." But he held with conscience, and it carried the day.

Dancing raises a debatable point. It seems to stand between right and wrong, on more or less neutral ground. What attitude should Christians take up in relation to it? Paul, one of the largest, sanest, richest minds that ever dealt with ethical problems, laid down a principle which should guide us. His principle was, What is lawful for me may be an injury to my neighbour. Acting on that principle may narrow my Christian and intellectual liberty, but in following it a new and far nobler law emerges—the law of Christian sympathy. If I see my brethren stagger or fall by what is harmless to me, I am bound, for the sake of my influence over them, to make a sacrifice for their good. The compensations for such sacrifices are an enlarged heart and a quiet conscience. Paul stood up boldly and fearlessly for Christian liberty, but when he came to Corinth, and saw the state of matters there, he said in effect, Perish Christian liberty, and let Christian charity reign! If you are Christians, this principle should settle debatable questions for you.

There is also a principle for humanity in general. Every man has got a conscience, or a remnant of one. It is his duty to be guided by it. He that doeth anything, doubting that it is right, is condemned in that thing. He is guilty before God. Conscience shook her head. You said, "I'll do it, in spite of your shaking of your head." Conscience replied, "You may do it, but you and I will meet at the Judgment Throne." And even now you have restless nights and an uneasy conscience. He that doubteth about going to the theatre, and goeth, gives the devil the benefit of the doubt, because he went in the teeth of conscience. This principle should rule life. Sanderson, the celebrated casuist, is bold enough to declare, "Even an erroneous conscience binds you." What conscience says is God's voice speaking to you. A thing may appear harmless in itself, but if a father's teaching or a neighbour's hurt has made it seem wrong, it is wrong for you.

This scythe, sharp and strong, should cut down a thicket of sophistry. People cling to the theatre and ball-room, defending themselves with sophistical arguments. Apply this principle to your arguments, and they are bowled over. Even Seneca said, "Let us satisfy conscience." If a heathen philosopher could go so far, surely Christian office-bearers and communicants can travel the same distance! Satisfy conscience. Not all the plays of London, or the balls of Edinburgh, can give you happiness if you trample on conscience. Satisfy conscience, and let pleasure take its chance.

Do you ask me what my opinions about dancing and the theatres are? They are of tremendous importance to me, but they are of no importance to you. What is God's opinion? What is your own? These are the questions you have to face. What does Christ say? He was not narrow-minded, yet He said, "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off; if thy foot offend thee, cut it off; if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out——" Finish the quotation on your knees to-night.

ALL-DAY MEETING, NEWCASTLE.

The thirteenth annual all-day meeting of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Noon-day Prayer Meeting was held on Thursday last at the Central Hall. The congregations were excellent throughout.

At noon the chair was taken by Rev. J. C. Bruce, LL.D. (Presbyterian), prayer being offered by Rev. S. T. Nicholson (Methodist New Connexion). The venerable chairman opened the discussion with a fervent discourse on "The Privilege of United Prayer." Several of the friends present engaged in prayer.

At one o'clock the chair was taken for the remainder of the afternoon sitting by Rev. Richard Leitch (Presbyterian). The subject of the "Conversion of the Young" was introduced by Rev. G. S. Hornby (Methodist New Connexion), who said that they were often sceptical as to a child being capable of conversion; he strongly believed that the moment the child was capable of knowing that God loved him with the intensity of a mother's love, that moment he was capable of conversion. In the course of the afternoon discussion Rev. J. G. Train (Presbyterian), Hull, thought they did not sufficiently value the influence of family worship in this respect. The truth should also be taught so as to meet the understandings and faculties of wonder in young children.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, London, introduced the subject of "Salvation and Service," in an address of much force and feeling. If Christians truly comprehended that they are the sons and daughters of God, ministers would preach with new power, and more to the awakening of their people to a sense of the duties of their heritage.

Rev. J. K. Nuttall (Congregational), Sunderland, delivered a practical, and in many respects striking, address on "The Sunday-school and the Church." It was a great mistake to consider these two institutions as being separate and different, as, with every other form and aspect of Christian effort, the church embraced the Sunday-school, over which it should exercise a wise, kindly, sympathetic sway. The church should select for superintendents and teachers its best qualified, most capable, and most spiritual members. An earnest discussion followed, in which Rev. H. J. Betts (Baptist) and others took part.

Dr. Bruce here gave an interesting account of the rise, progress, and results of the Newcastle noon-day prayer-meeting, instancing the Infirmary Singing-band of young ladies as one of the beneficent offshoots of the meeting.

Rev. J. G. Train introduced the topic of "Spiritual Development" in a vigorous address. They never could find a man's work, he said, greater than the man himself. It would seem that our times do not contribute much to the increase of spiritual vigour and strength. We should see less of spiritual deformity if we had more systematic reading of the Word, and more prayer—prayer that was a straining of the whole being, and therefore a means of development, as the body was developed in a gymnasium. A lively and interesting conversation followed, Revs. Jas. Cuthbertson (Wesleyan), Newcastle, J. S. Rae (Presbyterian), Sunderland, J. A. Watt (Presbyterian), Gateshead, and Mr. Joseph Spraggon, of Sunderland, taking part.

After tea, the chair was taken by Rev. James Cuthbertson. Rev. C. P. Sherman (Church of England) delivered a most interesting address on "The Lord's Work in Syria and the East," in which he gave graphic accounts of the trials and dangers of missionary work amongst a mixed population in Palestine and Syria. He also described some unexpected successes among inquiring Sheikhs and anxious Jews.

Rev. Richard Leitch next delivered an earnest address on the "Present Needs of the Church of Christ," in which he contended that the present want of the Church was a more thorough study of the Bible, and a fuller realisation of the personality, presence, and power of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. Robert Brown (Presbyterian) presiding during the closing hour, Rev. James Cuthbertson opened with a robust address on "Some Aspects of Bible Holiness." He said, that in the Bible there is an ideal perfection and completeness of character set before us as a standard of attainment, in the practical and experimental aspects of which there are three stages—childhood, youth, and manhood or maturity. In the after discussion, Messrs. Sherman, Leitch, Harris, and France took part.

Prayer by Mr. H. Armstrong, Y.M.C.A., and the singing of the doxology, brought an interesting season to a close at nine o'clock.

Medical Talk at Exeter Hall.

One of these much-needed "Talks" was delivered in Exeter Hall on Tuesday, last week, by Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness. Despite the snow-storm, about two thousand men assembled to hear the eloquent words addressed to them by the young doctor. In some introductory remarks Dr. Heywood Smith (chairman) said he could, from his experience as a physician, fully testify to the miseries that result from evil habits.

The earnest and solemn narrations of Dr. Guinness visibly affected many in his audience. He quoted, amid approving applause, Sir James Paget's honourable repudiation of the necessity of vice: "I would as soon counsel theft or any other breach of the ten commandments." He relieved the necessary painfulness of the subject, in many of its aspects, by bursts of impassioned rhetoric, and the exhortation to live a pure and manly, rather than an ignoble and degraded, life.

DUBLIN PRISON-GATE MISSION.—The annual meeting of this—probably the most blessed charity in the city—was held on Saturday week in Metropolitan Hall, Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, presiding. The report showed that the ladies who volunteer for the work attend the gate of Grangegorman Prison twice each day, except Sunday, and invite the women as they are discharged to the shelter of the Home. In this way during the year 456 were received. Work is given them according to their ability, and the forty employed in the laundry earned £954. In the workroom there was an attendance of sixty to seventy-five, and the money received was £225. On new buildings, necessary for the increasing usefulness of the Institution, £400 was spent. It has now been ten years in operation.—Methodist Recorder.

IRISH SOCIETY.—In recent years the operations of this Society have been considerably enlarged. The old Achill Mission has been added, with its three churches, four schools, two clergymen, and three Scripture-readers. At the urgent request of Christian friends in England, the Society organised a Mission to the Irish population of Liverpool in 1881, and in 1886 extended the effort to Manchester. Those Lancashire Missions have been successful beyond all expectation. The Bishop of Liverpool has consented to ordain an Irish-speaking minister for the work. Nearly five hundred Irish Roman Catholics are receiving Scriptural instruction in Lancashire. I shall thankfully welcome communications from all who are anxious to help in the work.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY,
56, Paternoster Row, London.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S JUBILEE.—MEMORIAL HOME for Homeless & Destitute BOYS.

The Committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children have for several years been anxiously waiting to secure a spot where they could ERECT a NEW HOME for DESTITUTE BOYS.

They have now secured a very desirable Site for this New Building on the Shaftesbury-avenue, the new thoroughfare leading from New Oxford-street to Piccadilly-circus.

This new building will be—

1. For the Reception and Training of about One Hundred Homeless and Destitute Boys.
2. A Home for Thirty-five Working Boys.
3. A Club and Institute for Old Boys who have been trained in the Homes of the Society, where their moral, physical, and religious welfare may be watched over.
4. And Offices where the whole of the Work for the Society will be carried on.

It is proposed to erect this New Building as a JUBILEE MEMORIAL to her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria on behalf of Homeless and Destitute Boys.

Among the many Memorials that will be set up as evidences of the gratitude of the people of this nation to Almighty God for the long and prosperous reign of our beloved Queen, and as evidencing the love and esteem in which Her Majesty is held, the Committee venture to assert that there will be no Memorial more practical than the building about to be erected

For the Temporal, Moral, and Religious Welfare of the Homeless and Destitute Boys of London.

It is estimated that this New Building will cost about £10,000, and towards raising this sum a very EARNEST APPEAL is MADE.

The Committee have every confidence that the Appeal will be liberally responded to, and that the amount required will be forthcoming before the Building is completed.

Early in the Spring the Foundation Stone will be laid.

CONTRIBUTIONS are very earnestly SOLICITED, and will be thankfully received by the President, the Earl of Jersey; the Treasurer, W. E. Hubbard, Esq., 4, St. Helen's-place, City; the London and Westminster Bank, 214, High Holborn; and by the Secretary,

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

"AS WELL FOR THE BODY AS THE SOUL."

Until five years ago upwards of 12,000 smacksmen toiled in the North Sea at all seasons, in all weathers, in constant danger, and not only cut off from the joys and comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid. To-day seven Mission vessels cruise with the fleets (running the same risks, exposed to the same furious gales as the trawlers themselves) in order—

1. That injuries and illness may receive prompt help and healing.
2. That true friends may supplant and banish from the fleets that enemy of the English smacksmen, that pest of the North Sea—the foreign coper, or floating grog shop.
3. That dull and monotonous lives may be cheered and brightened by their presence and ministry.

☞ During the year 1886, more than 3,000 cases of sickness and accidents have been successfully treated in the Dispensary on board the various Mission vessels.

THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH" says:—

"The Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen has been instrumental in making the fishing-grounds too hot for those abominable purveyors of fiery spirit and bad tobacco—the Dutch copers. It cares for the men, and has its reward in their love and gratitude."

CASE near ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH.—RIGHT LUNG DISEASED.

The patient's name is MRS. ELIZABETH SHARPE, GROCER, of IBSTOCK, ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH. Her illness commenced with pleurisy, attended with great debility. This was followed by an exceedingly troublesome Cough, difficult expectoration, pains in the side, swellings of the ankles. The physician who was then called in confirmed the previous medical opinions, and pronounced her right lung to be affected. Seeing an account of my treatment in The Christian Age, she sent me a full statement of her case, and commenced, according to my advice, immediately.

In a few weeks she reported, "Cough and pains relieved," and a "gain of three pounds in weight." In the third month of her being under my treatment, she had a little daughter, and her doctor's report of her progress was very hopeful. After this she continued with my medicine. Swelling of the throat, from weakness, was relieved by outward applications.

The patient gradually left off the medicine, after a total period of fifteen months; and writing me two months after so doing, she says:—"I steadily persevered according to your instructions. My friends say I am a miracle. You have been the means, in God's hands, of restoring my life. I am as well now as ever I was, and my little daughter (born while under your treatment) is a very healthy child. Make whatever use you please of this.—Yours gratefully," &c.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL, LONDON, and SYDNEY, N.S.W.,

Y.W.C.A. and FOREIGN MISSIONS.

A CONFERENCE on the deepening of spiritual life in relation to foreign missions was held at Morley Halls (Y.W.C.A.), 316, Regent-street, on March 15 and 16. The object of the meetings was not so much to report the work done by various Societies as to bring Christians into fellowship with God in his love to the world.

On Tuesday afternoon Rev. G. Karney made thankful allusion to a proposed united committee of the four chief Zenana Societies, as a sign of the breaking down of all conventionalities, to make room for the increased spread of the Gospel. Mr. H. F. Bowker and Mr. Spencer Walton urged the need of the outgoing of the Christ-life in us, as the result of practical consecration. Mr. C . H. Judd, after pressing the definite needs of China, whose millions have cost us so few tears, brought home the fact that the people of God, like Paul, were "chosen," not merely to be saved, but "to bear his name before the Gentiles," and "to turn them from darkness to light."

In the evening Mr. Scott Moncrieff, who took the chair, spoke of the two "Women's Associations" of the New Testament; the women who followed our Lord, ministering unto Him, "representing the life of contemplative service; and the "women who laboured in the Gospel" with Paul, showing the life of action in the power of Pentecost. "Where art thou?" is God's first question; "Where is thy brother?" the second. Mr. Judd showed that God would train and fit the servants He calls out. Moses was prepared, not by the learning of the Egyptians, but by the forty years in the desert with God. The rod, becoming the rod of God after being cut off from its roots below and stripped of its branches above, was strikingly used as a figure of those whom He can use if content to be "delivered unto death," "that the life may be manifest." Mr. Spencer Walton compared the conduct of many to that of the four lepers, who went from tent to tent storing treasure, and forgetting the starving city. The fact of knowledge makes us debtors, and he urged his hearers to yield themselves definitely to God, as ready to go to his work abroad if He should call them. After a solemn time of prayer, hand after hand was held up as a token that this step had been taken.

On Wednesday morning Mrs. Grattan Guinness (who took the chair) marshalled before her audience a terrible array of facts and figures to demonstrate the monstrous disproportion of religious privileges and opportunities enjoyed by English women and by their sisters in other lands—facts which she hoped would grip like a vice till they moulded the empty, useless, idle lives of some Christians into practical shape for the spread of Christ's kingdom; not merely to undertake home mission work to occupy spare hours, but as the absorbing aim of life. Miss Faulkener spoke of the motive and fitness for missionary work, and the strength and encouragement that lie in the fact that every Christian was a name-bearer, saved by God, to "make Himself an everlasting name," and sent forth to bear his name at home and abroad; to be a manifestation of all that is enfolded in that name of personality and of power. Mrs. Pigott gave some practical details of a missionary's life in China, showing it was no romance, but a hand-to-hand conflict with the special evils of heathenism, added to the same temptations and difficulties which meet us at home.

The afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson. Dr. Weitbrecht spoke of the wonderful doors opening to women in India and Japan, and said that by their ministry, the monster of unbelief was no longer being "slain through its brain," but through the heart. Everybody, he said, should know how the war goes. Christian people know the latest fashion, sometimes the latest scandal; but if asked the latest great event in the kingdom of God, they cannot reply. Mr. Glenny spoke of the vast field of labour for women in the North African Mission. "Why do you talk to us; why not to the cows?" ask the poor ignorant women, within three days' journey from the heart of Christendom. He urged that though we were not bound to go, we were bound to offer ourselves to the Lord, trusting Him to keep us at home if wanted here. Mr. Radcliffe closed the meeting with the hope of such a stir arising as should swamp all existing Societies with volunteers, and cast us upon God. This might seem impractical, but Gideon was very practical when he began with his 30,000 men, and before God's victory was achieved he had to disband them after a very unpractical fashion, and to take them out, like children, with their pitchers and trumpets, in a most unpractical way. He urged all to deal with their own heart's idols, and to claim from God, then and there, willingness to be made willing to obey.

Between the afternoon and evenings meetings groups of eager listeners gathered round Mrs. Pigott, Mr. Glenny, and Dr. Weitbrecht to glean further information as to the details of work in various parts of the earth; and impromptu and informal meetings for consecration and prayer, and discussion of home service for the foreign mission field, were organised by Mr. Spencer Walton and others. The conference closed with a meeting, presided over by Mr. Eugene Stock, who showed Bishop Hannington's diary, and other missionary trophies. He spoke of the three facts recorded of Mary, the woman of whom Jesus said, "she hath done what she could." (1) She sat at his feet to hear Him; (2) When the Master called for her "she arose quickly, and came unto Him;" (3) She gave her best when she poured the spikenard over Him, although this outpouring of her love puzzled many. Rev. J. G. Gregson spoke of full surrender to God, that He might will in us, and work in us, as the necessary qualifications for the Lord's witnesses in every part of the earth, near or far. Rev. P. Mackay and General Took testified to the value of missionary work, and Mr. Radcliffe and Mr. Spencer Walton made closing appeals to fuller personal consecration and deeper personal sympathy in the world-wide work of winning souls. DR. GUINNESS AT DEVIZES.

THE eight days' mission conducted recently at Devizes by Dr. H. G. Guinness, has proved every way remarkable, and many pronounce it the most successful ever held in the town. His now well-known powers as an evangelist have been employed with telling effect in warning men to flee from the wrath to come, and in showing forth the love of God in Christ Jesus. The Town Hall growing far too small for the numbers who attended, the meetings were held in the Corn Exchange, and the interest increased every evening. The "talk" to men only will not be forgotten by those (over a thousand) who listened to his earnest and manly utterances, which should sound the death-knell of those vices which with such eloquence he bids all shun.

The Gospel meetings have been seasons of much heart-searching testimony, the address on 'Ailing Christians" being especially good. His last address conveyed a solemn warning not to despise the message of salvation. Opportunity was found on one afternoon for a lecture on "Missionary Work," illustrated by diagrams, that of the East London Training Institute being also referred to. The union of all denominations was a marked feature of the mission.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE, in response to the invitation of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, delivered four addresses to Christians, on "The Deepening of the Spiritual Life," in Free St. George's Church (Rev. Dr. Whyte's), March 8th to 11th. In spite of the severe weather, the large church was filled each night with eager listeners. In addition to the address, Mr. Pearse read a passage of Scripture at each meeting, and expounded as he read. We hope to give one of these expositions in our next issue.

EVANGELISATION IN BELFAST.

UNITED meetings in connection with Fisherwick-place and Albert-street churches, have been held during the last five weeks in the former church. The meetings have been conducted by the pastors, Rev. H. M. Williamson, and Rev. Henry Montgomery. From night to night, and week to week, the attendances have increased, and the interest has deepened. Many anxious inquirers have remained at the close of the meetings, and very many have professed conversion to God. Numbers of the poorest people of the adjoining districts have been brought in by Christian workers, and not a few are now rejoicing in a knowledge of the Saviour. The awakening continues to spread, and is being felt over the town.

On Wednesday evening, last week, a thanksgiving service was held, when those who believed they had been brought to Christ during the meetings were requested to stand up. Over all parts of the crowded church men and women, old and young, started to their feet, a large number thus testifying to their conversion. Many believers have been greatly refreshed. It has been arranged to continue the meetings for some time longer.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING.

Suggested by the scenes witnessed nightly in Fisherwick-place, Belfast, during the last few weeks.

Glory to the God of love!
Praise on earth, and heaven above!
Light is breaking, souls are waking;
Lo, the lifeless bones are shaking!
Welcome glad and glorious days;
    Hallelujah!
Brothers, sisters, rise and praise!

Now at last our longing eyes
Brighten with a sweet surprise;
Grace abounding, songs resounding;
New-born souls, the Cross surrounding,
View the Lamb with tearful gaze.
    Hallelujah!
Thine, O Lord, be all the praise!

See the mountains melt and flow;
Stoutest hearts by grace brought low;
Sin confessing, peace possessing,
Wondering at the wealth of blessing;
Loathing now their sinful ways.
    Hallelujah!
For the ransomed souls give praise.

Lo, the captive exiles come:
Prodigals are hastening home
Hunger-driven—all forgiven—
Banqueting on joys of heaven!
Matchless love our God displays.
    Hallelujah!
Father, thine th' adoring praise!

"More to follow," more and more,
Through this "great effectual door;"
Truth prevailing, sinners quailing,
Blood of Christ for peace availing;
Many a soul repenting prays.
    Hallelujah!
To the reigning Lamb give praise.

Kindling with the altar fire,
Consecrated hearts aspire;
Happy token! bonds lie broken;
"All for Christ," the vow is spoken,
Love constrains; the soul obeys.
    Hallelujah!
Holy Spirit, thine the praise!

Let thy world-wide kingdom come;
Tune the hearts that yet are dumb:
Lord of glory, let the story
Of thy love melt young and hoary;
Conquer till the nations raise
    Hallelujah!
While the skies resound thy praise.

W. MAXWELL.

GOD'S LOAF has no undercrust. Christ knew this when He taught us to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."—Rev. Walter J. Mathams

A HOME OF REST for ministers and Christian workers has been established at St. Leonard's, with the view of giving home comforts and Christian society to tired labourers in the Gospel field. Particulars may be had from Mrs. Brett, Fern Lea, Pevensey-road, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Henry Bradford, Union Church, Northampton.

We greatly regret to state that Richard Weaver's medical adviser writes that, after having repeatedly attended him, he has formed the opinion that it is very desirable he should have at least two years' complete rest.

It is stated that English will, next year, be officially adopted as the second language to be taught in the schools of Japan. The immense significance of this fact in connection with mission work cannot possibly be over-estimated.

We regret that through inadvertence we stated in our last issue that "The War Song of the Church" was by The Late Rev. W. Poole Balfern. This has naturally caused concern to many of Mr. Balfern's friends, and he wishes to assure them that he is "still here."

Mr. Thomas Newberry, of Weston-Super-Mare, well known for his deep Bible research, will give six addresses, at Mildmay Conference Hall, on the Scripture lessons from the Temple of Solomon, illustrated by his beautiful Model of the Temple, on Thursdays, April 14 and 21; Saturdays, April 16 and 23; Tuesdays, April 19 and 26, at 11 o'clock a.m.

A Protestant contemporary deplores that "Irish Dissent in all its forms is a stupendous and awfully significant fact." In connection with this, however, it is interesting to note that the Presbyterian body in the sister island now comprises over 550 congregations with 626 ministers and more than 102,000 communicants. There are over 1000 Sabbath-schools, with nearly 9000 teachers, and an attendance of over 100,000 scholars. Last year's accounts show that the voluntary contributions reached nearly £157,000, including £16,395 for Missions. What is there that is "awful" about all this? Surely it is something to thank God for.

Rev. Charles F. Deems, D.D., President of the Institute of Christian Philosophy New York, has recently published a remarkable paper upon the labour troubles and the Sabbath law, the line of thought in which is a somewhat novel one. After urging that the Sabbath question has been so generally discussed from the religious side as to have diverted attention from its scientific importance, Dr. Deems argues that if we had no inspired books and no religious teaching whatever in regard to the Sabbath, scientific investigation would lead us to the detection of the fundamental law in the case; even acres of soil containing in themselves the "virtual Sabbatic requisition." The author asserts that there are many early breakdowns among Christian ministers who study and follow pastoral work regularly seven days per week. "Bodily health, prolonged capability to work and enjoy life, and long life itself," says Dr. Deems, "are all dependent upon having the equivalent of a seventh day of rest, the bishop and the atheist being equally amenable to this fundamental law of nature."

Applying this argument to the labour questions which are now assuming so much importance, Dr. Deems insists upon it that an employer or corporation that does not provide for a seventh day of rest acts suicidally, as the week's wages should enable the men to "observe the law of recuperation." The labourer, too, who violates the seventh-day law suffers by the consequent abnormal sanitary condition which results, and which "ordinarily shows itself in a demand for some artificial stimulant to make up for the lost rest." Hence "intemperance, in vast numbers of cases, is a natural physical result of a violation of the Sabbath law."

We commend these weighty arguments to the careful study of all who are interested in the preservation of the sanctity of the Lord's Day, and who have hitherto looked at the question only in its religious bearings. It cannot be too often stated that those who are labouring to secularise the Sabbath are the worst enemies of the working man.

We were very glad to see that the officers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals successfully interfered on behalf of the poor deer which was taken out in a box to Wimbledon, in order that certain "sportsmen" might participate in a proceeding which they call a "deer hunt." It is said that the brave huntsmen hooted, cracked their whips, yelled, and made all sorts of noises, but the tame animal stood still, licking the hands of a poor old woman who had patted it. Surely an end of this miserable sport draweth nigh when it has reached to such a despicable condition as this proceeding indicates.

There are few mistakes more serious than that of the political economist who declares that labour and the labourer are alike a commodity; in much of the mutual distrust and dislike between employer and employed, we are now reaping the fruit of the unholy fallacy. Rev. Thomas Hill, in an article on "The Social Separation of Classes," which appears in Eastward Ho, for February, looks at the matter from a Christian standpoint. We trust his admirable contribution will be read by thousands of employers of labour, who hitherto have been ignoring the responsibilities of our mutual humanity, or, if charitably disposed, have been under an impression that the giving of money can be a substitute for "personal neighbourhood" and service.

Mr. Goschen, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, is in trouble because the British public have drunk less than was expected of them. It is thought that the Excise will produce half a million below the estimate, owing to the diminished consumption of spirits and beer. That may be counted a serious matter by the keeper of the national purse, but who can tell what crimes and heart-breakings in thousands of homes have been prevented by this reduced traffic in strong drink?

Ominous rumours of war have lately reached us from the great military camps of Europe; but for the present they have become less pronounced. The words reported to have been spoken by the aged Emperor of Germany to M. de Lesseps, carry a promise of peace which cannot fail to have a reassuring effect:—

> I am an enemy of war. I will have no more of it. We shall not fight as long as I live, unless we are attacked; and I can assure you that my son shares my views.

In a time when some think that due regard is not accorded to parents and guardians by the younger generation, it may be well to notice that in the Life of the late Bishop Fraser, which has just been published, the chief reason given why he did not accept the bishopric of Calcutta was that he would be separated from his mother and aunt, who had found a home with him. This consideration in Dr. Fraser's mind had more weight than the handsome income he would have received. No wonder such a man gained the respect and love of all who knew him.

In Truth of Feb. 3, it was stated that the elevation of the Papal Nuncio at Paris, Monsignor di Rende, to the Sacred College will be an epoch in the pacific policy of Leo XIII., and in the modern history of the Papacy, Monsignor di Rende being the "favourite" for the Chair of St. Peter. The writer argues that, should Monsignor di Rende's succession be secured, the effect on English Catholicism will be enormous.

> He was sent over here years ago to study England and the English, and he made good use of his time. He is thoroughly behind the scenes, and if his bureau were ransacked at this moment it would be found to contain an instructive list of all the "episcopable" ecclesiastics in this country. Even now it is no secret that appointments to English bishoprics are influenced quite as much by the verdict of the Paris Nunciature as by the collective wisdom of their lordships of the Province of Westminster, who, of course, are always consulted pro formâ.

Of course, as the writer states, "the power of the Pope to construct the conclave which will elect his successor is no doubt great;" on the other hand, we must not forget that history has many proofs recorded of the failure of the cardinals to follow lines laid down for their guidance in the election, and instances are numerous of the rapidity with which a Pope's influence dies after him. Perhaps, if Monsignor di Rende were to read in Thomas Adolphus Trollope's remarkable work, "Paul the Pope and Paul the Friar," the deeply interesting chapter descriptive of a conclave for the election of a pope, he would not be by any means sanguine. If any of our readers care to know from a reliable source what a miserable piece of jobbery such an election is we would commend to them the perusal of the same portion of the masterly life of Fra Paola Sarpi.

The zeal with which Miss Octavia Hill carries on her commendable work of bringing pure air and cleanliness to the homes of the London poor, has received a new impulse. A friend has enabled her to purchase a piece of ground in Southwark, to be laid out as a public garden. But Miss Hill desires to build in connection with it, a public hall, which may serve as a free library and reading-room, and for recreative entertainments. Such popular places of innocent resort are almost unknown in the congested districts of the Metropolis, and we hope this project may be successfully accomplished.

We think the tenacity of life of our London Ragged Schools has scarcely received due recognition as a striking feature of Christian activity conducted by voluntary effort. They appear to possess a vitality unaffected by time. For eighty years the work has been carried on at Nelson-street, Camberwell, and the much-needed new buildings which were opened there last week by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts will enable it to be still more vigorously prosecuted in that very poor and congested district.

There remains much that may be done, however, by the judicious handling of the youth who escapes the meshes of the Ragged School, and joins the ranks of the "first offenders." It is satisfactory to note the reception given to Mr. Howard Vincent's Bill, which has passed through committee. Instead of passing sentence upon the young transgressor, the court may release him on probation with or without sureties, under certain conditions. If these are not observed he is liable to be called upon, or apprehended, to receive sentence and punishment. Such a method of treatment will doubtless have a salutary effect on many who would otherwise drift into the full-fledged life of a gaol bird.

Estimating the average loss caused by a single criminal life, even from the low standpoint of cost to the public purse, it is a matter of grave importance. Dr. Leone Levi, a high authority, puts it at one thousand pounds. We do not wish to be thought as advocating the State establishment of another religious organisation, but we may say that the sum of money morally due by the nation to the Ragged School Union for its preventive work must amount to a handsome figure.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor is at present in Scotland holding missionary meetings. Mr. Taylor, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and Mr. George Clarke are about to make a tour through Scotland (visiting Glasgow, Edinburgh, Helensburgh, Greenock, Perth, Dundee, Aberdeen, and Inverness), with the view of arousing among the churches a deeper interest in the claims of foreign missions.

Amongst the many calamities occasioned by the late earthquakes, the Scotch Church at Nice has been so injured as to necessitate the expenditure of nearly £300 upon its restoration. The ministrations of Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell have been largely blessed to visitors at this fashionable resort. We doubt not that friends who have worshipped there in time past will unite with those who were shielded by the mercy of God during the convulsion, in aiding to restore the building. It would be a suitable thankoffering for signal deliverance granted to many.

The details of a very pitiful story have recently come from Bombay. It illustrates, most forcibly, the character of that unhappy social habit among the Hindoos of forming matrimonial alliances between very young people. Rukmibhai, at eleven years of age, was affianced by her parents, without her consent, to a youth of nineteen. She grew up to womanhood, refined, educated, and with all the instincts of a lady. The youth was ignorant and indolent. By-and-by he demanded that she should assume the duties of his wife. She refused to acknowledge the engagement, and, after more than a year's litigation, the Supreme Court has decided against her. Unless she consents within a month she is to be sent to prison for six months.

The case has been brought before Parliament, and Sir J. Gorst replied on behalf of the Government, that—

He had no reason to doubt that the wife, as had been stated, was a lady of refinement, who had received a high English education, while her nominal husband was a labourer earning 10 rupees a month. The husband instituted a suit for institution or restitution of conjugal rights. The Court of First Instance held that the suit was not maintainable. This judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeal in March, 1886, and the case was remanded to the Court of First Instance for a decision on the merits. The decision of this Court appeared to have been now given in favour of the husband. How the decision of the Court is to be enforced, and what would be the consequence to the wife of disobeying its orders were questions of Indian law, upon which he must decline to give an opinion. But the wife might appeal to the Court of Appeal against the decision on the merits, and the two judgments of the Court of Appeal—that on the law and that on the merits, if given—might be reviewed by the Privy Council; while the case was thus still pending any action by the Government to influence courts of law in such matters would be premature.

To this unfortunate lady, our fellow subject, sympathy will flow from every British hearth; but what will it avail against that racial barrier, strengthened by society and religion, which surrounds her in our Indian Empire? If strength be given to her to go to prison, surely her self-sacrifice would not be in vain, in this jubilee year of a woman's rule. If our Queen and councillors could see their way to take some official step that would hasten the downfall of such an atrocious custom as infant marriage, India would have good cause to bless God for Her Majesty's reign.

Gifford Hall Mission.

Very encouraging anniversary gatherings have been held in connection with this Mission, which is situated in Gifford-street, Caledonian-road. On Sunday, March 13, the Sunday-school scholars were addressed by Rev. John Leal, at Offord-road Congregational Chapel in the morning. In the afternoon of the same day Miss Lydia Von Finkelstein delivered a very graphic address on "Easter in Jerusalem," at New-court Chapel, on behalf of the Mission; and on Sunday evening at Offord-road Chapel, Rev. Colmer B. Symes preached to senior scholars. All these meetings were well attended, and much appreciated.

On Thursday evening Mr. T. A. Denny presided at the twenty-fifth anniversary meeting. The report stated that amongst other operations carried on are Temperance Societies and Bands of Hope, a penny bank, a mothers' meeting, boot and coal clubs, a sick club, a gymnasium, a branch of the Children's Country Holiday Mission, a loan blanket club, and homes for aged poor. In the winter time an infants' play room and soup kitchen are provided, and during the year some 46,254 penny dinners and 21,671 free breakfasts were distributed amongst children, many of whom attend a neighbouring Board school. The meeting was addressed by the chairman, Mr. W. T. Paton, Rev. W. Mearns, Rev. J. Leal, Mr. E. W. Gates, Mr. H. F. Clarke, Mr. Benjamin Clarke and Mr. Hitjer (superintendents). Mr. Whittenbury, pastor of the Mission, presented to Mr. Benjamin Clarke, on behalf of a number of friends, a framed testimonial, in recognition of his twenty-five years' services as superintendent, and to Mrs. Clarke, a large portrait of her husband.

PLYMOUTH.—Midnight meetings for women have been held in Plymouth and Stonehouse. Some were eventually rescued. Other meetings will be held at Devonport. This is the eleventh annual visit of Mr. Christien to Plymouth in connection with this movement.

Rev. W. Haslam at Burton-on-Trent.

I had known Christ Church in its palmiest days, and had been associated with Mr. Haslam in three of his former missions there, but I had never seen anything in it like the sight that presented itself to my eyes as I entered the building on Tuesday morning, last week. The free seats were all filled with working men and women, while the rented pews of the middle aisle were tenanted by the more influential classes, numbers of whom had come to hear the veteran missioner deliver the morning address. I could scarcely believe my eyes as they fell on the faces of some who were present. In other days, I had known some before me as positively hating evangelical truth; but there they were, all mingled together, "high church," "low church," "broad church," and "no church;" and as attentive to the word preached as if feeling that life or death depended on their reception of the preacher's utterances.

I was shut out from Mrs. Haslam's meetings in St. George's Hall, in the afternoon, as these were for women only; but my lady friends who went had all the same tale to tell; there was blessing in the church, and blessing at the hall.

At night the church was crammed. I, with a burly foreman from Allsopp's, and two young women who came in rather late, found a seat on the pulpit steps. The sermon was thoroughly Haslamic. Ever and anon the hits that were made called forth a partly suppressed chorus of joyful ejaculations from souls that had recently been brought to Christ. On the last night of the mission I believe I counted from twelve to fifteen who rose to their feet as openly testifying that they, there and then, took Christ as a Saviour.

Miss Macpherson's Jubilee Party.

On Wednesday, last week, the Home of Industry was bright with a bonnie band of boyhood beaming with hope, and many of them with the blessing of the Lord that maketh rich and addeth no sorrow therewith.

During the reception time it was touching to see ladies from the far west and north and south of our great city draw out from the band their special case of rescue, and pour into the lad's ear a last message of loving injunction. It is a joy indeed to behold others becoming more definite in their interests of taking up a solitary destitute lad, giving him a Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, &c. And to us, who toil on, to know that a continuous stream of prayer follows that young life into the new land, is truly encouraging.

Much praise and prayer during the evening were offered, acknowledging the faithfulness of our God to this and all similar work on behalf of the young, and asking blessing upon this Jubilee party. Excellent situations are awaiting each one, where opportunities will be given of acquiring the knowledge of the climate and soil; and, if spared, the boys will be able to beat out into the North-West, to work out this skill in land of their own.

Every boy is visited yearly and reported. The scheme is one that the Government of Canada, through the Colonial Exhibition, has approved of, by sending to the Home of Industry a Diploma and a Medal. Those who follow in this work of emigrating children to Canada, should be careful, before placing out the children, to know whether the homes are suitable, and also to visit each child and see their surroundings, and whether the agreements made for the child's welfare are being fulfilled. A. McP.

IRELAND.—A meeting was held under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance in Dublin, on March 17, St. Patrick's Day, when prayer was offered on behalf of Ireland. Addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Wright and Rev. Samuel Prenter. The latter gentleman said that prayer unions would, he believed, be effectual as a means of bringing down blessing on their distracted country.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS.

The annual gathering of friends for praise and prayer in connection with the Homes for Working Girls in London, was held at Hyde House, Somerset-street, Portman-square, on Thursday afternoon last. Mr. John Shrimpton, the director of the Homes, presided, and in the course of a brief address said that in their eight houses, with 400 beds, over 1,800 young women were last year welcomed. The value of these Homes, to a large and deserving class, is inestimable. There they are safe and happy, and it is delightful to visit them in their sitting-rooms in the evening, and see how thorough is their enjoyment. There rest and peace await them when they leave their work, and there they are surrounded by the homelike and spiritual influences which form the greatest safeguards against the temptations to which they are exposed. How great these temptations are none can know but those who are brought much in contact with this class of young women. Hundreds are by the force of circumstances compelled to shift for themselves as best they can at an early age. Not a few of them have been accustomed to genteel homes, and the more refined a girl is the greater the temptations to which she is exposed, and the harder it is for her to battle for herself, and to endure the inevitable hardships of her lot.

In London there are thousands of young women without a home worthy of the name. Mr. Shrimpton said he was quite sure, if ladies of wealth and influence would only look into this question, they would learn to sympathise more with their less fortunate sisters, and the four hundred beds would be very largely added to. The sums that young women pay for what they receive in these Homes (4s. 6d. a week) make them self-supporting, except as regards rent and establishment charges. As an evidence of the power of the religious influence exerted, it was mentioned that forty out of every fifty resident in the Homes attend the Sunday afternoon Bible talks. The monthly prayer-meeting for the girls themselves at one of the Homes is always a season of real refreshing.

Prayer was offered by various friends that God's richest blessing may be upon the work of Homes during the coming year.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN'S LECTURES.—The present lecturing campaign of Miss Von Finkelstein is now drawing to a close. She has visited many parts of the country, and has received everywhere the most cordial reception, exhibiting the intense and general interest awakened by her pictorial descriptions of life in the Holy Land. At the close of a lecture last week in Crown-court Church, Covent Garden, Miss Finkelstein stated that since September she has spoken one hundred and forty-one times, and is now feeling the need of rest. Early next month she purposes starting on a tour in Egypt, Palestine, and Moab, previous to her return to the United States in July, where numerous lecturing engagements await her. The closing lectures of the present series are at Wood Green, N., March 29; New-court Chapel, Tollington-park, March, 30; and Whitfield Tabernacle, Tottenham-court-road, March 31.

THE WHITE CROSS MOVEMENT.—The inauguration of this movement at Bishop Auckland was recently celebrated, the Bishop of Durham presiding at the annual meeting. He alluded to its initiation by Miss Ellice Hopkins four years previously, and spoke of far-reaching results which followed therefrom, benefiting many countries, and said that Miss Hopkins desires that the work for men shall devolve upon men, and that, if her health is restored, she will devote herself to that on behalf of her own sex. The annual meetings at Grimsby and Darlington were of a very encouraging character. Branches have also been formed at Gainsborough and Rawtenstall. At the latter place there was an audience of nearly five hundred men, chiefly from the large mills and warehouses of the district. More recently still, a series of meetings has been held at Leamington, under the auspices of the local Vigilance Association.

YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.

BURLINGTON HALL, W.

Under the secretarial régime of Mr. Pearse, the West-end branch of the Y.M.C.A. pursues the even tenour of its way. At the recent annual meeting he stated in his report that they believed in keeping close to the good old paths. He did not appear to have any startling story of progress to tell, but he reported several typical cases of blessing in connection with the Bible-classes and the evangelistic meetings, which are the backbone of the work. Unfortunately there was a deficit of £190; but, before the meeting was over, Mr. F. A. Bevan, as the new treasurer, reported that some generous hand had wiped it off.

Earl Fortescue was the president for the evening. His lordship's heart is in the right place, but he is no orator, and he went perilously near exhausting the patience of his hearers by a long, halting, and somewhat irrelevant speech. We could not but feel that it is a hazardous experiment, placing in the chair of such a gathering one who is unfamiliar with the ways and methods of the Association. However, the equilibrium was more than restored by the earnest, encouraging, instructive, and stimulating words of Mr. George Williams, Rev. Prebendary Edmonds, Canon Fleming, Mr. F. A. Bevan, and Rev. Arthur Hall. Mr. Pearse has an immense and difficult field of service in the gay and giddy West. We sincerely wish him and his committee all the grace and holy enterprise they need in pushing the battle to the gate, among the thousands of young men whose best interests he has at heart.

THE PRIORY, ISLINGTON.

Mr. Atkinson's work amongst the young men of Islington has long been favourably known. The report he read at the annual meeting, held last week in Myddleton Hall, showed that it is of an enduring character. Reference was made to many, now working as ministers or evangelists, who were led to faith in Christ at the meetings in the Priory. During the past year the work has gone on largely as in former years. With much satisfaction it was announced that the debt had been considerably reduced, though this is still a source of anxiety.

Mr. W. Haig Miller, who presided, spoke of the unspeakable blessing and privilege of living for Christ. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway, strongly insisted on the necessity of keeping the spiritual part of the work to the front. Mr. Rangaswaun Aiyangar, an Indian gentleman, said there were those who contended that there were no such things as miracles, but he thought it nothing less than a miracle that drunkards and criminals and the worst of sinners should be brought to the feet of the Saviour. Rev. W. J. Dawson, of City-road Wesleyan Chapel, also spoke, advocating the cultivation of a genuine love of good literature, while showing also that the only safeguard of a young man from the perils that beset him is to give his life to the Lord Jesus Christ. Self-sacrifice, he contended, is the first law of grace, and he urged all to prepare for life's responsibilities by a full consecration to Christ.

TROUBLE is the shadow of God's wing, and is a proof that He is drawing near to us.—Rev. Walter J. Mathams.

THE HYGIENE OF TEMPERANCE.—Dr. H. P. Schofield is delivering a course of lectures, under the auspices of the Women's Union of the Church of England Temperance Society, on the general effects of stimulants on life—on the body and on the brain—and the causes and cure for intemperance. Alcohol he described as a valuable drug and medicine, but it should never be taken out of the hands of the doctors. Alcohol can never form any tissues for the body, for it has no nitrogen. As to its effect in regard to the heat of the body, the more alcohol is taken the more the pores of the body are opened, and let the heat of the body out. Alcohol stimulates paralysis. Its specific effect is to paralyse all the sympathetic system, and one peculiarity about it is its cumulative effect.

A NOTABLE WEDDING.

The traveller along the great East-end highway of Mile-end-road, last Thursday afternoon, could not fail to notice that some unusual event was on foot at Mr. Charrington's Assembly Hall. A curious crowd encompassed the entrance, while there was gathered together inside such a large and representative company of well-known Christian workers as one seldom sees. These had come to grace with their presence the nuptials of Miss Annie Reed, eldest daughter of Mrs. Henry Reed, of Tasmania, and Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness. A handsome and well-mated couple they looked, as they stood side by side on the platform, surrounded by their groom's-men and bridesmaids, with a foreground of shrubs and flowers.

Mr. Archibald G. Brown, of the East-end Tabernacle, conducted the simple but impressive ceremony, in which the youthful pair plighted their mutual troth, and headed a new chapter in their lives. At its close Mr. Brown addressed, in the name of the large assemblage of friends, some words of hearty congratulation and goodwill. The bride's name, he said, was a household word in the annals of missionary enterprise, and, as the daughter of Mr. Henry Reed, she needed no introduction to those who yearn to see Africa won for Christ. There was a beautiful fitness in her being wedded to the son of the founder of the Livingstone Inland Mission. Mr. Brown paid a high tribute to the personal qualities of the bridegroom, whose name stood high on the roll of membership of his own Church, and whom he was now delighted to recognise as a successful preacher of the Gospel. Among the many friends present to wish him God speed in this new relation were some who had been brought to Christ through his words, and some who had been his fellow students at the London Hospital.

Pastor F. H. White offered an introductory prayer for God's blessing on the interesting event of the day; and Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, the father of the bridegroom, led in a concluding petition. Before doing so he presented the young wife, as a descendant of the family of John Frith, the reformer and martyr, with an original copy of one of his works, three hundred and forty years old, and written in the Tower of London shortly before he was burned at Smithfield. William Tyndall, who was John Frith's friend and fellow martyr, translated the words in Revelation, "Martyrs of Jesus," as "Witnesses of Jesus." "With all my heart," said Mr. Guinness, "I say to both of you, may you be, as you have been in the past, so now in your united lives, by the grace of God, witnesses of Jesus."

A numerously attended reception of friends was afterwards held at Harley House.

MISS ADA LEIGH has recently been in Baltimore stirring the hearts of the Christians there with her statement of God's blessing on the work in Paris.

CORSICAN INLAND MISSION.—Established six years ago, this Mission chose for its headquarters the town of Corte, situated in the centre of the island, and with a population of about six thousand inhabitants. Already, the report states, a very marked change has come over the people. The evangelist is now looked upon as a friend. At the Sunday services in the Mission-hall, the attendance varies from thirty to fifty, and, strange to say, is composed of men only. The women, as yet, dare not come for fear of the priests, but the evangelist has secured an entrance to one house, where the women of three families meet to receive Christian instruction. There are small gatherings almost every evening, when about fifteen persons come to hear the Word of God and join in the singing. An evangelisation tour in the villages and hamlets around is about to be undertaken by M. Hannemann, the evangelist of the Mission, in conjunction with a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The hon. sec. and treasurer is Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 27.—PSALM L.

THE subject of this Psalm is Christ's second coming, with special reference to (1) the gathering together unto Him of his saints. (2) Israel, emancipated from sacrificial ritual, is encouraged to call upon God in the day of trouble. (3) The wicked, who take God's covenant in their mouth, are shown the hollowness of mere profession.

1.—The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken.—Comp. Heb. i. 2, "God...hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." "This summoning of the earth from east to west can be nothing but the general promulgation of the Gospel."—Horsley.

2.—Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.—From the time that David brought up the Ark of God, and put it in a tent on Mount Zion, into which he went continually to hold communion with God (2 Sam. vii. 18) unhindered by the Levitical ritual, which was still going on at Gibeon, Zion became in type, as well as in spirit, a figure of the grace of the Gospel. Comp. Mount Zion contrasted with Mount Sinai (Heb. xii. 22). See also the allusion to the tabernacle of David (Acts xv. 16).

3.—Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence.—The first three verses contemplate two distinct points of time. (1) God speaking to the ends of the earth, and shining forth from Zion, in other words, the Gospel. (2) God coming, at the end of the age, and speaking again in contrast to the silence which now characterises the dispensation of grace (see ver. 21).

5.—Those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice.—"The better covenant established upon better promies" (Heb. viii. 6).

14.—Offer unto God thanksgiving, &c.—Israel is exhorted to thank God for his unspeakable gift, and to call upon Him in the day of trouble.

23.—To Him that ordereth his conversation aright.—Lit. "To him that putteth a way, will I show the salvation of God." What way? Perhaps the next Psalm is the best answer. The way of repentance and faith. "The order of thought appears to be the same as in Isa. xl. 3—5, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord,' &c. Man must prepare the way by repentance (as in the next Psalm) for the entry of God's salvation."—Kay. But see also Acts v. 31.

MONDAY, MARCH 28.—PSALM LI.

As John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ, prepared the way of the Lord by preaching "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," so have we here an Old Testament anticipation of this "way" in which God's salvation is shown. David's sin and subsequent repentance under the message of Nathan (2 Sam. xi., xii.) was the occasion of the writing of this unequalled manual of repentance and faith, which, in the light of its great value for personal use, is, perhaps, the gem of the whole Psalter.

1.—Blot out my transgressions.—"Although the sin referred to in the title was the primary occasion of this Psalm, still David says "transgressions," not merely because many other sins were developed out of it, as his guilt of blood in Uriah's case, the scandal put into the mouths of the enemies of the Lord, and his self-delusion, which lasted almost a whole year, but also because each solitary sin the more it is perceived in its fundamental character, all the more does it appear as a manifold and tangled skein of sins, and stands forth in a still more intimate and terrible relation as of cause and effect to the whole corrupt and degenerated condition in which the sinner finds himself."—Delitzsch.

2.—Wash me throughly from mine iniquity.—"In 'blot out,' sin is conceived of as a debt written down. In 'wash me throughly,' as deeply ingrained defilement. In 'cleanse me' (the usual word for a declarative making clean), as a leprosy" (Lev. xiii. 6—24).

3.—My sin is ever before me.—"Sin" in Hebrew means short-coming, and of this Daniel owns to having a continual sense. See 1 John i. 8.

4.—That Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, &c.—"It is the nature of true penitence so to confess oneself to be in the wrong, in order that God may be in the right and gain his cause."—Delitzsch.

8.—Make me to hear joy and gladness.—David looks to the Lord to speak to his soul that word that may be "joy and gladness" to him. Comp. Ps. xxxv. 3:—"Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation."

10.—Create in me a clean heart.—"What follows has respect to the gifts of the Holy Spirit, which follow upon forgiveness of sin. Of such gifts this and the two following verses speak, in each of which the name of the Spirit is repeated, being called "a right Spirit," "thy Holy Spirit," "thy free Spirit."—Luther.

TUESDAY, MARCH 29.—PSALM LII.

"This psalm, side by side with the last, exhibits the contrast between the false and the right use of the tongue."—Delitzsch. The treachery of Doeg, which was the occasion of its being written, is narrated in 1 Sam. xxii. 9.

1.—Why boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man?—"It is bad enough to behave wickedly, but bad in the extreme to boast of it as an heroic act. Doeg, who causes a massacre, not by the strength of his hand, but by the cunning of his tongue, does this. Hence he is sarcastically called a 'mighty man.'"—Delitzsch.

6.—The righteous shall see it and fear.—The usual expression in reference to any manifestation of Divine judgment. And shall laugh at him.—"According to Ps. lviii. 11, this is joy at the ultimate breaking through of justice, long hidden and not discerned; for Prov. xxiv. 17 reprobates the low malignant joy that glories at the overthrow of one's enemy."—Delitzsch.

8.—I am like a green olive tree.—"The betrayer becomes like an uprooted tree (ver. 5); the betrayed stands firm, and is like to a green-foliaged olive (Jer. xi. 16), which is planted in the house of God (Ps. xc. 14), that is to say in sacred and inaccessible ground."—Ibid.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30.—PSALM LIII.

This is a second edition of Ps. xiv. slightly altered, and it possibly may be that "a later poet, perhaps belonging to the time of Jehoshaphat or Hezekiah, has here adapted the Davídic Psalm to some terrible catastrophe that has just taken place, and given a special character to the universal announcement of judgment. The addition of the words in verse 5, 'where no fear was,' is meant to imply a God-wrought panic. Such was the case with the host of the confederates in the days of Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xx. 22—24); such also with the army of Sennacherib before Jerusalem (Is. xxxvii. 36)."—Delitzsch.

Another difference between the two Psalms is that while the name of God occurs in both seven times; in Ps. xiv., it is three times "Elohim" (or God), and four times "Jehovah." Here it is all seven times, "Elohim."

The words "upon Mahalath" signify "after a sad tone or manner," which may refer to the subject, or to the character of the music, or both.

3.—Everyone of them is gone back.—In Ps. xiv. the Hebrew word means the totality, "the whole of them." Here we have a slight variation denoting "each individual of the whole."

4.—Who eat up my people as they eat bread.—"By the might of his God, Israel has brought to nought, in a way most shameful to them, the project of those who were so sure of victory, who imagined they could devour Israel as easily and comfortably as bread."—Delitzsch.

THURSDAY, MARCH 31.—PSALM LIV.

The title gives the circumstances which occasioned the writing of the Psalm. "When the Ziphites came and said to Saul, 'Doth not David hide himself with us?'" 1 Sam. xxiii. 14 to end should be read, in order to see the sore straits in which David was at the time. Again did the Ziphites inform Saul of David's movements (1 Sam. xxvi. 1). "But that we are here to think of the first occasion is probable from the literal agreement of the words of the Zephites here with those of 1 Sam. xxiii. 19."—Hengstenberg. The construction of the Psalm is worthy of notice. Seven verses which fall naturally into two parts of three and four verses each. The first part, the prayer addressed to God. The second, David's faith and confident anticipation of the prayer being heard and answered.

1.—Save me, O God, by thy name, and judge me by thy strength.—"'Judge me' is not quite synonymous with 'save me.' It points to the righteousness of David's cause, which leads him to call in the Divine help against his enemies as a work of Divine righteousness."—Hengstenberg. So can the believer call in God's help against his great enemy, sin, as a matter of Divine righteousness. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9).

7.—He hath delivered me out of all trouble.—David sees what is not as if it were, faith builds upon the promise and anticipates the answer. Mine eye hath seen his desire upon mine enemies.—There is no "his desire" in the Hebrew. "It is literally 'mine eye hath looked upon mine enemies,' &c., with triumph."—S.C.

FRIDAY, APRIL 1.—PSALM LV.

"This Psalm belongs to the four years during which the rebellion of Absalom was forming, or to the latter part of it, when Absalom's party were so sure of their cause that they had no need to make any secret of it. The faithless bosom friend, over whom the complaint lingers with especial sadness, is none other than Ahithophel, the right hand of Absalom, but he has in Judas Iscariot his historical living antítype."—Delitzsch.

The "faithless bosom friend," the chief cause of grief to the Psalmist, may be said to have three stages of fulfilment. (1) The typical fulfilment—Ahithophel; (2) (The central and personal fulfilment—Judas; (3) The final and developed fulfilment—Antichrist. Compare the typical relation of Judas to Antichrist conveyed by the words "Son of perdition" (John xvii. 12) applied to the "Man of Sin" in 2 Thess. ii. 3. According to this Psalm, Antichrist is to be looked for within, rather than outside, the professing Church of Christ.

9.—Divide their tongues.—"Referring to Gen. x. 25. Let a second 'Dispersion' fall on what has now become an ungodly 'Babel,' a stronghold of rebellion against God."—Kay. See Rev. xvii. and its application of the name "Babylon" mystically to the professing Church.

13.—A man mine equal.—"What heart-piercing significance this word obtains when found in the mouth of the second David, who, although Son of God and peerless King, nevertheless entered into the most intimate human relationship as the Son of Man to his disciples, and among them to Judas Iscariot."—Delitzsch.

15.—Let them go down quick into hell.—i.e., "alive into Sheol," see in Rev. xix. 20, the judgment of the beast and the false prophet, and also Jude 11, where the false teachers "perish in the gainsaying of Korah."

SATURDAY, APRIL 2.—PSALM LVI.

"Upon Jonath-elem-rechokim" means "upon the silent dove of far-off regions," a mystical designation of Him who "as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not his mouth;" while He could say, "I am from above, I am not of this world." It may also refer to those who, as born of the Spirit, born from above, are strangers and pilgrims upon earth.

4.—In God I will praise his word.—"He has the word of his promise on his side. Through God will he praise this his word, inasmuch as it is gloriously verified in Him."—Delitzsch.

6.—They mark my steps, when they wait for my soul—or life.—Comp. Luke xx. 20: "And they watched Him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of his words, that so they might deliver Him into the power and authority of the governor."

13.—For Thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not Thou deliver my feet from falling?—This latter clause is rendered by Delitzsch as parallel to the first, "Yea, my feet from falling." So in R.V., "Hast Thou not delivered my feet from falling?" Rom. vi. 9 gives the fulfilment: "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over Him."

TALBOT TABERNACLE.

Dear Sir,—As several communications have been received by Mr. Frank White, and remarks made in one of the society journals respecting an advertisement which has recently appeared in the daily papers, for the sale of the Talbot Tabernacle, comparing it with that lately inserted in your columns, I should feel greatly obliged in the interest of truth and on behalf of the pastor and congregation, if you would allow me to say that the old building is the property of the freeholders, and the pastor and congregation have no interest whatever in its sale.

That advertisement, they presume, was put in by the freeholders, and they did not even know of its existence until their attention was called to it.

Yours faithfully, M. C. Leite Rozas.

MISSION WORK IN MOAB.

Dear Sir,—It may interest your readers to know, from one who has just returned from Moab (though we had not the opportunity of going so far as Kerak), that Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby, whose work was described in your issue of the 10th inst., are, indeed, living by faith in God. I met Mr. Lethaby three years ago at Jerusalem, and was much refreshed by his desire to make known Christ as the Saviour of men.

He was distributing the well-known tracts, "A Saviour for You," "The Road to Heaven," &c., and doing his utmost under great disadvantages. Since then his wife has joined him. Dr. Ogilvy, of the British Ophthalmic Hospital, told me that he thoroughly believed in him, and that he helped him in giving him drugs, and teaching him how to use them; this he would not have done, had he not been persuaded of his earnestness and sincerity.

Should any of your readers feel inclined to send any help to Mr. Lethaby, addressed to Dr. Ogilvy, British Ophthalmic Hospital, Jerusalem, Syria, he would see that it is delivered safely. I will add £1 1s. to whatever may be sent, as I feel it will be an encouragement to him, and money that will be well laid out.—Yours faithfully,

7, Eccleston-square, S.W. Edith Allison.

Little Boys' Homes at Farningham.

The twenty-third anniversary of these excellent institutions was celebrated on Saturday evening last by a banquet in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hôtel Metropole. Lord Herschell, who presided, said that the one idea which characterised the Homes was to try and make them as much like "home" as possible, a result which could not be attained without Christian training. In addition to ordinary education and various industrial pursuits, technical instruction is given in lithography, photography, and telegraphy, and some of the boys have proved so well trained in the latter, that upon leaving the Homes they have been at once received into the Post-office.

Professor Elmslie also spoke in support of the Institutions, and Rev. A. O. Charles, the secretary, announced a list of donations received, amounting to about £1200, of which the Chairman had given £50. The office of the Homes is at Bank-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

A SALE OF WORK in aid of the Irish Church Mission Schools and Homes in Dublin, and the Connemara Orphan Nurseries, will be held (D.V.) in Morley Halls Y.W.C.A., 316, Regent-street, W.C., the 29th and 30th inst. On Tuesday the bazaar will be opened at noon, by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, and closed at 6 p.m.: admission, 1s. On Wednesday, by Rev. W. Hay Chapman, and closed at 8 p.m.: admission, free.

MADEIRA.—The Portuguese Protestant Mission School, which for some years Mrs. W. Smart has superintended, is just now encountering considerable opposition. An advertisement of a sale of work in aid of the Free Meal Fund for the very poor children was met two days after by a counterblast stating that the chief object of the Mission is "proselytism among the Catholic poor," and that of this "the very large majority of the English Colony entirely disapprove." Those who know anything of this work, and of our friends Mr. and Mrs. Smart, know also that their sole object is the extension of the kingdom of Christ, and perhaps some may be moved to sympathy by the knowledge of the opposition they are now encountering to assist them at this juncture.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Charles James, of the Gospel Purity Association, visited Peterborough, Ontario, on March 2 and 3, advocating purity of individual and social life.

Mr. William Humpstone, of Rochester, New York, writes to us that much blessing has attended mission services he has conducted in different parts of the State.

Mr. George King has conducted an eight days' evangelistic mission in the Westerfield Hall, South Tottenham. The meetings were well attended and the word was with power.

Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff, has just concluded a five days' mission at Black Torrington, Devon. The meetings were well attended, and a deep and lasting impression has been made.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Willson have lately conducted a series of Gospel meetings at Cattaraugus, N.Y. They were helped by their daughter Olive, who is said to be an accomplished singer.

Mr. G. C. Needham has conducted largely attended services at Norristown, Pa. The Churches united in the work, and the meetings were fruitful in blessing. Mr. P. Bilhorn assisted the evangelist in the praise department, and his Gospel songs are stated to have made much impression on the people.

Mr. Joseph Clarke, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a mission in Breconshire, Wales, with marked success. People could be seen wending their way for miles over hills and along lanes to hear the simple story of the Cross as set forth by the evangelist. Numbers have been brought to the Saviour, and many induced to attend the meetings that never entered the house of God before.

Mr. Sankey has been paying a visit to Newcastle, Pa., where he held Gospel meetings in connection with Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan, and also advocated the claims of the Y.M.C.A., which meets in the fine building recently presented to the town by the evangelist. Mr. Sankey proceeded from Newcastle to Chicago, to join Mr. Moody in the work there. He received a warm welcome at one of Mr. Francis Murphy's meetings in Farwell Hall.

Mr. George Soltau has spent four days among us, and gave two Bible-readings—one to Christian policemen, and another to about forty ladies and gentlemen. They were greatly enjoyed, and the people all round seem so hungering for more of the truth, that it has been proposed that Mr. Soltau should come again in three months' time for a fortnight's mission. Will readers of The Christian, and friends at the Y.M.C.A. noon prayer-meetings, ask that God will prepare hearts to receive Christ as the Saviour? M. Fagg.

New Town, Hobart, Tasmania, Feb. 2.

Border Counties Tent.—The record of work done at the several places where this Gospel tent was last year pitched is very encouraging in view of another year's evangelistic efforts about to be undertaken in the towns and villages along the Border. One minister, speaking of the results of a fortnight's mission at Lauder, said there had not been such a work of grace there for many years. At other places rich blessing resulted from the preaching of the word. Inquiries as to arrangements for the season, soon to be commenced, should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. W. G. Turnbull, Farmer, Spittal, Northumberland.

East London Evangelisation Society.—This unsectarian and voluntary association of Christian men and women has for its one object the preaching of the Gospel amongst the poor and wretched. Its field is the common lodging-houses in Spitalfields, Limehouse, and other districts, hospitals, infirmaries, &c., and the open air. The Plimsoll-street Mission has been admirably sustained by one of the members, whose labours have been greatly blessed to the people. Free breakfasts are periodically given to tramp and lodging-house people, and thus, as well as in other ways, many hundreds of persons are brought under the sound of the Gospel. The secretary is Mr. John Harvey, 29, Senrab-street, Stepney.

RAILWAY MISSION.—The annual Scotch Conference of the Railway Mission will be held in Edinburgh on April 2. Delegates from all parts of Scotland will attend. The work of the Railway Mission is growing exceedingly in Scotland. A drawing-room meeting on behalf of the Mission was recently held at the residence of Lady Ashburton, Kent House, Knightsbridge, when seven Railway-men gave testimony as to the value of the work.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Brighton.—The name of the new secretary is Mr. J. W. Stuttle, not Shuttle, as given in our last issue.

Kingston, Ont.—A Convention was held here Feb. 3—6; it was largely attended, and was accompanied by much blessing.

Bath.—The Y.M.C.A. in this city has been turning its attention with good results to some of the surrounding villages. Nine days each at Weston, and Rush-hill, and a few more at East Twerton, have brought much joy to the workers in witnessing the salvation of souls.

Tewkesbury.—A most successful mission has been conducted at the new Y.M.C.A. rooms here by Rev. J. Fleming Shearer, of Middlesborough, five to six hundred people being present every night. The work of the Association has been greatly prospered by God. A Y.W.C.A. is being organised.

Malvern.—Mr. Henry Thorne has held a second mission here. Christians of different denominations took part, and much blessing was granted in decisions for Christ. A very gratifying feature of the mission was the testimony of not a few who were converted during Mr. Thorne's previous visit sixteen months ago.

Brompton.—The thirty-first annual report of this Association speaks of the many temporal and spiritual blessings which have resulted from the work of the past year. The Sunday morning prayer-meeting and afternoon Bible-reading have been well attended, and during the summer months open-air services in Hyde-park were conducted by members, and large crowds listened to the old, old story of the Gospel. The tract work has been a feature of unusual importance and blessing. The secretary is Mr. F. H. Ardley, 112, Brompton-road, S.W.

Mission and other Appeals.

Railway Mission.—Any back numbers of Christian magazines, papers, or tracts and books thankfully received, for signal boxes and country stations, where they are much valued.—Miss Ord, 2, Crescent-place Plymouth.

Hope Mission, Banner-street.—Help, in the shape of clothing or of money, for the relief fund is greatly needed by the friends of this well-known Mission. All communications should be addressed to the hon. sec., Mrs. W. Harkness, either at 1, St. Mary's-road, Canonbury, or at the Mission.

Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association.—The annual sale of work on behalf of this excellent charity will take place on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 29 and 30, in the Molesworth Hall, Molesworth-street, Dublin. Contributions of money, work, or useful articles for sale will be thankfully received by Miss Hewson, 1, Leeson-park, Dublin.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—Prayer for blessing on the following missions:—Mr. William H. Roberts, at Dublin, commencing on March 27; Mr. Gerald Coultas, at the Assembly Hall, Cubitt Town, E., to March 28; Mr. Opie Rodway, at Blackgang, Ise of Wight, for a week, commencing March 26.——For special services for children and young people, by Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood; also at Woodside-park, near Barnet; also at St. James' Church, Hatcham, by Mr. Martin J. Hall.——That a Christian Convention at Newport, Mon., on March 25, may be attended and followed with God's blessing.

JEWISH REFUGEES IN JERUSALEM.—A number of friends assembled in the Hebrew Christian House of Industry, Hackney-road, on Friday afternoon, to bid farewell to Mr. D. C. Joseph, who is about to proceed to Jerusalem to labour among the Jewish refugees. For the last thirteen years Mr. Joseph has been proclaiming the truth to his brethren resident in the East-end of London, with good results. Recognising the sadly neglected state of the Jews in the holy city, Mr. Joseph has resolved to start a mission there. He will be accompanied by his newly-wedded wife, who is also a devoted Christian. Brief addresses were given by Mr. Theodore Walker, of Leicester; Mr. Henry Tucker, J.P., of Andover; Rev. John Bain, Congregational Church, Clapton; and several others. All united in wishing Mr. Joseph God-speed in his mission, and praying that God will crown his efforts with success. The work among the Jews in East London is to be continued, under the superintendence of Mr. Edward Poulson, who is well known as a zealous agent of the Christian Evidence Society, and is a talented Hebrew scholar.

The Book World.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE. 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. This edition of a book which, as Mr. Moody says, every Christian ought to have, contains 757 pp., and about 250,000 references. The special feature of this edition is that the proper names have been newly translated by Rev. A. Jones, M.A., and their meanings in the original languages given. Thus an edition, distinguished as the "Portable," of this work is now placed within reach of the students of Scripture.

BIBLICAL COMMENTARY ON THE PSALMS. By FRANZ DELITZSCH, D.D. Translated by Rev. DAVID EATON. Hodder & Stoughton. Delitzsch's Commentary on the Psalms is too well known to need commendation, but this particular edition, being translated from the latest German edition, and specially revised by the author, presents advantages which call for special notice. The well-known edition in Messrs. T. & T. Clark's Foreign Theological Library is a translation of the second German edition (1867). This is a translation of the fourth (1883), and an interval of sixteen years represents a considerable advance of critical knowledge, even so far as this book of Scripture alone is concerned. "This translation has been made from an interleaved copy of the last edition of Professor Delitzsch's Commentary, with the author's latest additions and corrections in manuscript. It thus represents his present matured opinions. It is the care which this veteran scholar uniformily bestows upon his successive editions that gives them their peculiar excellence." So far as Hebrew scholarship is concerned there can be no better guide than Delitzsch, but he often lacks that spiritual perception, which, guided by such a Scripture as Acts ii. 25, discerns when "David speaketh concerning" Christ. If we believe that David was a "prophet," and wrote under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, we may expect that the things of Christ were intended to be set forth in what he wrote even more than the circumstances of his own time which may have been the occasion of his writing. The New Testament use of the Psalms is our best guide as to how they are to be thus interpreted, and especially our Lord's own use of them. This, when carefully considered, leaves little doubt on the mind that Christ is far more frequently the subject of the Psalms than even such an eminent Christian scholar as Delitzsch is willing to admit.

All the World for March (2d. 8, Paternoster-square) contains fine portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, and the first part of a sketch of the life of La Maréchale.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins sends some fine specimens of "Easter Cards," in which the artistic reproductions of natural beauty are wedded to gracious words that tell of resurrection life and power.

EASTER GREETINGS. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is a packet of very chaste and tasteful Easter cards, with verses by Frances Ridley Havergal. They are certain of a welcome wherever sent.

THE COOK AND HOUSEKEEPER is the title of a new penny paper published at 286, Strand. It seems likely to fill a useful position by being within everybody's reach. We have acted upon some of its recipes and can recommend them.

Rev. G. Elder, Greenwich, lately preached a sermon on "Socialism in Scripture," which has been published by Messrs. Brading & Son, High-street, Deptford. The remedies suggested by the preacher were a reform of the land laws and emigration.

EASTER GARLANDS. Marcus Ward & Co. Several Easter hymns, backed by familiar texts which tell of glorious resurrection hopes, beautifully illuminated, and bound up in delicate covers, make a charming and tasteful little memorial of the great Easter time now close at hand.

CLERGY DIRECTORY. 4s. 6d. net. J. G. Johnson, 121, Fleet-street. This annual volume, which has now reached its seventeenth issue, has been very much extended and improved, and, having been corrected to date, is as complete as a book of reference so comprehensive can well be. The Parish Directory and List of Patrons, with other features, make it invaluable to all interested in such information as is here given.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—The brief record which forms a prefix to the financial statement just issued refers, with thankfulness, to the benefit derived by Mr. Hankinson from his voyage to Australia, where he was able to do much to extend the work of the Union. Mr. M. J. Hall, B.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, has been appointed to succeed Mr. H. M. Trickett as assistant-secretary. A detailed account of the work of the Mission is promised very shortly. Larger premises for the transaction of business have just been secured at 13, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row.

Among the Churches.

 We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church of St. Olave, Jewry, will shortly be demolished, and the parish united with that of St. Margaret, Lothbury.

The Bishop of Liverpool was, we regret to say, so unwell last week, that he had to postpone his episcopal appointments. He is now better.

The Dean of Manchester preached in the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, on Sunday morning last on behalf of the Cancer Hospital, and Canon Durst in the afternoon.

The charitable expenditure of the late Bishop Fraser during the period that he occupied the see of Manchester amounted to £31,536, this being considerably more than half the amount he received as stipend.

At the meeting of the Society for Promoting the employment of additional curates, the Bishop of Bedford said it was hoped that this year aid might be granted to a hundred of the most needful cases which could be found.

The C.M.S. Union meetings at Oxford this term have, The Record says, been useful but not remarkable. There is a feeling that the wave of missionary zeal, so strong a few years ago, has greatly subsided; but the fact that five young Cambridge men have been accepted by the C.M.S., during the term, is surely not an index of declining interest and love.

Counsel's opinion having been asked as to the legality of Canon Wilberforce's action in preaching in Albion Congregational Chapel, Southampton, Mr. Charles, Q.C., and Mr. Courtney Kenny, M.P., have given it as their opinion that a beneficed clergyman of the Church of England may lawfully take part in a service in any place of worship within the borders of his own parish, but the nature of the service must be such as not to render him open to the charge of impugning any of the doctrines of the Church of England.

BAPTIST.

The Sunday-school connected with the chapel at Kingston has, in two-and-a-half years, increased from 13 to 140 scholars.

At Wellington-street Chapel, Stockton-on-Tees, 21 persons were recently baptized—all from the mission station in Northcote-street.

Fifty persons professed conversion during a special mission conducted at Bideford, Devon, by Rev. A. Sprague, of Boroughbridge.

Mr. S. Thomas, of Bristol, has conducted a seven days' mission at Stratford-on-Avon, in connection with the church of which Rev. John Pugh is pastor.

Pastor T. Lardner, of Battersea-park Tabernacle, whose health since his accident eighteen months ago has been gradually failing, has been ordered to Lausanne for entire rest.

A warm welcome was accorded to Rev. Frank M. Smith by the Church at Norfolk-street, Choumert-road, Peckham, at the public "recognition" meeting. On the previous Sunday Mr. Smith had received into church fellowship thirty new members.

The growth in numbers and energy of the Church at Coupland-street, Manchester, in the first year of its existence, has been very satisfactory. Every month there have been additions to the membership, and the total increase in the year has been 93, 11 of these being from the Sunday-school, which has increased from 67 to 340.

CONGREGATIONAL.

In the four Sunday-schools there are upwards of 1000 scholars, and there are three mission stations and twenty-six other agencies.

Sunday afternoon services for working-men, held during the last four months, conducted by Rev. R. Snowdon, at Langsett Church, Sheffield, have been well attended.

Rev. David Robb has just completed the eighth year of his ministry at Gateshead, and during this time nearly four hundred have been added to the membership of the Church.

A special mission at the Belper Church, conducted by Rev. H. Tarrant, of Derby, and Rev. G. Hemsworth, has been greatly blessed. Numbers of young people were deeply impressed, and are now rejoicing in Christ.

The constitution of Newton Church, Chapel-town, Leeds, has been so altered as to admit of the admission to membership and office of Baptists, and provision will be made for the performance of the rite of immersion for all who desire it.

On Wednesday evening, March 16, an interesting and enthusiastic meeting of the members and seatholders of the church at Cambridge Heath, Hackney, was held at the Morley Hall, to celebrate the removal of £4000 of debt from the church.

At the eighty-fourth anniversary of Union Chapel, Islington, and the forty-third of Dr. Allon's ministry, it was stated that there are now 912 members in fellowship with the parent Church and its three branches, and that there are 3468 children in the Sunday-schools, which have a staff of 264 teachers.

In a paper on "Spiritual Life the Secret of Church Power," Rev. Urijah R. Thomas says the latent power of every church is immeasurably vast, while its active power is ridiculously and shamefully small. Liberality will not be a sign of power until the Divine desire to give replaces the animal desire to get.

SALVATION ARMY.

Special offerings were taken at all the corps on Friday last on behalf of the sick and wounded fund.

In Rome, a plasterer, after an explanation of the work and character of the Salvation Army, suddenly exclaimed, "Ah, that is better that Socialism!"

At Grosvenor-street, Manchester, one who had been a pest to the meetings, and not long ago threatened to take the life of one of the officers, has been converted.

The Court of Queen's Bench has quashed a sentence pronounced by the magistrates of Ryde against the Army for singing and speaking in the streets without a licence from the Mayor.

Major Whatmore writes of the home voyage on board the Etruria:—"Our surroundings throughout could not be much worse; gambling and drinking were the order of things; but hardly a curse or a word of blasphemy was heard throughout. We thank God for the influence He gave us with men."

METHODIST.

Mr. John Sampson, "the Cornish evangelist," has just concluded a very successful series of services in the chapel at Burnley.

At the quarterly meeting of Spennymoor Primitive Methodist Circuit, it was found that the membership showed an increase of seventy for the quarter.

The annual report of Carlisle Memorial Church, Belfast (Rev. John Powell), shows that much care is given to the classes, of which there are nineteen, with a membership of 332.

The Bible-class at Bristol, under the direction of Mr. C. R. Parsons, is doing a splendid work. During last year 225 men were induced to leave the streets and attend the class, which now numbers 420 members.

A midnight coffee-supper to fallen women marked the close of Captain Dennis's mission at Taunton. Many promises of amendment were made, which, it is believed, were sincere, and it is hoped that much good will result.

Special missions have been conducted at Cottenham by Rev. G. F. Byles; at Daventry by Rev. J. F. Holdsworth; and at Melton Mowbray by Mr. Atkins, of Granthorpe Hall, Lincolnshire. Great blessing has attended them.

The forty-fourth anniversary of the Wesleyan Seamen's Mission, was celebrated in the Wesleyan Seamen's Chapel, Commercial-road, on Wednesday, last week. The report contained many interesting and encouraging facts.

On the last evening of the mission, conducted in the Victoria Chapel by Rev. W. H. Pindall, of Birmingham, after an earnest and faithful discourse, the congregation, almost en masse, walked toward the communion rail to make full surrender to Christ.

The Baptists, Congregationalists, and various sections of the Methodist body at Loughborough have been uniting in a ten days' mission. Rev. F. B. Meyer (Baptist) and Rev. George Byron (Wesleyan), both of Leicester, were the mission preachers. There were many inquirers.

A Joyful News evangelist, having been holding mission services in the Ampthill Circuit during the last two months, a thanksgiving meeting was held in the town chapel. About five hundred people from all parts of the circuit attended, and a number of testimonies were given by the new converts.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

George Wood, of Luton, has been conducting an eight days' mission at Ashford, Kent, with much blessing to people of all classes.

William Hubbard, of Indiana Yearly Meeting is being owned and blessed in his labours among the Indians in their territory near Grand River.

Increased evangelistic activity has been shown in Leeds. Largely as a result of this, over 800 men and women were at the Adult School on January 30.

Philadelphia, and indeed America, has sustained a great loss in the death of Professor Pliny E. Chase. He could converse in eight languages, and understood a great many more.

At the recent anniversary of the Sunday afternoon Bible-class, Cardiff, many testified to its benefit to them. Both men and women attend, and its conversational character is greatly appreciated.

For three years a successful mission has been carried on in Glen Haven and Cedar Valley, Jamaica, by American Friends. The Church has seventy members. Many meetings are held in houses of natives, and at cross roads, and in the market places.

Mary Ann Marriage Allen, of Dublin, and an American minister, have been visiting Friends in North Carolina and Virginia, and labouring among the coloured people in those States; much blessing has attended their labours. They find great prejudice existing against work among the negro race.

In 1871 the Friends' Mission in Mexico was opened. There are now fifteen stations in the province of Tamaulipas, and the work spreads. Sunday-schools are in active operation, and evangelistic effort is persistently sustained. Friends in Canada, Philadelphia, and elsewhere supply the means, though much of the work is increasingly self-supporting.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. James Cuthbert Lindsay, a prominent member of University-road Methodist Church, Belfast; Rev. Edward Day, of Harrogate, formerly Methodist minister at Filey, St. Alban's, Holyhead, &c.; Rev. E. Roberts, for forty-three years pastor of Zion Chapel, Cwmavon; Mr. W. Otridge, for forty years deacon of the church at West-end, Hammersmith; Rev. John Hull, late rector of Eaglescliffe, Yarm, Durham, and senior honorary canon of Winchester; Mr. Wm. Sankey, of Coalbrookdale, a much respected member of the Society of Friends; Canon Winnington Ingram, rector of Harvington, Worcestershire.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A ten days' Gospel temperance mission has been held at Oxford.

Rev. J. W. Horsley says that crime is simply condensed drunkenness.

A Temperance Electoral Union for Staffordshire has been organised at Rugely.

In The Nineteenth Century, Mr. A. Reid says stimulants, as such, are fatal to successful journalism.

The Prison Commissioners report 23 per cent. fewer persons sent into penal servitude in 1885 than in 1884.

At the new works of the L. & Y. Railway Company, Harwich, public-houses will not be allowed on the Company's land.

The Edinburgh Gospel Temperance Union is moving for a reduction in the number of licenses in the poorer parts of the city.

The Daily Chronicle justly says, "It is time this dishonest and demoralising practice (paying wages in drink) were made illegal."

Mr. Coad's mission at the Brighton Home brought the temperance question into more than usual prominence in that town. Over eight hundred pledges were taken.

Sir C. Warren said, at a public meeting, recently, "that at Chatham he had known numbers of young soldiers who were living examples of the utility of Bands of Hope."

At Hull, recently, the members of the True Star Good Templars' Lodge held a public tea in honour of Sister Witley, a member, who attained her one hundredth birthday on March 1.

The decision against the Over Darwen Tramway Company, awarding £200 damages for injury sustained by a woman through a drunken man having been allowed on the car, has been confirmed by the Court of Appeal.

A Hampshire newspaper reports that a citizen of Bishopstoke owned a portion of land. It was favourably situated, so a brewer thought, for building purposes, and an offer accordingly was made. "No amount of money that you can offer," was the reply, "will tempt me to sell a site for a public-house."

As some might infer from Mr. Caine's statements, with regard to the drink curse in Egypt, that the public-houses were all kept by Englishmen, a resident in that country for seventeen years writes to The Alliance News saying that they are mostly kept by the lowest class, representatives of other civilised powers.

A great public meeting is to be held on Wednesday, March 30, 1887, at seven o'clock, in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, London, on the question of "The Drink Traffic and the Demoralisation of Native Races." The Bishop of London will preside, and addresses will be delivered by the Ven. Archdeacon Farrar, Col. Sir Charles Warren, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., and others.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, March 19, 1887.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

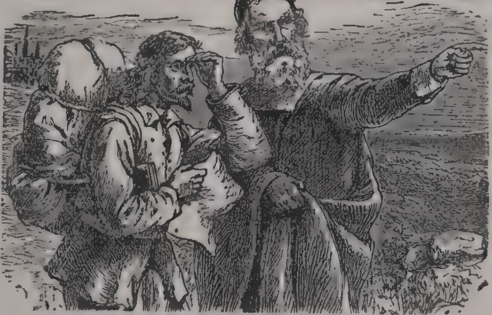
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

NEW EDITION, ILLUSTRATED. 6D.



EVANGELIST POINTING THE WAY.

"This CHEAP EDITION of A BOOK THAT WILL NEVER WEAR OUT will be heartily welcomed by the people generally."
Christian Commonwealth, Dec. 2, 1886.

"This is by far the BEST of all the CHEAP EDITIONS."
Christian Leader, Dec. 23, 1886.

"By far the best of all the cheap editions of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' that we have seen is one issued this week by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Care has been bestowed upon the revision, the text having been early editions; a point all the more worthy of grateful recognition when we see so many conscienceless reprints, abounding in old and new blunders, tumbled into the market. The type is new, leaded, and very readable; and the book, printed on superior paper, and adorned with upwards of a dozen original illustrations."—The Christian Leader.

☞ In ordering it is necessary to specify "MORGAN & SCOTT'S Edition."

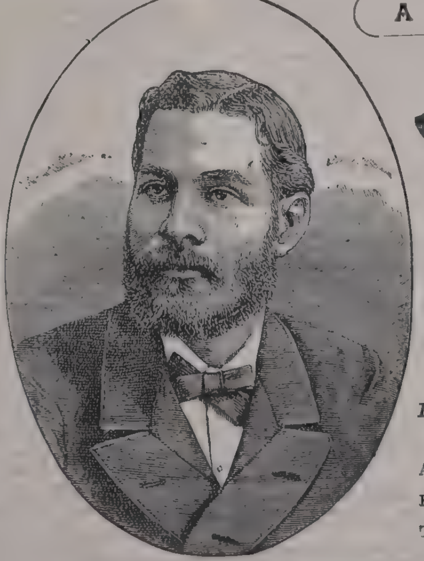
A BOOK FOR YOUNG MEN.



JAMES SCOTT:

A Labourer for God.

BY

REV. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.,

Author of
"Memoir of Rev. R. M. McCheyne,"
"A Commentary on Leviticus," &c., &c.

With PORTRAIT AND Two other ILLUSTRATIONS.

In Tinted Covers, 1/-; Cloth Limp, 1/6; Cloth Boards, 2/6.

CONTENTS.

A Century of Revival Work in Glasgow.
How a Special Instrument was prepared.
The Labourer in the Midst of his Work.
The Work going on.
The Labourer called aside
The Labourer in the sunset of his short day.
Appendix.

"In 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' Dr. A. Bonar finds a theme almost as congenial to his pen as Robert Murray McCheyne. Glasgow, the theatre of much evangelistic effort of the best kind, has known no more devoted or successful labourer among her lowliest than the subject of this memoir. A greater testimony to the worth of this ardent young spirit than Mr. Moody's friendship and commendation is the fact that no fewer than 30,000 people lined the streets on the day of his funeral, while the procession alone numbered 6,000. The memoir is in every way an inspiration to the love of man and the service of God."
Nonconformist and Independent, Feb. 3, 1887.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a touching tribute to one who filled up a short life with bright and blessed service. The volume is entitled, 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. A rich encouragement this to the 'elders of the church' to use their office well! Who shall tell how many James Scotts are just ripe for such influence as theirs?"—British Messenger.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC AND THE DEMORALIZATION OF NATIVE RACES.—A Great Public Meeting will be held on Wednesday Evening, March 30, 1887, at 7 o'clock, in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. The Lord Bishop of London will preside. Addresses by the Ven. Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.; Colonel Sir Charles Warren, G.C.M.G.; W. S. Caine, Esq., M.P.; Samuel Smith, Esq., M.P.; the Rev. Horace Waller, F.R.G.S. (Central African Mission—Companion of Livingstone), the Rev. R. P. Ashe (C.M.S. and co-worker with Bishop Hannington), and others.—Applications for tickets should be made at once to the SUPERINTENDENT, C.E.T.S., 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, S.W.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION, 32, Chamber-street, E.—In answer to prayer the Lord has supplied means for the support of an additional Missionary for daily visitation among the Labourers at all the Docks near London. Books and Tracts are much needed.—C. COLEMAN.

CONTRIBUTIONS of Clothing for distribution among the poorer patients and their families, are very earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen square, Bloomsbury. Parcels should be addressed to Miss S. WHITMORE, Clerk to the Ladies' Committee, at the Hospital. Donations in money will also be thankfully received.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—Eight Missionaries now carry the knowledge of the Gospel to the poor of Paris. They pass from room to room in the lowest parts of the city, reading from and supplying copies of the Word of God. One of them devotes his efforts entirely to the neglected English poor. The marked blessing of Almighty God is resting upon this endeavour to enlighten the most ignorant and depraved—leading them to the Saviour. The Committee ask for the prayerful sympathy of English Christians. A French gentleman has just given 500 francs, but £30 more is required to pay the men to the end of the financial year. They implore your help.—J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

THE UTMOST ANXIETY IS FELT for the welfare of one of the most time-honoured Children's Missions in London. For 85 years a glorious work for Christ has been carried on in Castle-yard, among the very poorest children in Southwark.

Sick children have been visited, Gifts of Clothing and Money made to necessitous cases, Summer Excursions, and numerous other benefits conferred.

All these useful operations are now threatened with collapse, through want of means to restore the greatly dilapidated building. For nearly two years the Teachers have been fervently praying for help against such a calamity, but the much-needed aid has not yet come.

The Committee of the Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall, have just voted a grant of £100 towards the £2,000 required. They strongly commend this urgent appeal to the best support of the Christian public.

Contributions most gratefully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN.

Treasurer, Rev. ROBERT TUCK, B.A., 23, Thornford-road, Lewisham-park, S.E.; Bankers, London & Westminster Bank, No. 1, St. James's-square, S.W., account "Castle Yard Mission."

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 101 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

NEWCASTLE, STAFF.—The "Joyful News Mission" has been started for the purpose of evangelising the villages and rural districts of Great Britain. Already 80 men are actively employed in this work. They receive no remuneration for their labour, and their necessary expenses are provided by the proceeds of the sale of the weekly paper, Joyful News, price ½d., and the donations of friends.

The Editor, the Rev. T. Champness, "Joyful News" Home, Rochdale, says that, should the circulation of the paper increase, he will soon have 100 men labouring in the different parts of the country, spreading the tidings of salvation. In many places much blessing to the whole neighbourhood has resulted from arousing the dormant spiritual life of the people in the village.

Donations for the support and extension of this work will be thankfully received by the EDITOR, [illegible] RATHBONE EDGE.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH.

MISS ROBINSON is in urgent need of ONE THOUSAND POUNDS, the resources of the Home Work having suffered from the great effort needed to establish which was opened two years ago, and has proved a blessing to thousands.

John Cory, Esq., offers £50 if nineteen others will give the same.

Bankers: GLYN & CO. Two Friends have already responded.

Reports, &c., may be obtained from MISS SARAH ROBINSON, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, by whom small donations will be gladly received.

YOUR BOYS will have a happy home and sound education with Mr. and Mrs. DIXON, Middle-class School, Kingston-on-Thames. Christian training. Boarders limited. Beautiful neighbourhood. Prospectus. 20 to 25 guineas.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA, on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and a first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

REV. HENRY BRADFORD, NORTHAMPTON.

THE life-history of this bold and faithful preacher of the Gospel is eminently interesting and instructive. It is none the less so because, from the date of his conversion, till an event which brought him into unwonted prominence, and stamped him as fearlessly faithful to his trust, that life has seemed to realise the description of the poet Whittier, who sings—

> Glideth one through greenest

or, still better, of the Psalmist, who speaks of God's people as being led in green pastures, beside the still waters of comfort.

As a young man, scarcely twenty-one, Mr. Bradford decided for Christ. The manner in which he was led to the decision that determined the whole of his future course is well described in words of his own. Having been invited to hear Mr. Spurgeon, as he had been brought up in the Church of England he was somewhat prejudiced against the great preacher, but, overcoming this, he went. "I took pencil and paper to note Mr. Spurgeon's errors, but discovered my own ignorance and was charmed with the Tabernacle service." This experience has happened to others who have left the building in a different mood to that in which they entered it. In Mr. Bradford's case it was followed by the happiest results. He went again and again, was aroused under one of Mr. Spurgeon's powerful appeals to young men; after some period of darkness and great distress of mind, he found peace through a sermon from 1 John iii. 25, entitled "The warrant of faith." Six months afterwards he was baptised and admitted to Church membership in the Tabernacle. Mr. Bradford at once joined the Bible-class, under the presidency of Rev. G. Rogers, attended the Saturday-night and Sunday-morning prayer-meetings, and, being hungry for the pocket Testament, which was read at meal-times. Besides these he attended some evening classes and commenced the study of Latin.

The next step in his spiritual life was due to Mr. Spurgeon's faithful appeals to Christian consecration. The young convert could no longer sit still, but commenced work with an open-air band on Blackfriars Bridge, and subsequently in Tooley-street, at Queenhithe, and in Bell-alley, Goswell-street, meeting with rebuffs much more common twenty years ago than now. He also met with a friend in Mr. Thos. Keys, author of "The Old-fashioned Book by an Old-fashioned Man," whose ripe experience and library, placed freely at his service

(From Photograph by Messrs. Turner & Killick, Upper-street, Islington.)

Through Mr. W. J. Orsman he became a member of the Evangelists' Association at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Very soon afterwards he was chosen by this body to form a mission in the Isle of Dogs. The word was much blessed, and the first-fruits were baptised by Mr. Spurgeon; others were baptised at Poplar Chapel by Mr. Bradford himself, and a little company of believers numbering about forty was formed. For upwards of two years this labour of love was continued with rare devotion, week-night services and prayer-meetings being added to those on the Lord's day.

Up to this time Mr. Bradford had continued in the employ of Messrs. I. & R. Morley, into whose service he entered on coming to London from Eastbourne; but feeling the impossibility of continuing his double labours, he applied to Mr. Spurgeon to relieve him from those at the mission. This Mr. Spurgeon not only declined to do, but asked Mr. Bradford to enter the College with a view to the ministry. After some consideration, at Easter, 1867, this advice was acted on. Twelve months later another stage was reached. Being sent as a supply to Tring, Mr. Bradford's services were so acceptable that an invitation was given to spend the summer vacation there, and, having been much exercised as to entering the ministry, he determined that the result of these weeks of labour should decide the point. At the end of the time there was no longer any doubt as to the appointed path, for not only had many been brought to a knowledge of the Lord, but a unanimous invitation to the pastorate of the church was given and accepted. This connection lasted nearly six years without anything to mar its usefulness, considerably over one hundred members being baptised

We next find Mr. Bradford as pastor of the church at Diss; but within three years his health broke down, and the way being opened he removed to Brixham, in the beautiful county of Devon. Here he laboured for five years, his congregation being chiefly composed of fishermen, on whose behalf he actively exerted himself.

In 1882, Mr. Bradford again removed, and this time to Northampton, where occurred those events which brought him into unwonted prominence as a bold and fearless preacher of the Gospel. By a unanimous invitation he became minister of the Princess-street Chapel, in that town, and for nearly two years all went well. There were many additions to the church, and a site for a new chapel and schools was purchased, nearly £600 being raised towards the cost. His subsequent experiences must be fresh in the recollection of most of our readers, and need not now be referred to at length. On the eve of an election, finding that several of the principal supporters of his church were working zealously for Mr. Bradlaugh's return as M.P., he preached a sermon on "Christian separation from the world," which gave great offence. Later on, as church meetings were being held with reference to that sermon, he again sounded the trumpet-call to Christian loyalty by preaching a sermon entitled "Who is on the Lord's side?" The next day the church by a majority of seventeen members passed a vote of no confidence in their minister, who determined immediately to resign. On the following Lord's day he concluded his pastorate of Princess-street Chapel with a valedictory sermon on "The judgment to come."

Of course this matter could not be hid. The outspokenness and faithfulness of Mr. Bradford in such a critical moment, and the heavy blow dealt at him by some of his previous friends became matter of public notoriety. A number of his old congregation waited upon him and urged him to remain in Northampton and form a new church. The committee of the Religious and Useful Knowledge Society, mainly composed of the clergy of the Established Church, granted the use of their hall in Gold-street; here, and subsequently also at the Mechanics' Hall, the newly formed church continued to worship, until on June 24, 1886, Union Church, St. Michael's-road, Northampton, was opened. It is a monument at once of the faithfulness of God to his servant, and of the union which exists among Christians, for it was largely due to the generous help received from members of all denominations, stimulated by the earnest, active efforts of the late Admiral Sir William King-Hall, that the building, which with site cost nearly £4000, was opened entirely free of debt.

To this rapid summary of events that cannot be forgotten by those who value truth and the bold utterance of truth in the face of foes, we need add little more. Sunday-school and other work are being vigorously carried on, and with such success that now a new building in which the schools can be held, is urgently needed. We earnestly hope that Mr. Bradford and his estimable partner in life's joys and sorrows may long be spared to carry on a work with which he is so conspicuously identified, and that they may have the happiness of seeing their children grow up and become as polished stones in the temple of the Lord.

AN EXPOSITION

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

"I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman."—John xv. 1.

We miss the forcibleness and the beauty of these words very much, because they are detached from those in the preceding chapter. If we go back a little, we shall find something to help us to see a new beauty, and to feel altogether a new force in them. Read verse 27 of the previous chapter, spoken at the same time:—"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe."

Think of the Master sitting at the last supper, with his disciples about Him, all except Judas, who had gone out into the darkness. Here the Master sits, and around are the signs of their simple supper; and now He says:—"Arise, let us go hence." They all get up, following the Master. He opens the door, and, perhaps, He stops in the doorway. The full moon shines down upon Him, and here is a vine growing up about the parapet, and as He sees it He seems to say:—"Look! I have told you I am going away. I am going down into the grave. I am going down out of sight. I am going away into the land of which you think as the land of the dead. But I am Divine. These vine-roots down there are in the grave, in the darkness; but because they are down there, these branches live up here. So, because I live, ye shall live also. Out of sight, I shall not, therefore, be cut off from you. I shall be gone away, but not, therefore, lost."

"I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit He taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit He purgeth (or cleaneth) it:" for this is the same word that is used in the third verse. We are apt to think it means pruning, as if the Lord got crops out of us by hacking with the pruning-knife. Pruning is needful, but the sunshine is better. You shrinking Christians who expect the pruning-knife, look up and expect the sunshine.

Verses 3 to 8 represent the conditions of discipleship, and that is just bringing us to the point I want to lay down and send home to our hearts, that Jesus Christ has not come into the world merely to save us from hell; to save our souls, as we say, and take us to heaven; but that Jesus Christ has come into this world and brought us into Himself as branches, that perishing world outside. That is what we want, to lose ourselves in the two ends; in the Christ end and in the world end.

"So shall ye be my disciples." I think our discipleship begins with the surrendering of ourselves to the Lord Jesus Christ to bear fruit. Fruit is the only thing the vine gives; everything else it keeps, and the vine has in itself the growth of years. We waste, but the peculiarity of the vegetable is that it saves. That which goes into it year by year it is perpetually keeping, and the functions of the leaves are to nourish. Everything tends to the vine, except its fruit; that is a gift, and that is what it is for. You can't make a pulpit out of a vine. You can't build a house out of a vine. If you don't get fruit, it is of no use. Cut it down. It is this accursed selfishness that is blinding us. It is so sweet to say, "I believe in Jesus, and I'm going to be very happy for ever in heaven." Are you? I very much doubt it, if that is all your religion. If I knew any language strong enough in which to talk about this selfishness, no words I could utter would be considered too strong. Christianity has become a hideous selfishness—a seeking to save our own poor little souls! I can only find one man in the Bible who started with "What must I do to be saved?" and he was a heathen, who did not know whether he had a soul to be saved or not! Paul starts with, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and depend upon it, until we get the "Thou" more fully in us, and are saying, "I am dead and buried; Christ lives in me," we have not got on the right lines of Christianity.

I find in this Bible far more concern about Christians living a Christlike life than anything else. If we have Christlike men and women, we have got a conquered world; but if we have a half-and-half Church, we have a stumbling-block over which the unsaved trip and fall into hell. We are gathered here, because we do want to know Christ's idea of the Christian. And here it is; it runs right through the whole Bible; I cannot open a page, but it stares me in the face. You talk about "election." What is election? "Predestination." What is that? Predestination is not that you should get to heaven; election, not that you should escape from hell. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate"—what for? "To be conformed to the image of his Son." Christ's likeness—that's the idea. If a man would just set it up, and say, "Now, then, the great purpose of all things—of the course of the Providence of God—of all things is that I should be made like Christ," and would give himself up to that, he would find the secrets of God's purpose in religion. But anything less than just accepting Christ must be a failure. Honestly, I want you to ask yourselves if, instead of curing your cares, religion is not about the biggest and heaviest of your cares? I think I can tell why. It is because you are aiming at one thing, and God is aiming at another, and you have got out of joint with Him. I don't care how much the engine puffs and pants, it cannot go sixty miles an hour if it is off the lines. Religion is an easy thing if God and we are working together, but it is a hard thing to work across the lines instead of going on the lines. Jesus Christ has come and laid down these lines, that we should be like Christ and that, through us, Christ should pour Himself out into the world about us. "So shall ye be my disciples."

CRYSTAL PALACE BIBLE STAND.—The statement contained in the annual report that nearly twenty million copies of the Scriptures, in thirty-six languages, have been circulated by this agency, about three hundred and forty during the past year, is itself of immense weight. Over a million copies have been scattered right through France since the Bible carriage was started there, and the story of the varied incidents attending this work, of the opposition sometimes met with, and of the gladness with which often the agent is listened to as he tells of Jesus, and confounds the priests, is of surpassing interest. Similar good work is being done in Italy, Palestine, Egypt, and elsewhere, compelling the exclamation, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." THE WITNESSING CHURCH.—1.

A MISSIONARY SERMON

BY THE LATE REV. JOHN HARRIS, D.D.

"Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God."—Isa. xliii. 12.

There is one important respect in which all objects in the universe, from the atom to the archangel, unite: all are witnesses for God. He who made all things for Himself, has so made them, that, voluntarily or involuntarily, according to their respective natures, they distinctly attest the Divine existence and character. He has not left it contingent whether they give such testimony or not. The great name of the Maker is inwoven into the texture of every thing He has made. So that even if the creature possess a will, and that will become depraved, and guiltily withhold its intelligent testimony to the Divine existence, an eloquent and incorruptible witness is still to be found in the physical constitution of that creature. If the fool should say in his heart, "There is no God," every pulse of that heart replies, "There is," and every atom of that vital organ adds, "He is thy Maker."

As the nature of the material witnesses differs, it follows of course that the matter in which they render their evidence will vary accordingly. In regard to some of them, the marks of design and beneficence are so obvious that they may be said to be ever speaking for God, without solicitation, —the Divine signature is visibly imprinted on their surface. In regard to others, the evidence lies deeper, and must be sought for patiently. In such cases, while the witnesses are under examination, while the investigation is proceeding from link to link in the chain of evidence, the ungodly sometimes unseasonably exult, and the timid and uninformed believer in revelation trembles for the issue. But he need not. Let him only wait confidently, as God does, till the examination be complete, till the inquiry has reached the last link of the chain, and that link will invariably be found in the hand of God.

Chemistry—once the stronghold of the sceptic—has long since discovered that no substance in nature is simple and unmixed; in other words, that every thing is in a made state — that even the atom is an artificial, manufactured thing: so that an argument for God lies hid in every particle of which the globe is composed; and a witness is in reserve in every pebble we pass; and a final appeal is lodged for Him in the elements or first principles of all things: thus demolishing the altar which scepticism had erected to the eternity of the world, and replacing it by an altar dedicated and inscribed to the Divine Creator. So that, if we hold our peace, or withhold our homage, the very stones will cry out.

Geology—the voice of the earth, the Pompeii of natural religion, the witness now under examination—a witness raised from the grave of a former world, is producing her primitive formations, to show that even they are in a made state, and her fossil skeletons, to show that they bear indubitable marks of having come from the hand of the one Great Designer: leaving us to infer, that, could we reach the foundation of the earth, we should find it inscribed with the name of the Divine Architect—that, could we penetrate to the central atom of the globe, it would speak for God; and thus impelling us to erect, out of the wreck of a former world, a temple to Him who hath created all things new.

amphitheatre of nature, to gaze on ten thousand times ten thousand burning worlds: and are they not all witnesses for God? For are they not all in motion? This is not nature, but miracle. The first miracle was the production of matter; the second, to make that matter move. Its natural state is rest; but here are unnumbered myriads of material worlds in motion, out of their natural state, in an artificial, constrained, preternatural state. They are all God's witnesses. The stars in their courses fight against irreligion. Each of them, obediently followed, is a star of Bethlehem — a guide into the Divine presence. Each of them rushes through immensity as a miracle and a messenger from God to the universe, proclaiming—"There is a God, and the hand of that God is upon me:" and all of them unite—yes, this is the real music of the spheres, the chorus of creation!—all of them unite in proclaiming his eternal power and Godhead. In the estimation of the Psalmist, the creation is a vast temple; and often did he summon the creatures, and join them in a universal song of praise. And John heard the chorus. The noise and din of a distracted world may drown their voices here; "But," saith he, "every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I, saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever." Thus nature, with all her myriad voices, is ever making affirmation and oath of the Divine existence, and filling the universe with the echo of his praise.

But since the period of the creation, a new state of things has arisen, and a new order of witnesses has consequently become necessary. Sin has entered the world. Man has fallen away from his Maker, and has renounced the Divine authority. To say, therefore, that there is a God, and that God is wise, powerful and good, is only to say, in effect, that there is ground for the greatest apprehension and alarm: for sin is a guilty impeachment of that wisdom, a hostile defiance of that power, and a wilful affront of that goodness. The question, therefore, now arises, what is the course which the offended Majesty of heaven is likely to take towards us? What, under these new circumstances, are the new terms on which we stand with Him? Will justice have free course against us? And, if not, what is to turn it aside? On this anxious topic, nature has received no instructions, and is silent. "The Depth saith, It is not in me." Clouds of gloom have gathered and settled into thick darkness round about his throne, and whether the light that will eventually burst forth from that gloom will be a fierce flash to scathe and destroy, or a genial ray to enkindle hope, nature could not foretell. By the introduction of sin, our condition had become preternatural, and the voice that speaks to us, therefore, must be supernatural. God must become his own witness.

And He did so. Breaking the fearful silence which sin had produced, and which might have lasted for ever, He spoke to us. And every accent He uttered was an accent of love. His first sentence contained hope for the world. He signified that it was his Divine intention to save, and announced, at once, a coming Redeemer. Then God is love! The great question is answered—the grand secret has transpired, that God is love! And the world must know it. The us has fallen—and, behold, "God is love!" And every creature under heaven must hear of it. The happiness of every man depends on his knowing it. "This is life eternal, to know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

But if the knowledge of the Divine character be thus indispensable, how shall that knowledge be made most accessible and available? As nations multiply, and one generation succeeds another, how shall this sacred treasure be preserved and transmitted? Depravity will tamper with its holiness; who shall guard it from polluted hands? Penitence and fear will question its truth; who shall encourage them to believe it? Unbelief will dispute its authenticity; who shall bear witness for God? All will need it, for it is essential to salvation; how shall it be made accessible?

Now these questions had been anticipated by the Eternal mind, and all these necessities provided for, in his purpose of instituting a Church, a society of witnesses for God. The design of this Divine institution, indeed, is twofold—partly to promote the welfare of its own members, but principally to be a witness for God, an instrument of his mercy to the world. It is first a focus, in which all the light from heaven should meet, and all the sanctified excellence of earth be collected and combined; that it might next be a centre whence the light of truth might constantly radiate, and pour forth in all directions over the face of the earth.

And, accordingly, the general remarks to which I would now solicit your devout attention relate to the following important positions:—

That the Church of God is expressly designed, in its relative capacity, and as the depositary of the knowledge of salvation, to be his witness to the world. That in every age it has prospered or declined in proportion as it has fulfilled or neglected this special office. That its motives and its responsibility for answering this end are greater now than at any preceding period of its history. And that this consideration should induce its members anxiously to survey its wants and its resources for answering that end: and may the Divine Founder of the Church be graciously present by his Spirit to aid our meditations.

Scutari Medical Mission.

Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian have now for some time been actively engaged in this work, and with very great blessing. No sooner was the dispensary opened than poor people of many nationalities began to attend, and the utmost gratitude was expressed by them, not a few saying that God had at last had mercy on them. One man thankfully exclaimed, "Lord, this is thine own work. Thou hast put it into the hearts of men to care for the poor." The dispensary is open three days in the week, Dr. Alexandrian visiting amongst the people on the other days. The good news of salvation in Jesus Christ is told to all the patients, and many seem more thankful for this than even for the medicine given to them. Bibles and religious tracts are accepted with delight.

Rev. T. W. Brown, Secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C., will give further information.

WORKHOUSE VISITATION.—A lady who for eleven years has visited a workhouse in North Lancashire on Sunday afternoons, and who also conducts an unlicensed inn which she would be glad to make more useful, seeks the help of some Christian workers. She could receive into her house, on very easy terms, some Christian people disposed to render such aid. The district is beautiful and healthy. Address Miss Remington, The H

TO OUR READERS.

THERE are somewhere about five thousand English-speaking missionaries in the world, and it is our great desire that every one of them should have the advantage of receiving The Christian regularly. For many years some of these have been on our own free list. One friend of missions instructed us to supply fifty Missionaries; and others a smaller number, direct from the Office. Many of our subscribers, after perusing their weekly copy, address it to some worker in the mission-field, with whom they are personally acquainted, or with whose address we have supplied them.

Letters have reached us again and again from Missionaries who have thus received The Christian, expressing their warm thanks, and telling how their hearts have been refreshed and cheered by its contents. An aged returned Missionary, connected with one of the leading Societies, was in the habit of posting his copy to a native English-speaking pastor on the East Coast of Africa, a man of considerable natural ability, who was thus kept abreast of the spiritual teachings and activities represented in the Paper. As in the future, native agency will be an increasingly important element in Missions, it is very desirable that native Christians who understand English should have the opportunity of being similarly instructed.

In our Register of English-speaking missionaries to whom The Christian is regularly posted, there are:—

65 Church Missionary Society.
75 London Missionary Society.
48 Wesleyan Missionary Society.
20 Baptist Missionary Society.
28 Moravian Missionary Society.
42 American Methodist Episcopal.
50 China Inland Mission.
14 Presbyterian.
76 Miscellaneous.

No doubt many more copies are sent out by our subscribers than we are aware of. We shall be greatly helped if all who are thus forwarding the Paper abroad will oblige us with the names and full addresses of those to whom they are sending it, in order that we may enter the details in our Register, and thus avoid duplication.

We append the names and addresses of the sixty-five Missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, with the initials of the parties who are sending them The Christian. We shall follow on, week by week, with the names of the Missionaries on our Register, connected with other Societies, until the list is exhausted.

Although we are continually adding Foreign Missionaries to our free list, it is impossible for us to carry out our desire to send The Christian to each of the five thousand, without the generous co-operation of our readers. But with the recollection of the hearty and grateful appreciation of the benefit, expressed to us personally as well as by letter, from brethren labouring, some in Europe, and others in the most distant and isolated parts of the world, we cannot but believe that our readers will cordially unite with us in conferring this benefit upon them.

INDIAN HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

The following is an extract from a letter by Miss Reade, of the South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission:—

Trivady, February 22.

How I long for a helper I can hardly express. If two could come it would be better, as it would then leave me more free to go to distant villages. If you only saw how I have to refuse calls made with tears to visit poor sick women, your heart would ache with mine. One feels it is like shutting an opened door. With difficulty I managed, in response to one call, to go to a village five miles off, but, the road being so bad, the sun was setting by the time I got there. I attended to the poor thing, when on coming out they literally brought their sick from all sides, and set them before me; even a blind man begging me to heal his malady. Through God's grace the woman recovered, and now from that village and neighbouring ones they are pleading

I say, "No, you must go to the hospital," when they reply, "No, we want you; only come and feel with your hand, we shall be satisfied." Think what it is to say, "No," for it is such an advantage gained, for them to seek Christian in preference to Government help, and opens the door to whole villages.

To celebrate the Queen's Jubilee, I took the children and the whole Mission out for the day. They stayed in the shade, near a neighbouring village, and I took advantage of the opportunity to do what I could, but I had to tear myself away to come home. Had I a helper, I would stay out for three or four or more days, and not only attend to whatever cases I could, but also thoroughly evangelise the place.

These figures may interest you:—South Arcot, Madras Presidency: Area, 4873 square miles, 76 Government-endowed Pagodas; 243 Mosques, and every village its own particular shrines and temples. THAMES CHURCH MISSION.—During last year 70,000 portions of God's Word, together with 690,000 Gospel tracts, were distributed by the Thames Church Mission, while more than 30,000 vessels were visited, and 5456 services held, at which 142,242 persons heard the Gospel of the grace of God. Such a work must be most valuable in its results, and leading shipowners testify to its success. A "Jubilee Thanksgiving Fund" has been established for the furtherance of these endeavours. Rev. H. Bloomer is the secretary, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

RECREATIVE SCHOOLS.—The work to which the Recreative Evening School Association has se themselves is of the most important social character Statistics show that 80,000 children leave the Lon don schools every year, and that only some four pe cent. of those, ranging from thirteen to eightee years of age, continue their studies at evenin classes. It is among this great army of youth th Association seeks to work. By means of ever conceivable attraction, of an elevating nature, the hope to draw them to evening classes, and so exert beneficial effect upon the ripening manhood an womanhood of our country. INSTANT SALVATION.

BY REV. DR. A. J. GORDON, BOSTON.

Some five years ago a messenger met me hurriedly as I was going out of church one Sunday morning, and begged me that I would go across the street to see a man who had sent for me, and who was said to be dying. I passed across the street, entered the sick chamber, drew near the bedside of the young man, who, as a commercial traveller, had been passing through the city, and was taken suddenly and seriously ill. As I took him by the hand I said, "You are very ill." "Yes;" and with a pitiful look he added, "the physician says I have but a few hours to live." I said, "Are you ready?" "Oh, no, no; I wish I had three weeks, and I could be ready." Said I, "My dear friend, let me show you that you only need three minutes in order to be ready, if you will do what God says." And then I opened the Scriptures, and showed him the Lamb of God, and how God had laid our sins upon Him; and I said, "Now the word is, 'Behold the Lamb of God;' look unto Him, even with your dying eyes—it is enough—and say, 'Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, have mercy on me.' Cast your soul on Him. I asked, 'Is that not plain?'" "But tell me how to do it." I said, "I will tell you." And so I turned to the tenth chapter of Romans, and read, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." "Now," I said, "do you receive Jesus Christ?" "I do, according to the best of my ability." "Then just open your mouth and confess it, and God says you can be saved." It was all done in a few brief moments. I went my way.

At six o'clock I returned, greatly anxious to hear from the young man. As I entered the house, I met the landlady. I asked, "How is he?" "He is gone; but," she added, "I wish you could have been here and seen him die. I never witnessed such a triumphant death. It was amazing. After you went out, he sent for my husband, who had been for years a backslider, and had not prayed." He sent for this man, and said, "I want you to kneel down by my bedside, and praise God that He sent a man that told me how I could be saved in three minutes." The poor man said, "I do not know how to pray." "But you must." And there, in spite of his protestations, he compelled this backslider to get down on his knees, to praise God that He had saved him in three minutes. It was a new life for him, as well as for the other. What did he do? Simply with his dying eyes saw the Lamb of God, believed on Him, confessed Him, and rested. That was all.

Six weeks ago I, as it seemed, very accidentally, was called to preach in a strange place, and went, much against my will, as I was so busy I did not see how I could go. In the course of my sermon, I related the story of the young man who had been saved in three minutes. On Saturday following, I was asked to attend the funeral of a man who had died, and, as I drew near the casket, and looked into his face, I said, "I know that man; I knew him fifteen years ago, when, week after week, his Christian wife used to rise in my meeting and request prayers for her husband. For years I have not seen him, but here I am called to attend his funeral." And while I was talking, a young man stepped up to me, and said, "I would like to see you a moment. I heard you preach last Sunday, and tell the story about a man who was saved in three minutes. When I got home I was so filled with it that I said, 'I will go in and tell this sick man.' I went in, sat down by his bedside, and just told the story as you had told it, about the young man who was saved in three minutes; and the grey-headed man said, 'That is remarkable, is it not? I think I could do that.' He did just the same thing; he confessed Christ, sent for his family, and they gathered around his bed; and there, with his dying breath, he,

And so God used that word twice, and I have told it the third time this afternoon. Perchance some careless one or some serious one—perchance some worldly one, perchance some thoughtful one—may just believe it, and in the silence of this hour lift the eyes to Him who hung on the cross, and is now on the throne, and say, "O Lamb of God, I trust Thee, I take Thee!"

DR. SOMERVILLE in the NORTH.

From an excellent descriptive account in a recent issue of the North British Daily Mail we extract the following:—

Dr. Somerville has lately returned from the North of Scotland after having completed the fifth section of the Highland mission, which, as Moderator, he undertook at the request of the General Assembly. This last has been considerably the longest, and in some respects the most laborious instalment of the work which has engaged him since the middle of July. He began operations in Nairn on January 12, and continued without cessation through the counties of Inverness, Ross, Cromarty, Sutherland and Caithness till February 27, when he ended at Wick. Several days were devoted to the town of Nairn, the fishermen and the children receiving special attention. The country charges of the Presbytery were also visited. In the town and in some of the villages the services have been wisely followed up by special series of meetings. News has come that meetings have been continued daily in Nairn for seven weeks, and that persons of all classes have been influenced.

Inverness enjoys so many privileges in the way of mission services that it was deemed expedient not to tarry long there, but rather to spend time in districts possessing fewer advantages. Services were conducted around Inverness, in the romantic Glenurquhart, at Bona in the Great Valley at the end of Loch Ness, at Daviot in the boulder-strewn Strathnairn, at the low-lying Petty by the Moray Firth, and Kirkhill on that of Beauly. Services were also held at such remote points as Fasnachyle and Struy. Who can calculate the benefit of such visits to these outposts of the Church where Popery has for centuries held sway, or the cheer and stimulus thereby imparted to the hearts of the ministers labouring summer and winter in these solitudes, so far removed from the influences which conspire to help their brethren in the towns? In no country in the world is there, we believe, such a thirst for the preaching of the Word of God as in the Highlands of Scotland. This was conspicuously exhibited by the concourses that assembled to hear. It mattered not whether the service was held in the Roman Catholic district, as at Beauly (Beaulieu); among a scattered crofting population in the middle of the day as at Urray; on very brief notice as at Maryburgh, situated at the mouth of the fair Strathconan; amid torrents of rain as in the plain country church of Fodderty (Strathpeffer); or in the handsome structure at Dingwall, the county town of Ross, the multitudes that gathered to listen to the Gospel from the lips of a stranger were astonishing. In the last-named town a vigorous Y.M.C A., on which the visit of Mr. Moody to the district twelve years ago is telling to this hour, is doing excellent work in and around Dingwall.

The Black Isle, as the peninsula is called which lies between the Beauly and Cromarty firths, is made up of scraps of three different counties. It derives its name not from black Prelacy of ages past, as might be supposed, though that flourished around the Cathedral of Fortrose, and has even left traces of its existence in the name of the Presbytery, which is Chanonry, but from the vast pine woods with which it was covered, and which in winter stood out in deep black when the expanses of Ben Wyvis and the region around were clad in garments of snow. This district was in former days blessed with household words all over the Highlands. Around Redcastle clings the memory of Mr. Kennedy. Ferintosh will ever be remembered as the parish of Dr. Macdonald, the Apostle of the North. Resolis was, last century, the scene of the labours of the famous Hector MacPhail, who, after his conversion, resolved never to pass anyone on the road without speaking to him of salvation, and whose life was in consequence filled with a multitude of remarkable incidents. In all these places, as well as at Munlochy, Fortrose, Avoch, and Cromarty, where the tall monument of Hugh Miller, geologist, and editor of The Witness, overlooks his native town, large and interesting congregations were met with and addressed. In addition to services at Alness, Rosskeen, Kilmuir, names which, like many others, are known only in consequence of their association with the eminent men of God whose spheres of labour they were, a religious conference was held at Invergordon, over which Dr. Somerville presided. As this was the first gathering of the kind ever held north of Inverness, it attracted much attention, and representatives of distant Highland regions assembled, some from the west coast, others from Skye, and several from remote Lewis.

Passing northwards through a remarkable rich country a halt was made for a service at Fearn, where stand the remains of the abbey of which Patrick Hamilton, the protomartyr of the Scottish Reformation, was for a short time abbot. Two evening meetings and one at noon were held at Tain, where the numbers in attendance gave evidence of the Gospel ministry long enjoyed in that town. Bonar Bridge was crossed, which spans the narrow river-like strait to which the Dornoch Firth is reduced, and east Sutherland was entered.

On the Lord's Day the fine new church of Dr. Aird, at Creich, was filled with a congregation drawn from the scattered population of the immense parish. Pressing onward, Dr. Somerville visited Rosehall, in the beautiful Strathoykell; and thereafter Lairg, at the extremity of the long Lochshin; Rogart, surrounded by granite mountains; Dornoch the county town; Golspie with the princely Dunrobin Castle hard by; Brora with its coal beds and strange double row of glacier moraines, and Helmsdale with its fishing boats, its salmon river, and its not far distant gold washings; in all of which the truth was preached to the assembled congregations. After this the mountains and picturesqueness of Sutherland were exchanged for the flat moors, treeless farms, and monotonous flagstone fences of Caithness. Thurso is a well-built, clean little town. It rose to prosperity upon the trade on flagstones, which that interloper the concrete pavement has of late seriously injured. It enjoys the rule of a chief magistrate, whose devotion to the affairs of the burgh is equalled by his warm sympathy and activity in a higher cause. It was a delight to see him on Sunday conducting a large class of young men, and to find what an influence his countenance and support imparted to the vigorous Y.M.C.A. Dr. Somerville addressed the two congregations in the town.

Unwilling to be outdone by the capital of the Highlands, Thurso determined to show the value it attached to the Mission by a public breakfast to Dr. Somerville. Different denominations were represented; among others the excellent minister of the Established Church was there to express his pleasure at the services he had attended. Dr. Somerville has had the gratification in many places of the presence at his meetings of ministers of the Established Church. It can easily be understood that the labour of visiting all these places, to say nothing of the open-air driving at this season, has involved a considerable strain, and has not been without its effects on the Moderator. All the North has now been overtaken, but there remains still a considerable portion of the work to be accomplished before next Assembly.

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

MR. GRATTAN GUINNESS'S LECTURES.

VII.—A COMPREHENSIVE VIEW.

The concluding lecture of the series was a very remarkable one for width of scope and lucidity of treatment. The rapt audience was treated to a bird's-eye view of the whole course of Jewish and Christian Church history, heading up the more partial studies of the previous weeks. The deepest attention was accorded to the lecturer, as he rapidly passed from point to point, and as he finally dealt with the objections of the Futurist school. The fiery anathemas pronounced on the Satanic system of Rome, and the call to stand clear of her before the hour of her destruction arrives, were frequently interrupted with bursts of warm approval, and the lecturer closed his survey of the subject amid a tempestuous and long-drawn-out storm of applause.

The topic of the evening, as formally stated, was the "Double Foreview of the Reformation afforded by Old Testament Types and New Testament Prophecies." First of all, Mr. Guinness showed the wonderful correspondence between Jewish and Christian history, both as to apostasy and reformation The prosperity of the Jews under David and Solomon was quickly followed by a process of national declension, under Jeroboam and Manasseh, and other monarchs, because of the growing idolatry of rulers and people. Well-known passages were cited from the historical and prophetic Scriptures, to show how universal this idolatry became. This national relapse was punished by God in the captivity of the people in Assyria and Babylon—a prophetic type of what befell apostate Christianity in later centuries. Here the lecturer intervened a graphic portrayal of "the exact and extraordinary resemblance between this apostate Christianity and the Paganism of which it was a virtual revival":—

> Had paganism its temples and altars, its pictures and images? So has popery. Had paganism its use of holy water, and its burning of incense? So has popery. Had paganism its tonsured priests, presided over by a Pontifex Maximus, or sovereign pontiff? So has popery; and it stamps this very name, which is purely heathen in origin, upon the coins, medals, and documents of the arrogant priest by whom it is governed. Had paganism its claim of sacerdotal infallibility? So has popery. Had paganism its adoration of a visible representative of Deity carried in state on men's shoulders? So has popery. Had paganism its ceremony of kissing the feet of the sovereign pontiff? So has popery. Had paganism its college of pontiffs? So has popery, in the college of cardinals. Had paganism its religious orders? So has popery. Had paganism its stately robes, its crowns, and croziers of office? So has popery. Had paganism its adoration of idols, its worship of the queen of heaven, its votive offerings? So has popery. Had paganism its rural shrines and processions? So has popery. Had paganism its pretended miracles, its speaking images, and weeping images, and bleeding images? So has popery. Had paganism its begging orders, and fictitious saints? So has popery. Had paganism its canonisation of saints, as in the deification of the dead Cæsars? So has popery. Had paganism its idolatrous calendar, and numerous festivals? So has popery. Had paganism its enforced celibacy, its mystic signs, its worship of relics? So has popery. Had paganism its cruel persecution of those who opposed idolatry? So has popery. Was paganism satanically inspired? So is popery. God overthrew paganism; Satan revived it—but God shall destroy that unlawful revival, and sweep its hateful presence from the earth. He will destroy those who have destroyed his temple, and rebuild that glorious structure which has been destroyed in yet greater and more enduring glory.

Then followed a vivid sketch of the noble witness against the Jewish idolatry prevalent in their day, borne by the prophets, especially Elijah the Tishbite. In how many and wonderful respects was he a type of the witnesses of later times—his boldness and courage, his sufferings and persecutions, his uncompromising spirit, his isolation and faithfulness, his glorious fiery rapture. The Christian witnesses were branded by every evil and reprobate name, besides being most foully persecuted. "Read Foxe's 'Acts and Monuments of Martyrs,' if you desire a full account of the lives and testimony of these faithful witnesses against Antichrist, and of the sufferings they endured in the cause of truth

Mr. Guinness passed on to a comparison of the Jewish and Christian Reformations. The return of Judah from Babylon, he said, introduced a glorious civil and religious reformation, in the three-fold restoration of the people, the temple and the city. The Reformation of the 16th Century was a glorious return from anti-typical Babylon and a restoration of the Church to that earliest condition from which she had departed. It also was a triple work, in the emancipation of multitudes from spiritual captivity, in the restoration of the doctrine and fellowship of the Christian Church, and the institution of reformed civil governments. This comparison and analogy led Mr. Guinness to assert that the moral judgments which are applicable to the Jewish apostasy and reformation are equally so to the parallel Christian movements. To approve either apostasy is to approve the work of sin and Satan; to condemn either Reformation is to condemn the work of Divine providence and grace. The enemies of the Reformation are the enemies of God.

Turning from the types to the prophecies of the Reformation, Mr. Guinness contended that the vision of Rev. x. and xi. is to be interpreted as applying to the movement of the sixteenth century. The taking of the little book from the hands of the angel, like the eating of the roll by Ezekiel, was symbolic of a reception of God's revelation into the heart in order to telling it out afresh. The Reformation was a new unfolding or revealing of the Word of God so long hidden away and kept from the people. This point was developed by Mr. Guinness in some detail, and with much ingenuity, the dicta of Mr. Elliott being quoted in support of the view that the Reformation was pre-figured in this apocalyptic vision. The lecturer closed this division of the lecture as follows:—

> The Reformers opened the long-closed Word of God; they fed upon the Word themselves; they translated it into the vernacular tongues of Europe; and they proclaimed its contents to the nations and rulers of the world. The apostasy of the Church was foreshadowed and foretold. The Reformation of the Church was foreshadowed and foretold. Both were typified in history and foretold in prophecy. The light of both Testaments converge upon them, and in that light the Reformation is seen to be, not the work of men, but the work of God, his glorious action, quickening, emancipating, and purifying his Church, and giving back to the world the priceless treasure of his holy Word.

The remaining portion of the lecture was devoted to a vigorous inquiry as to the futuristic objections to the historical view of prophecy, and answers to these objections. Many alternative interpretations, said Mr. Guinness, have been proposed, but the only point of agreement among them is the point that all alike are incapable of proof, as they simply consist of dogmatic assertions as to the future. The only way in which Futurists can overthrow the well-based Protestant interpretation is by pointing out discrepancies between the prophetic delineation and the Papal fulfilment. Some argue that the Biblical Antichrist must be an individual man, not a dynasty. To that we reply that though the Antichrist is called the Man of Sin, and spoken of as an individual, so also is the Apostate Church spoken of as a woman, and yet no one supposes that we refer to any individual. Kingdoms and dynasties are in Daniel personified as individual beasts. The complexity of history and the brevity of prophecy combine to make this method inevitable. Again, it is alleged that the Biblical Antichrist is an open enemy rather than a false friend—an allegation based on John's statement that "he denieth the Father and the Son." This does not necessarily convey the idea of atheism, but rather of one who corrupted the cardinal truths of the faith. Teachers of false doctrine are Antichrists, and the greatest teacher of false doctrine will consequently be the greatest Antichrist. Mr. Guinness devoted a considerable space to the question of the ten kingdoms, which, he said, is rightly regarded as a crucial point in this controversy. He contended that the tenfold division of the Roman Empire, in its Western or Latin division, which alone could be regarded as the territory represented by the fourth beast, has been distinctly traceable all fall of its imperial power. While the actual number of kingdoms has constantly varied with the shifting of events, the average number has been ten from the fall of the Cæsars to the present day. The ten enumerated as now existing were Italy, Austria, Switzerland, France, Germany, England, Holland, Belgium, Spain, and Portugal. The prophecy indicates also that the ten kingdoms, amidst which the little horn was to arise, should for a time come under its sway, and afterwards revolt against it. This has actually come true in the case of almost every European kingdom that has been allied with Rome. "Our gravest controversy with Futurism," said Mr. Guinness, in closing this part of his inquiry, "is because it relieves Rome of the stigma branded by the Bible on her brow, and brings the sacred prophecies of Scripture into contempt by groundless speculation about things to come, instead of investing them with awful majesty by humbly demonstrating their fulfilment in the records of history."

After briefly summarising the chief points dealt with in the course of the lectures, Mr. Guinness referred in strong terms to the great increase of Romanism in this country in recent years:—

> Rome is breaking down, with alarming rapidity, the barriers which have hitherto blocked its way to political ascendancy in this kingdom; and its doctrines, practices, and principles are being fast introduced into the bosom of the Protestant Church. Ritualism is already firmly established there, and is gaining in strength and numbers day by day; it is Romanism in disguise, and the highway to Romanism undisguised; its altars, its mass, its images, its robes, its incense, its sacerdotalism, its confessional, its absolution, are papal—not Protestant; it is a traitor in the camp, a foe in disguise, a false and fatal system, a smooth and dreadful rapid leading to the abyss.
> Here is a book containing the names of 3000 perverts to the church of Rome, nearly all English, made since the commencement of this century, and the number of perverts is variously stated at 50,000 to 100,000. Here are the names of persons of all ranks, from the highest nobility downward, persons of education and influence, ensnared, all of them, by this subtle system of Paganised Christianity.
> There is no mistaking the meaning of all this; Ritualism and Romanism boldly avow their objects. "What, we would like to know," says Ritualism, speaking through The Church News, "what has the Church of England to do with the spirit and principles of the Reformers, except to get rid of them as soon as possible? We have nothing to do with such a set." Cardinal Manning plainly says, representing the objects of Romanism in England:—"We have to subjugate and subdue, to conquer and rule an imperial race...to bend and break that will which nations and kingdoms have found invincible and inflexible. Were heresy [that is, Protestantism] conquered in England, it would be conquered throughout the world; all its lines meet here, and, therefore, in England the Church of God [that is, the Church of Rome] must be gathered in its strength."
> To this end, they are pouring in upon us their priests and Jesuits, their monks and nuns, multiplying in our midst their churches and schools, their colleges, monasteries and convents; to this end they are wielding the machinery of the Press, weakening and corrupting the State, perplexing and poisoning the minds of the people. They are plotting everywhere and seeking to subvert the political order of the world, that they may subject everyone and everything to their own power and purposes and ends.

Mr. Guinness concluded this remarkable deliverance in the following eloquent terms:—

> Open your eyes, ye deluded people; ye slumber while the powers of the pit invade your inheritance, and enslave your children whom ye cruelly neglect. Look at those 232 conventual institutions erected in this country since 1829, with their fifteen thousand females kept by bolt and bar "under the sole and irresponsible guardianship of unmarried priests." Those convents have their walls, their cells, their dungeons, their grated windows, their revolting penances, their private graveyards, their falsified inscriptions, their secrecy and seclusion, their priestly confessors, their concealed seductions, robberies, immoralities, and crimes. What are many of them but brothels for the priests? And ye suffer it, and make no inspection, and pay for the support of the popish system. Ye endow the Papal college of Maynooth with your tens of thousands, and flood the land with its infected priests, and help on the dark conspiracy, and rivet the chains of delusion, and hand over the people of your charge to murderers and hypocrites clothing themselves in the garments of Christ, that they may do the deadly deeds of Antichrist. £1,200,000 per annum is the sum wherewith ye endow the Papal apostasy for your own undoing. Ye are preparing the instruments of death, and paving the way of millions to bottomless perdition. Ye sow the wind and shall reap the whirlwind. Ye are ripening the land for revolution. Beneath you there are pent-up fires; the cracks and fissures are fast filling with molten lava; there is the trembling of coming earthquake, and the swift approach of social cataclysm. The day of the Lord hasteth, and your wealth and luxury, your towers and palaces, shall be as stubble for the flame. Rome must perish, and the world shall quiver when it falls. Stand clear of her; leave her to her chosen and predicted fate. "Come out of her, my people," saith your God; separate yourselves, lest

Sodom, so shall God's judgments descend on Papal Babylon, and, in one hour, all her glory, her beauty, her wealth, her splendour, her triumphs, her idolatries, her tyrannies, her delusions, her usurpations, her blasphemies, her abominations, her cruelties, her bloodshed, and her crimes, shall perish from the earth, and leave a smoking gulf to tell the tale of the dread destruction of apostasy, and the glad deliverance of an emancipated world.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Guinness for this brilliant series of Lectures. This was eloquently seconded by Mr. William Johnston, M.P., and the audience spontaneously rose to their feet in response. The Lectures are in the press, and will shortly be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

The prize examinations were held at Exeter Hall yesterday (Wednesday).

LETTERS FROM ROME.—6.

Since writing my brief Letter 4, with reference to the importance of teaching the Gospel to the children of Italy and other Roman Catholic countries, I have read the two last reports of the "Italian Evangelical Schools in connection with the Free Christian Church in Italy." These more than corroborate what was there said. The report for the past year opens thus:—

> There has never been a time in which evangelical schools were of such absolute necessity in Italy as at the present moment. Never before has the need of these Institutions been so widely felt, as the best means of providing the children of our converts with a sound Christian education, which may keep them, in later years, from falling victims to unbelief, and also as the only way of saving them from the pernicious influences of the Jesuit and Government schools. The latter are generally taught by masters of atheistic or materialistic tendencies, and are the moral ruin of a large part of the rising generation in Italy.
> This is certainly no time for closing evangelical schools, but rather for opening others in all the towns, where we have churches. The priests and Jesuits are well aware of the importance of this branch of our work, and this is the reason of their constant attacks on our schools, and on the children who frequent them.

The fact that the priests and Jesuits are more bitterly and vehemently opposed to Protestant schools than to any other kind of Christian work is sufficient evidence that this is the most effective form of evangelisation. Rev. Ludovico Conti, of Rome, writes:—

> The policy of the Vatican has been to prove that Protestant schools could not exist in the capital of the Catholic world; so, with many efforts, and means which the Vatican alone possesses, a keen war has been waged against the evangelical schools to destroy them all. Thus the Waldensian school, the Baptist school, Mr. Van Meter's school, and Dr. Taylor's American Mission school—have all been suppressed. The only evangelical school remaining is that of the Free Italian Church, and it is not to be wondered at if the priests, elated by their former success, concentrate all their forces on this institution, in the hope of extinguishing it also. Last year I mentioned in my report how our school is being beseiged by Catholic ones in our neighbourhood, so as to shut us in on every side. I may now add that another school has been opened by the nuns of St. Joseph in Via Coronari, in which street there are now four instead of three Catholic schools. . . . The priests become daily more audacious and interfering.

Notwithstanding this, however, these interesting reports give numerous instances in proof of the hold which the Gospel takes on the mind of a child. It is a great cause of encouragement to remember that the truth in Jesus is the natural food of the soul, that which God has designed for its nourishment. The Gospel therefore has a great advantage over Popery, and all other forms of error. Rome says, "Give me the children until they are seven years of age, and they are mine for ever." How much more ought evangelical believers to spare no pains or expenditure in order to secure the children during those inestimable years. Signora Marini sends this little story from Turin:—

> The only daughter of a poor porter has attended our Institution for four years. Her father's master, who is in close communication with the Jesuits, prohibited the girl from frequenting our school, at the risk of being dismissed. However, the girl entreated her father to find another situation, where the master would not oblige her to leave the school, where she had learnt to love Jesus. Another girl, while reading the Bible one day, was asked by a student, who boarded with her aunt, to give him some explanations. She did her best to do so, and often came to me to get more light, so as to be able to answer all the questions of her inquirer. At last the student decided to study the Word of God for himself. A third girl was surprised by a neighbour while reading the Bible, who reproved her for having to do with dangerous and forbidden books. The child replied, "On the contrary, it would be well for you if you read this book too, because it is the Word of God which saves us." Truly, we can say here with the Psalmist, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, Thou hast perfected praise."

God is on the side of all such work as this, and although the hundreds under evangelical instruction are few compared with the thousands under Romish or materialistic influence, yet, if God should raise up one Luther from among them, how richly will all the labour spent upon them be repaid.

I have often wondered, while hearing even Christian travellers speak of the scores of Romish churches they had visited, and the innumerable other sights they had seen, that so few of them relieve their wearied eyes and minds by getting their hearts interested in the work for Christ going on around them, but of which they make no inquiry. The report before me closes with this:—

> Special Request to Christian Travellers in Italy. —Please do yourselves and Italy the great favour of visiting these schools. You have no idea of the treat that awaits you. You will be greatly pleased with the cleverness of the children, and especially with their musical and elocutionary gifts, and it will encourage the self-denying teachers, as well as deepen your own interest in the work. Thursday, in Italy, is a holiday, when the schools are usually closed.

Rev. John R. M'Dougall, the honorary secretary and treasurer, to whom the consolidation of this work is chiefly due, is now in Scotland in delicate health; the report has many affectionate allusions to him personally, and testifies to the high appreciation of his work.

There are many other Christian schools in Italy, all of which are preparing the way of the Lord in the hearts of the coming generation, and all of which will prove of deep interest to any who may visit them.

A CHEERING WORK.

A very cheering and encouraging work has been carried on for the last month at Waltham Abbey, Essex. The Vicar of the Abbey feeling keenly the great need of a spiritual awakening in the town, commenced to hold a mission service in the school-room one evening a week. These services were very encouraging, and friends suggested the holding of a special mission. This was agreed upon, and the Evangelisation Society sent down evangelists for a fortnight's meetings. The meetings amply repaid the friends for holding them, as the school-room would at times hardly hold the numbers who came to hear the simple Gospel message.

The Vicar and his curates, delighted at the interest created, determined to continue the services another fortnight, but in the Abbey Church. For this purpose, Rev. James Stephens, of the Church Parochial Mission came, and proved to be just the right man. Now it was that the harvest of souls began. The body of the church was filled with some five hundred attentive listeners night after night, and in the after-meetings frequently there were some seventy to one hundred persons remaining.

Throughout the whole of these blessed meetings there was a perfect spirit of Christian unity. Nonconformists attended the services, and united in prayer for a blessing. Arthur Cook.

AFRICA via AMERICA.

THE NEGROES OF THE SOUTHERN STATES.

Dear Sir,—A few words from this part of the world may be of interest to some of your readers, and draw attention to an inviting field of labour. It is a new Gospel route to Africa viâ America. If we can gather in the negroes in the Southern States, we have the labourers that will be best suited for Africa. Not a few have already gone from this side of the Atlantic to Africa, and more are being prepared. But the great need is help for the freedmen of the South themselves, and thus at present any worker going from here to Africa is weakening the force already so feeble.

After the emancipation of the slaves, the only men to lead the negroes were those who had in slavery times led their devotional exercise—themselves slaves and uneducated. When the ties that had bound the slave and his master were snapped asunder, these coloured teachers, though ignorant, were preferred by the people, and this has continued until, in more recent years, an educated coloured ministry is entering into the field.

The moral and spiritual state of the American negroes is very low, but during the last twenty years has made rapid progress. They are very impressionable, and where education and judicious training have had their influence, the strides made are wonderful. The South affords abundant evidence of this, and near here is a standing proof of what can be done—in the school for Indian and coloured people at Hampton, under the praiseworthy management of General Armstrong, a Christian philanthropist. From this school teachers are sent to the schools and educational establishments in the South.

A coloured congregation forms a thoroughly responsive audience, though many of the pastors are ignorant men, with little or no Bible training. Two meetings have been held here of the leading white pastors and laymen to confer on the formation of a coloured Young Men's Christian Association, and an Industrial School. The latter movement depends much upon the right man to take it up; and we are waiting on the Lord for guidance.

The United Presbyterian Church has an excellent school here, with an average attendance of five hundred pupils. This school is under the principalship of Rev. Dr. Wallace, a highly cultured and spiritually minded Christian. We have been favoured with a visit from Mr. Richard Allen, of Dublin, who has been working amongst the negro people in North Carolina and Virginia with great success.

What a field! and what a problem! The negro is increasing in the proportion of seven to four whites, and what this means in the near future who can tell?

My object in writing is to draw attention to a sphere of labour the most promising I have seen for some time. The sore feeling against the North is dying out, though, unfortunately, it lingers longer in Norfolk than other places. But English people can work with freedom amongst the coloured folk.

Should your readers require any information that I can give, I will gladly reply to any inquiries addressed to me at Charleroix, Michigan, U.S.A.—Yours fraternally,

Norfolk, Va., U.S.A. Jos. S. Smithson.

TRACTS FOR FISHING VESSELS.—Mr. J. F. Macfarlane, writing from Stornoway, says that, having for the past year or two been doing a little tract distributing among the herring fishing vessels during the season (middle of April to end of June), he would like this year to do so more extensively and systematically. With this object he invites the co-operation in prayer and effort of a few Christian workers. As there is a very large concourse of people during the fishing season, the field is a very wide one, and a great number of tracts, both in English and Gaelic, might be readily distributed. Tracts (which will be thankfully received) and all communications should be addressed to Mr. Macfarlane, Parochial Board, Stornoway, N.B.

THE NOONDAY HOUR of PRAYER.

INCIDENTS OF WORK IN CHINA.

At the Aldersgate noon prayer-meeting Mr. C. H. Judd, who has now left for China, recently gave some interesting particulars of missionary work in that land. "Where is your chapel?" he was sometimes asked. "Under the blue vault of heaven." Here more often than elsewhere he preached. Most of the places where they preach in China are shops—empty because supposed to be haunted. It is only when for this reason the Chinese will not occupy them that they are let to Christians. Such places can be hired for two or three dollars a month, so that much expenditure on buildings is not necessary.

There is no need, he said, to give free breakfasts to get people to listen to the Gospel in China. A Christian has but to go and begin preaching and a crowd will soon gather. Sometimes we go into the tea shops, and, laying out some books on the table, begin to speak of Jesus. "Who is He? What is Jesus?" many at once ask. And then we tell them the Gospel story. Conversation being opened up and freely engaged in, those who wish more information are invited to the missionary's house. In that way more work is done than if we had great buildings.

Many times our means have been nearly exhausted, but God has never allowed us to want. On one occasion, when there were twenty people in the house to provide for, and when we had scarcely any money left, a woman came and asked, "What do you do when you have no money?" "Why do you ask that?" was the reply. Then, taking out six or seven dollars, and putting them on the table, she told how she had had a dream, and had been bidden to bring all her money to the missionaries' house. She had brought every farthing she had.

God has given much blessing in souls being brought from darkness to light. In Yangchow, a city of 360,000 inhabitants, with four or five sisters labouring in it, we heard of a poor farmer who, during the famine, had been staying there. After some months' stay, having meanwhile learnt about Jesus, the Saviour, he went back to his farm, one hundred and fifty miles in the interior. There he became the means of spiritual blessing, and, hearing there was a missionary in the city, he sent a message that he would like to have a visit from him. Going by way of the Grand Canal, we passed thirty-three towns and villages in a straight line on its banks.

At Tsing-kiang-gu, the last place touched at before striking off from the canal, there is an opium refuge. A man called one day and said he wished to become a Christian. He was told he must first give up opium-smoking. This usually takes at least three weeks, even with all the help of medicines and other aids. Sometimes men may be seen in the streets suffering great agony as a result of trying to break off this habit. But in this case the man was perfectly cured in three days, and this entirely in answer to prayer. Though the pain came on badly on the second day he still pleaded in prayer, and his trust was rewarded.

Arrived at the village, thirty miles further on, where the farmer lived, Mr. Judd said he found the man was away from home. "The frost preventing work, he has gone to preach the Gospel in the villages round," said his wife. Men need never be out of work if they use their spare time in God's service. But, having come such a long distance to see him, Mr. Judd asked God to bring him back. Whilst talking, a number of the people gathered round, and one or two said, "There's so and so, he believes in Jesus." And to the questions then addressed to boys who were pointed out, "Do you believe in Jesus?" four or five replied most beautifully, "Oh, yes; I believe in Jesus, He has taken my sins away."

came back, and in answer to the question, "What brought you back?" he said, "This morning something seemed to say to me, 'Go home.' Being so impressed with the feeling that something had happened, I packed up my bed and came off home." In this man's little mud house, about 10 feet long, 7 feet high, and 6 feet wide, eighteen persons presently assembled to worship God. After singing "Jesus loves me," they went to prayer. A young boy began, the others following on according to their ages. As he listened to these boys pouring out their hearts to God, thanking Him for having sent the Gospel to their country, and for having revealed the Saviour to them—there was more praise than prayer in the petitions—the tears coursed down his cheeks in gratitude for what God had done.

On his way back he called upon a native Christian who had been suspended from fellowship. Immediately on entering a Chinaman's house, you see at once his religion. In front of a tablet recording his ancestors' names is a figure of Confucius, if he be a Confucian, or of the god he worships. Just before him, as he entered this man's house, were the Ten Commandments, with a Gospel text on each side. Entering into conversation with his old mother, seventy years of age, he asked, "Do you believe in Jesus?" "Why, yes, He is my Saviour." "Who told you?" "My son told me; of course he did," was the reply. In the course of his visit, three young men, farmers in the neighbourhood, came in, and these, besides the young man's brother and sister, were all clearly converted to God—they had found the Saviour. This work had been done during the period of suspension, and he recommended that any who were doing nothing for God should be proved in some similar way. In conclusion, Mr. Judd pointed out that the number of Christians in China had increased eighty-fold during the last thirty-three years. If the increase had been only forty-fold in London there would not now be one unconverted man left in this city!

DR. ZIEMANN ON GERMANY.

Tuesday is still the usual day for foreign reports, and many deeply interesting statements are made by workers from widely scattered fields. Last week Dr. Ziemann spoke of what he had recently seen and experienced in Germany. We need, he said, to recognise that the work is God's, and to follow his leading, without being tied down to routine in the doing of it. The short, pointed report in Acts ii. puts it thus, "The Lord added to the Church daily such as were being saved." We often discover the very romance of missions in watching how wonderfully God furnishes the little links that lead from one thing to another. This study gives me courage in making fresh experiments in his work. We want to break the bonds of our formalism. On one occasion at Dusseldorff, I was led to put aside a prepared address, and speak simply to the people. Whilst doing so I referred to the sinner as being condemned already, and asked "What does the condemned man need?" A lady in the audience was not able to repress her feeling, and she burst out with the answer, "Mercy, mercy!". The formality was broken throughout. From that day onward there were anxious souls.

In Berlin wonderful changes have taken place. God prepared the way in a remarkable manner. A gentleman in high position was led, in the providence of God, to hear Lord Radstock, and was greatly blessed. Then an officer, who had been wounded and lost a leg, was also brought under the saving power of the truth, and he fills an official post where he has ample leisure. He has great gifts and much energy. Then Mr. Schluembach was led to Berlin, and was owned of God in rousing up these two men. It is delightful now to go to Berlin, and see how God has prepared a spiritual agency for the carrying on of his work. There are some, both men and women, who stand in high places, and who meet together for prayer five times a week, because they feel their dependence on God, and their absolute need of his help. They come together to learn more of God and his ways, and He blesses them. No class in the city is neglected. The street-sweeper, the cab-driver, the night-porter, the baker—these and other classes are brought under the power of the Gospel through the consecrated efforts of those men and women.

One of the latest and most interesting works in which I have taken a part is in Roman Catholic Bavaria. I am told that country is hardly touched by the Gospel, but there is a very open door. A young medical man has an appointment in the Government Laboratory in Munich. What he saw at a students' supper in Berlin was so repulsive to his natural instincts that he was led to seek for something higher, and accepted an invitation to a Y.M.C.A. meeting that had been handed to him. There the Lord laid such hold on him that when he went back to Munich he established a Men's Christian Association there, and gives much of his time to the Lord's work. I went to Munich, and it was carnival time, when everyone seems to go mad. Crowds thronged the streets, and there was a general license of conduct. At first, we thought it was the wrong time, but we pleaded hard with the Lord, and we got a beer hall in which to hold meetings. The attendance was better than we could have expected. I got introduced into the students' club, and an official invitation being sent out, they came in large numbers the first evening. They had their usual beer, and cigars and pipes, but when I proposed that they should choose between the beer and the addresses, they chose the latter, and gave me the most solemn attention. When I go back to Germany I shall have an open door amongst the students. They are divided up into clubs all over the country, and one corps will give me an introduction to another.

Dr. Ziemann stated that he had also visited a city on the Rhine, the residence of many retired millionaires. It was thought there would be no possibility of getting meetings there, but again God opened the way, and on the first evening there were between 3000 and 4000 men present. For fourteen days he held meetings, for women in the afternoon, and men in the evening, and he was privileged to see some conversions. The great hindrance in Germany, he said, is religiousness. The people are not infidels, but they make religion their God, instead of God their religion. Still, there is much cause to praise God for what He is doing, and also to ask that more labourers may be sent to Germany.

A German paper, referring to Dr. Ziemann's meetings in Munich, says:—"At the last meeting the head of the Bavarian Church, his Excellency von Stählen was present, who at the close of the meeting made a warm speech. He said that what he had heard took from his mind many prejudices and touched him deeply; he fully believed that such decided Christian men coming from England would be a blessing in Germany. He felt bound to express to the Doctor his thanks, and give him the hand of fellowship."

CHINA PRESBYTERIAN MISSION.

More than forty years ago the Presbyterian Church of England sent its first missionary, Rev. W. C. Burns, to China; and, in a recent pamphlet on the history, methods, and results of this Mission, much is said of the wonderful changes that have since been wrought. Much of the growth of the Mission is traced to the careful way in which native agency has been fostered, and to the idea always kept in the front, of planting in China a church really and truly Chinese.

There are now in China five fully-equipped hospitals under the charge of this Mission, and in them about 20,000 patients are attended to every year. A great many of these patients have become Christians. Five native pastors are entirely supported by their own congregations. There are altogether eighty native preachers and fifty students of theology. Besides these, the Mission has sixteen ordained, and seven medical, missionaries, with two missionary teachers, while the Women's Missionary Association has also seven agents in the fields. During the past year more than 200 adults have been added to the membership, and every other item is a record of progress. Copies of the interesting pamphlet may be had at 14, Paternoster-square, E.C.

THE THOUGHTS of the HEART.*

By Dr. ALEX. WHYTE, Edinburgh.

Bunyan, describing his state of mind when he had begun to be religious, writes:—"As for secret thoughts, I took no notice of them." Yet he regarded himself as good as any man in God's sight. He had reformed in language and conduct to such an extent that his neighbours looked upon him as a godly man; but of that inner world of thought into which real religion penetrates he took no knowledge. This neglect of secret thoughts is one of the marks of superficial and hypocritical religion.

All human life may be reduced to the three categories—thought, word, and deed. The wisest men can tell us little about the mysteries of thought. Max Müller has published an eagerly expected book on the science of thought; but in it he throws little light on the birthplace, region, and scope of thought.

Many men take no notice of their secret thoughts. Solomon said truly, "The fool's eyes are at the ends of the earth." You have read the newspapers to-day, and been three times to the club to see the telegrams. You stop your friends at the street-corner to ask them, "What news from St. Petersburg? From the Riviera? Anything more about dynamiters?" And all the time your soul is honey-combed with the dynamite of evil thoughts. You are anxious to get to the bottom of Lord Salisbury's or Mr. Gladstone's thoughts. Begin at home. Get to the bottom of your own thoughts. Gossiping newsmonger! though you neglect your thoughts, God does not neglect them. He will judge you by them. It is difficult to judge men by words and works—though we do it—because these words and works get into the tangled skein of other men's words and works. But it is different with your thoughts. They are your own, and by them you stand or fall.

Noticing our thoughts is difficult work. Our minds are so constituted that they go out through the senses, and hold such traffic with things sensible that it is hard for us to turn the mind back on itself. The number of our thoughts perplexes us. If we had but one a day, we could haul it to judgment, and beat it black and blue in the face, till it would be ashamed to show itself again. But they come in a mad dance like the snow-flakes that fell on our streets to-day. Whence they come, what their errand, and what their value, God only knows. Thoughts rush in on me so quickly that I am confused. The noisomeness of my heart—a strange expression to use, but a right one—makes my head giddy, and forces me to grasp the stanchions of the street railings for support, as I go along. I try to notice my thoughts when I rise in the morning, but before the clothes are on my back, their number is a burden, and before my hands are washed, my heart is unclean. I can only cry, "Search me, O Lord, and know my thoughts, and lead me out of them."

There is a necessity for taking notice of our secret thoughts. We are told above all our keeping to keep our hearts. Why? Because the heart is the workshop of thoughts. We must watch our thoughts because sins spring out of them. Goliath the giant was once a babe who could be carried on a woman's arm; so the biggest sin in the world was once a thought. A vain thought was the origin of all the woe of this woful world. Daughters of Eve! beware of vain thoughts. Thomas à Kempis traces thus the process of a sin:—First, the thought; then the picturing of it in imagination; then the delight of rolling it as a sweet morsel under the tongue; then the sin in action. Luther said, "I cannot keep birds from flying over my head, but I can keep them from building under my hat." We cannot keep evil thoughts from entering our minds, but we can, and will, please God, keep them from hatching their viperous brood in our hearts.

But, in the presence of much to discourage, we have one thing to encourage us. God knows our thoughts. This seems strange comfort; but it is a real comfort. If God did not know my thoughts, I could not tell Him what I am. We honour the decrepit creature, maimed and disfigured by his father's sins, who strives to be good and pure; and God is pitiful to me in the midst of the nausea and corruption of an inherited nature.

Another comfort is that amid all the objects of thought, we have God to think of. We are strengthened by the knowledge that we are to be like Him. The key to the mystery of God's patience with our wicked world is that he has a work of sanctification going on in the hearts of his people in it, and that He will bring them from the dunghill to the heights of holiness. The resurrection morning is worth a millennium of sorrowful struggles with sin. To know that then I can think without harsh, selfish, sinful thoughts flying out! It is joy and inspiration. I can sit at the hole of asps in my mind, and kill the cursed creatures as they come up, for the sake of the day when I shall be like Him, and my thoughts are as his thoughts.

AN IMPORTANT DISTINCTION.

EVANGELISATION CONSEQUENT ON REVIVAL.

In common speech these two very different kinds of meetings are confounded. It is quite true that where there is a revival of religion there is usually evangelistic work; but it is possible to have a revival without doing much or any evangelistic work; and, on the other hand, it is possible to do much evangelistic work and see no revival of religion, except as there may be a reflex influence of either kind of work on the other.

For instance, we have recently been informed of an extensive ingathering of souls into the different churches of a certain small city in the state of New York, as the result of evangelistic services. In all the churches continuous meetings have been conducted by the pastors, aided by such occasional help as they could secure. As a result, several hundred men, women and children were converted, and added to the Church. This is what is commonly called a revival; but as a matter of fact there was almost no sign of a revival in the town. The churches were cold and dead and worldly during all the time of this ingathering. Little interest was taken in the meetings by the Church members. On the contrary, it is notorious that many of the leading members never went near the meetings, and fewer still took any active part. The simple fact was, that the pastors, unsupported by the church (except that faithful few who keep the altar fires burning in all the churches), were diligently evangelising among the unconverted men and women and young people of their congregations, and among the non-church-goers.

By and by the pastors sent for an "evangelist" to come and help them. He came, and after preaching one or two days to the unconverted, assuming that "evangelistic work" was what was needed, he discovered that the Christian people who (because he was a stranger) came out "for to see" and hear, were almost totally indifferent and without spiritual interest. Inquiry brought to light that the churches, as such, had not been in the least moved by the evangelistic work which the pastors had been doing. A conference of pastors with the evangelist resulted in this conclusion: "What is needed most of all and above all in this town is a revival of religion. The Church needs to be brought back from backsliding, and from living according to the course of this world, and recalled to prayer and consecration."

Accordingly, the evangelist, while he did not fail to give "sinners" an opportunity to accept Christ at the close of his evening preaching services, bent his work toward the church. A course of afternoon services was held, in which duties and privileges of believers were set forth; much heart-searching truth was brought to bear upon them, and their former course of worldliness was unsparingly condemned, and its evil effect upon the individual life; and the Christian testimony was faithfully but lovingly pointed out. This course soon had its effect. Christians began to soften and show signs of repentance and amendment; confessions of past unfaithfulness were freely made, and many Church members, who had never known any assurance as to their justification, were enabled to see Christ as a Saviour as never before. The business-men of the town were called together, and after conference decided to close their stores and shops during the evenings of the week and attend the services. This was never done before, and indicated a great advance in religious interest. Then the Christian women organised in committees of two, districted the town, went forth and visited every family and all the places of business.

"Surely," every one said, "there will be a great awakening among the unsaved now;" but strange to say, the previous interest among the unconverted apparently came to an absolute end; no appeal of the evangelist seemed to have the least effect upon them. This state of things began to stir the Christians still deeper, and they began to pray and plead for sinners; but still no impression; indeed, the unconverted seemed as determined to stay away from these meetings as the church members did from the former ones. Nevertheless the services went on from night to night; the great truths of the Gospel were preached with faithfulness and great plainness; the work among Christians deepened with every day and every service, but no break among the unconverted occurred. It presently began to be said by one and another, "There seems to be an utter failure of converting power in the meetings; but there is no doubt in the world that there is a genuine revival of religion among us." This state of things continued for two weeks: the people of the town had but one general topic of conversation—the meetings—and all expressed surprise that they were not "more successful," meaning by that, that so few people were converted. They could not understand it, nor the stolid indifference of the impenitent, when the preaching seemed to go home with mighty power to the hearts and consciences of God's people.

The truth is God was reviving his people. It was not a time for evangelisation, but for revival. The latter end of the meeting made demonstration of that, for at last, when the people began to agonise in prayer and weep over their own sins, and cry out to God for the salvation of their unsaved friends, there came a break in the ranks of the unsaved, and one night, after many refusals of the Gospel invitations, one man gave himself to Christ, and then one by one, sinners—men, women and children—came out from the congregation, and made confession of faith in Jesus, from the highest to the lowest in the town.

This was evangelisation in connection with revival; and this, it seems to us, is the great work just now needed in our churches—a genuine revival of religion among professors of religion, with conversions from the world, as a reflex result of such revival. Let us have revival meetings as well as evangelistic meetings, and let us encourage revivalists to work among the churches, as well as evangelists among the non-church-going people. Together, such work and such workers will, under the blessing of God, bring great refreshment to our land.—New York Independent.

CENTRAL VIGILANCE SOCIETY.—This Society, formed in 1883, seeks to form local associations for the carrying out of its well-known objects, the attainment of which is of vital importance to the well-being both of families and the nation. Christian men and women, having the welfare of the State at heart, are invited to join its ranks. It is only by such facilities for co-operation as the Society affords that the duty of invoking and applying existing laws to meet the terrible evils about us can be properly performed. All information may be obtained of the organising secretary, Mr.

HOMES AND HAUNTS OF JESUS.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS

BY MISS L. M. VON FINKELSTEIN.

The inhabitants of Bible lands are divided into three distinct classes. First, there are the Bedouin tribes, sons and daughters of the desert, or Ishmaelites, who live in tents. Second, there are the fellaheen, or farming population. Third, there are the town people—those who live in walled cities, such as Jerusalem or Damascus. There is a certain similarity between them, and yet there is a marked difference, both as to dress and the ways of living. To-night we shall speak of the life of the farming class of Palestine—our country people—for it was among them chiefly that our Saviour had his "homes and haunts."

On the platform we have a representation of a home interior in our Palestine villages of to-day. If you enter one of these homes you will not find armchairs with spring seats, and all the luxurious furniture to which you are accustomed in your English wealthy homes. A low divan, or cushioned seat, runs along the back of the room. There is a carpet, and among other things in the room you will find the hand-mill for grinding corn, such as the one we have here. The people have different kinds of garments for different occasions. One such as I have now is composed of red, green, and yellow materials, and is generally worn by the women on holidays or feast days. A dress of dark navy blue is used by them when working in the fields. In some parts of the country they wear a white dress, like my young lady friend here. If you were accustomed to the dress of the people you would know at a glance that my head-dress is that of a married woman. Round my neck, also, there is a chain of silver, with ten silver pieces attached to it. That shows at once that I am a married woman. You see what an advantage we have: we can always tell who are married and who are unmarried, by their dress.

This young lady friend, dressed in white, is attired like a shepherdess. No doubt Rachel was attired in the same way in the olden time. This gentleman, in the green dress, represents the high priest of the village; green is the sacred colour of the Mohammedan, and is supposed to be emblematical of eternal life. My brother is dressed like our village shepherd. No doubt Joseph and David, and those shepherds who watched their flocks by night on Bethlehem's plain, were attired exactly in the same way.

Let us now take some illustrations of our village or country life. I do not confine my illustrations to the Old Testament, but will take them from both, to show how they correspond and harmonise with each other. You recollect that Gehazi was sent on a message by his master, Elisha, and he was asked to salute no man by the way. Some of you may have wondered why it was that when Jesus sent out seventy disciples, two and two, he told them to "salute no man by the way." There are people calling themselves infidels who choose to bring this up as an argument against Christianity. I once heard an infidel lecturer in America, and he was referring to what he called the exaggerations of the language of Jesus Christ, ridiculing many of the sayings of our Saviour. "Why," said he, "Christ actually told his disciples to do that which was ungentlemanly and discourteous, 'Salute no man by the way.' Suppose one of your great teachers or divines, walking down the street, were to meet some friends, and he turned up his nose and refused to salute them; or suppose he were to teach that people were not to be civil to one another, what would you say?" Of course many of the people who were listening me that he did not know what he was talking about. He was ignorant of the manners and customs of our land, or he would not have dared to make such a remark.

What did our Saviour mean? The reason of his injunction was that it takes a very considerable time among the Orientals to get through the ordinary forms of salutation. You are going along the road, perhaps, and you see some one, or perhaps a party, coming in the opposite direction. You salute them, "Who goes there?" and the reply is, "I am so-and-so." On meeting they embrace each other, and then sit down by the wayside. After more formal greetings, they begin to ask each other about their welfare, about the health of all their relatives and friends, about the chieftain of the village, about the crops, and a great many other things. Thus a good deal of time is consumed, and, as the same process is gone through with every party that is met, hours may be passed in this way. Time is not so precious out in the East as in these Western lands. Therefore, when we see anyone going along the highway who does not stop to go through these forms of salutation, we know at once that he is a messenger charged with some special mission or message to deliver. People will run up to him, and simply ask what is the news; he will answer shortly, and go right on. And so the command of Jesus to his disciples proved that they were sent out on a special mission, and they were not to waste time in going through the forms of salutation that were so common.

These forms of salutation help us to understand the parable of the Prodigal Son. It is said the father saw him afar off, ran and fell on his neck, and kissed him. How did the father know him in the distance? When the son went away he was dressed in gorgeous attire, but when he returned he was clad in the dress of a swineherd. No doubt when the father saw someone approaching he called out, "Who goes there?" Then the son would reply, in the beautiful words of the parable, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." The father recognises the voice of his lost boy, and, though he is so meanly clad, he runs to him, embraces and kisses him, and makes for him a feast, as we read in the New Testament.

The farming houses in Palestine are not built as yours are in this country. They are collected in villages, and built close together. The streets are not much wider than the aisle of this church, so you can judge how close the houses are to each other. In well-to-do villages they are two stories high, and built of stone. In other villages they are composed simply of mud. The roofs are flat. On the beams is laid a quantity of brushwood, and above that a layer of plaster. The villagers live to a large extent as one family. As a rule they intermarry, and are thus all related to each other more or less closely, and take an interest in each other's welfare.

If you go into one of these villages, especially a little later in the season, at the time of the feast of the Passover, you will see upon the doorposts of the houses the impress of an open hand, in red. This is no meaningless symbol to the dwellers in the Orient. It is to them the emblem of the protecting hand of God. It recalls to them the time in Egypt when Moses told the people to put the blood of the sacrificial lamb on their doorposts, as a sign that the hand of God would protect the household, and the firstborn would not be slain. Till this day, at the Easter time, the father or the eldest son slays a lamb, and the mother or the eldest daughter takes the basin of blood, dips her hand in it, and impresses it on the doorposts, saying, "In the name of God most merciful, may his hand protect my household." She then goes into her room, and impresses it on her corn-mill, and other things in the house.

Many of these customs are kept up by the women. And, as little is known of the life of the women of Palestine, that is the reason why some of the passages of Scripture alluding to their home life are obscure, and not easily understood, even by those who visit the Holy Land. The traveller or explorer in Palestine is under disadvantages. He cannot speak the language of the country, which is Arabic, and he is, therefore, dependent on a dragoman or interpreter. As a rule, he is an uneducated man, and he is so accustomed to being asked all kinds of questions that he has got stereotyped forms of answer for them all. Moreover, many of the dragomans are Roman Catholics, and you cannot expect much true information from them. Then, again, the male traveller cannot go into the homes of the people, and it is in the women's apartments that you mostly find the impression of this red hand. After a child is born the mother will dip her hand in the blood, make an impress upon the child, and say, "May the hand of God rest upon you." The child is then and there consecrated, or set apart, unto the Lord, and he is brought up with the idea that he must devote his whole life to the work of God. Everybody looks upon him as a holy child, and he possibly grows up to become the priest of the village. The prophet Nehemiah probably alludes to this custom when he says, "The hand of my God which was good upon me." Probably his mother had dipped her hand in blood, and he bore the impress of it all through his life.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, April 3, Luke xxii. 24—38; Monday, April 4, Luke xxii. 39—53; Tuesday, April 5, Luke xxii. 54—71; Wednesday, April 6, Luke xxiii. 1—12; Thursday, April 7, Luke xxiii. 13—26; Friday, April 8, Luke xxiii. 27—43; Saturday, April 9, Luke xxiii. 44—56.

FRENCH FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Paris Committee have definitely decided to begin a mission on the right bank of the Congo, where the French possess about 300 miles of country, inhabited by numerous heathen tribes. Nearly 20,000 francs have been received towards the extinction of the Society's debts. In conjunction with Christian teaching, the Society hopes to add something to the scientific knowledge of Africa, and to this end the "French Association for the Advancement of Science" has granted it a subvention. Three men, well-fitted by a course of scientific and practical training, are on their way to join M. Coillard on the Zambesi, and these have been provided with some good instruments.

In Lessouto, the chief Lerothli has been entreating the missionaries to send a teacher to his country; after some consideration, M. E. Mabille has been deputed to found a station at Makeneng, a fortress of Paganism.

Lapoko, the only son and heir of the chief Massoupa at Thaba-Bossion, has drunk himself to death. Notwithstanding some earlier cruel massacres, Lapoko gave promise of better things, so this event is a great disappointment; it is likely to occasion many difficulties and complications which may materially affect the little church. Although drunkenness has decreased to a very large extent by the suppression of the brandy depôts, yet the young chiefs managed to procure the spirit from outside, and Lapoko was unfortunately one of these. There are but few conversions, but many renegades, especially men, have returned. The desire for another Pentecost is great among the missionaries.

The Industrial School at Kuting is developing very satisfactorily; farming is taught, stock kept, &c., while Gospel work takes the first place among the thirty pupils.

Pastor Brun says drink is the great plague at Afareaïtu, in the Pacific Isles. Intoxicating liquors are made from oranges; the people are constantly drunk, and they are not ashamed of it. The chief, who was about forty years of age, has just died, "burnt up with alcohol." His counsellors are almost as drunken as he was. The fruits of this are deplorable.—Journal des Missions.

SUNDAY POSTAL LABOUR.—As Dr. Clark's motion for relieving postmen of Sunday labour is deferred till April 19, friends of the Lord's day all over the country are urged to continue to obtain signatures to the petitions, and especially to write to M.P.'s, asking them to support the motion for releasing the letter-carriers from Sunday labour. Petitions, &c., will be sent on application to Mr. Charles Hill, Secretary, 13, Bedford-row, W.C.

A COMPLETE "CRUDEN" for 3s. 6d.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the OLD & NEW TESTAMENTS.

This Edition is COMPLETE and unabridged.

It has all the Words and References that were given in earlier and far more expensive Editions.

It contains 757 pages,

2,270 closely-printed columns, and about

250,000 references, with the Proper Names newly Translated by a competent Scholar. (This portion of the work is strictly COPYRIGHT, and can only appear in MORGAN & SCOTT'S EDITIONS.)

PORTABLE EDITION. 3/6

"'CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE' in a well-bound and conveniently-sized volume issued at 3s. 6d., seems one of the marvels of modern book production. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's portable edition is of this class. There has been copious controversy on the merits and demerits of Cruden's great work; but we prefer to believe in Lowndes's opinion that 'Cruden's Concordance should be in every library.' It is uncommonly complete, the definitions of leading words remarkably accurate, and the references exceedingly correct."
Publishers' Circular, March 15, 1887.

"The best cheap edition of 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE' that we have seen is the one published by Morgan & Scott—a portable edition, clearly printed on good paper and well bound, unabridged, and with the proper names newly translated, all for 3s. 6d. Even the poorest Christian may now have a Concordance to help him in studying the Word of God with profit."
Christian Leader, Mar. 17, 1887.

Mr. C. H. SPURGEON writes:—"Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. We could very well dispense with a Concordance to the Apocrypha. As in all other respects it is an unabridged Cruden, I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS and CONSUMPTION.—TWO CASES REPORTED by Rev. THOMAS GRIFFITHS, of ABERTILLERY, nr. Newport, Mons.

The patient was a young man, at Abertillery, named LEWIS PRITCHARD, of King-street. The friend who corresponded with me on his behalf was Mr. John Down, of King-street.

In the first statement of the case, it appears that the patient had suffered for two and a half years with cold, which, in process of time, brought on a troublesome Cough, which increased, with purulent expectoration, severe pains, spasmodic breathing, perspirations, and decline of strength.

It was several months before there was any decidedly manifest improvement—(I say manifest, because there may be improvement going on in the condition of a patient's lungs unknown, until there comes a sudden visible evidence thereof). But at that time he got rapidly stronger. Then general improvement took place. He continued under my treatment for over twelve months, when he was fully restored.

I have just received a letter from REV. THOMAS GRIFFITHS, who knew the case well. He says: "Mr. Pritchard suffered from Bronchial Asthma, which developed into Consumption. His left lung had become affected. He had sought relief from six eminent medical men. He derived no benefit, and was persuaded to seek your valuable advice, and Mr. John Down wrote you on his behalf. He is now in comparatively good health, and is able to follow his profession without interruption. His cure is considered marvellous by the neighbours."

"There is a young woman [Mr. Griffiths continues] both of whose lungs were pronounced gone, but she took a course of your medicine, and is now in good health. Her case is also truly a wonderful case. Wishing you continued success in the relief of human suffering, I am, yours sincerely, Thomas Griffiths."

THE CATACOMBS OF ROME.

IN a second lecture, in Paris, on this subject, Professor DELAUNAY said the symbolism and inscriptions were all silent witnesses to Jesus and the resurrection. The new life and light of the believer were indicated by the "lamp" and its "light," often found on the tombs with the "palm branch" of victory. We find a list of names in Romans xvi., many of which may be found in the catacombs—Junia, Apelles, Herodion, Rufus, Hermes, Julia, and others. The philosophers and sages of Greece and Rome had often debated the question whether there was a hereafter—a future state—and this question was answered in the affirmative by the Christians, in the amphitheatre and the catacombs. These Christians had everything to lose, and nothing to gain in this world by their faith in Christ, and yet they preferred death to apostasy.

A remarkable instance of the convincing power of the martyrs' deaths was the conversion of Gaudentius, the architect of the Colosseum. Vespasian ordered him to build a vast theatre, capable of holding 80,000 spectators sitting, for the spectacles of combats between gladiators, and the martyrdom of Christians. This great structure cost rivers of gold, of blood, and of tears; it was eleven years in building. Vespasian died before its completion. Titus opened the Colosseum, and intended to make Gaudentius (who was a Greek) a citizen of imperial Rome. Upwards of twenty Christians were crucified on this occasion, and their bodies, smeared with tar, formed the torches, to light up the horrid scenes of Christians devoured by hungry lions. Young and old, men, women, boys and girls, made a good confession of Christ by shedding their blood, their aged pastor, in the midst of the crowd, offering a last prayer, and exhorting his flock to stand fast in the faith. Titus held forth the civic crown to Gaudentius, and was about to place it on his head, when, to the amazement of all, Gaudentius (struck by the fortitude of the Christians) refused it, crying aloud, "For I also am a Christian." "Away with him to the lions," said Titus; and the clever architect of the Colosseum was thrown then and there to the wild beasts! This was illustrated by two splendid paintings of the Colosseum, and the incident above narrated.

Now began a general persecution of the Christians, who (like the heroes of Hebrews xi.) fled to the "dens and caves of the earth." A terrible storm of persecution swept away Christianity from the surface of the world, but it found a refuge under the ground. Some of the chapels are 50 feet, some 150 feet below the surface. The word "martyr" is not found on a single tomb; no parade was made of sufferings and death. We find flying doves with palms, emblems of the victorious spirit flying up to God. The bodies of the dead were laid, reclining, on shelves. The Pagans burned their dead, because they did not believe in the "resurrection of the body;" the ashes were preserved in urns, and deposited in niches—hence the burial places were called "Columbia," doves' nests.

The Professor showed a portrait of "Paul, Servant of Jesus Christ, Apostle of the Gentiles, elect vessel," found in a staircase in the catacombs. (These openings for air and light were called "luminaria.") Paul is represented as bald (he shaved his head at Cenchrea, having a vow), and with white hair, and long pointed beard, light blue eyes, appearing to be inflamed and weak; he bears a sword, the instrument of his martyrdom. Tradition says he was buried in the catacombs. Through the openings dead bodies of martyrs and food were let down.

A magnificent Mosaic profile of "Jesus of Nazareth" was shown; it bore the date of 125. It resembled a profile of Rehoboam, found in Egypt in a pyramid. The countenance majestic and decidedly Jewish, the nose aquiline, the eyes dark brown, hair chestnut brown, hanging in ringlets on the neck, reminding one of Josephus's description of Jesus—one would say

Stone pulpits were used, in which the preacher sat, whilst the people stood; they could not well go to sleep in those days. An entire Epistle was read, not a portion, as now; there was no division into chapter and verse then. They were "mighty in the Scriptures," and, having no other book to study, were mightier than we are now. A stone pulpit was shown, stained with the blood of a martyred bishop, who was run through with a lance by a Roman soldier, and all his people dispersed or slain. The preacher read from parchment scrolls (no books then), and pointed to "Chrisma," the name of Christ. He prepared and fortified his people for their martyrdom. Here we find no prayers offered to or for the martyrs—only praises to Jesus, "who giveth us the victory." Everywhere it is Christ risen, not Christ dying on the cross. There were no coffins; the bodies were wrapped in white linen; all have a palm branch. For three hundred years the Church in the catacombs was a "Smyrna" Church (Rev. ii. 8), preaching and testifying by their blood, they were "faithful unto death" (verse 10). Millions were "butchered" (in the Colosseum) "to make a Roman holiday."

The Divinity of Christ—his Deity, we may say—was the foundation doctrine of the Early Church. The churches had no rest until A.D. 314, when Constantine the Great marched against Maxentius, the tyrant of Rome, placing ☧ on his standards instead of the Roman eagle. "In this sign" he "conquered," and Maxentius was drowned in the Tiber. Alas! Constantine united the Church and the world, and paved the way for the Roman Apostasy.

May we at last be able to say, with holy Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7: "The time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

[Professor Delaunay's address is 3, Rue Thiboumèry, Vaugirard, Paris.]

A POEM

Written by a Canadian lady after hearing Professor Delaunay's lecture, in which he said, "Miles after miles of graves, league after league of tombs, and not one word or sign of the gloominess of death."

Miles after miles of graves,
League after league of tombs,
And not one sign of spectre Death,
Waving his shadowy plumes;
Hope, beautiful and bright,
Spanning the arch above;
Faith—gentle, overcoming faith,
And love—God's best gift, love.

For early Christians left
Their darlings to their rest,
As mothers leave their little ones
When the sun sinks in the west;
No mourning robes of black,
No crape upon the doors,
For those victorious witnesses
Who trod the golden floors.

Arrayed in garments white,
No mournful dirges pealing;
Bearing green branches in their hands,
Around the tomb they're kneeling;
This was their marching song:—
"We're not by death's arms holden;"
And this their glorious funeral hymn:—
"Jerusalem the golden."

Beauteous girls sleep there,
Waiting the Bridegroom's call;
Each lamp is burning brilliantly,
While the night shadows fall.
And baby martyrs passed
Straight to the great "I AM,"
While sturdy soldiers carved o'er each:
"Victor: God's little lamb."

Miles after miles of graves,
League after league of tombs;
The cross upon each conqueror's brow
Lights up the Catacombs.
"'Tis in this sign we conquer,"
Sounds on their blood-stained track;
"'Tis in this sign we conquer,"
We gladly answer back. H. A.

THE BEST WAY to forget self is to remember

OUR SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—There is a very wide field for real evangelistic work among the thousands of Englishmen in the British army in India. What a power for good our soldiers in India might prove, were they also soldiers of the Cross. Our hearts are cheered and comforted so much when we meet with truly Christian men in the different regiments. As I look back upon twelve years of life in India some of my happiest thoughts centre around men in the army, to whom we have been made a means of blessing. When the 92nd returned from Candahar, I went round the hospital at Cawnpore, and met with men to whom I had often preached. One had lost a leg, another was very sick, and others were sad. We wept together, and now trust that the seed then sown will have borne fruit ere this.

That evening we had such a nice meeting. Some of the brethren got chairs and lights, and we occupied a room in an empty house, where it is said the Nana was indulging himself during the terrible massacres at Cawnpore, in 1857. At the close of this meeting some professed to find the Lord, and some present at that little meeting fell in the fatal fight of Majuba Hill.

I might multiply the instances of men who found the Lord, and witnessed a good confession. While going round the hospitals visiting the sick and distributing tracts, one evening I was drawn towards a young man who had a fine countenance. We entered into conversation. I soon found out that he was a Welshman; his father was a minister. He had been in College, but drink caused him to enlist; now eleven months had elapsed, and his friends did not know whether he was dead or alive. I wrote to his parents, telling them that their son was still alive. A letter, which reached me in due time from the grateful father and mother is now among my most valued documents. This young man signed the pledge, soon began to rise in the service, and when last I saw him was paymaster-sergeant in his regiment.

Another was the grandson of one of our best preachers in Wales, whom I met at an impromptu temperance meeting in a barrack-room. These are our own countrymen, our neighbours' children, the boys of our Sabbath-schools, with hearts ready to open to a kind word. There is a grand field for Christian work among our soldiers in India. In many stations they are deplorably neglected, and it is no wonder that many of them become a power for evil by their godless example. Can no systematic effort be put forth, by sending devoted men out as evangelists who will have this as their special work? It will help us, who have more than we can accomplish, in bearing witness before the heathen of the land. Some of our most energetic missionaries were at one time in the army. Would there not be many more if they were only sought out?

THE CHRISTIAN is seen and read by our soldiers in Agra. Some kind friend sends it to me weekly. It is sent to the reading-room of Havelock Chapel, and thence to the hospital.—Yours, in Gospel bonds and fellowship, DANIEL JONES, Missionary.

Agra, N. W. P., India.

AMERICAN COLLEGES AND MISSIONS.—The work which two Princeton students, Messrs. Forman and Wilder, are now doing in arousing missionary interest among the educational institutions of the country is worth noticing and watching. Their efforts are the outcome of Mr. Moody's College Convention at Northfield last summer, at which, in view of the intense missionary zeal there kindled, these gentlemen were appointed to visit the colleges and seminaries. Sixty such institutions, from Maine to Iowa, have already been visited, and over one thousand names have been secured to the pledge, which reads, "I am willing and desirous, God permitting, to enter the foreign missionary work."—Boston Congregationalist.

MISSION TO THE KANAKAS.—An effort is now about to be made to preach the Gospel amongst the South Sea Islanders employed on the sugar plantations in Queensland. In the Bundaberg district alone there are about 2000 of these people, but until now there has not been a single missionary to the Kanakas in all Queensland. A difficulty arises from the fact that often there are natives from more than a dozen islands on one plantation, and these all speaking different dialects. Hence, it will be necessary to teach them in English, which most of them know something of. We learnt that a missionary, Mr. C. F. Johnson, has just been appointed. Miss F. S. H. Young (hon. sec. and treasurer), Fairymead, Bundaberg, Queensland, will be happy to give any further information that

HOW TO HELP THE POOR.

About ten months ago, a lady who had been walking in company with a friend about the neighbourhood of Victoria Docks, feeling tired, sought a place for rest and refreshment. The one or two coffee-houses she could find presented a most uninviting appearance. Presently thoughts of her own need were forgotten in the unaccustomed sight of hundreds of men streaming along the main thoroughfare, that here for a considerable distance runs along side by side with the railway. Black and grimy and weary after a hard day's work, they had poured forth from the dock gates, and now they also sought refreshment. Where were they to go? The answer was very soon given, for into the large gin-palaces that there stand so conveniently open numbers of men swarmed, until once more the streets had regained something of their wonted quiet. Our friend's thoughts had now been turned in another direction.

Full of the question, "Is there no other place to which these men can go?" she and her companion followed the men into the public-houses, and entered into sympathetic conversation with them. "Where are we to go?" was their reply, the force of which no doubt lies in the fact that they live at a distance from their work. "We have stomachs as well as you; if you will tell us where to go, we shall be only too glad." "Well," was the welcome and unexpected answer given by the lady, "if there is no other place for you to go, there ought to be, and you shall have some place as soon as possible."

Such was the account given by Lady Louisa Ashburton of her visit to the East-end ten months ago, and its result in the opening of the coffee-house which bears her name. This event, which H.R.H. the Princess Mary of Cambridge graced with her presence, took place on Monday of last week. The house is situated almost immediately opposite the Custom House Station of the G.E. Railway, and has been carefully adapted for its purpose. The coffee bar, with accommodation for about one hundred persons, is on the ground floor, and, with the kitchen on the same level, has been fitted with the most improved appliances and machinery. On the floor above is a large room which may be divided by means of a revolving shutter, and which will be used for evangelistic meetings, reading-room, and other similar agencies, and on this floor also are dormitories, private apartments, &c.

The address to the Princess Mary, which was read by Mr. Dunn, of the London City Mission, set forth the necessity for such an effort, not only to provide wholesome and cheap food for the thousands of labourers employed in the docks, but also for their mental and religious culture. This necessity was very strongly emphasised in the few remarks made by Rev. Canon Scott, Vicar of West Ham, who said that the suburb with its 160,000 inhabitants, a vast working-class population, and 6.000 men employed in the docks, was unlike any other in London. At the conclusion of the proceedings, the Royal visitor going outside, speaking to the large crowd of people, declared the building open. A few minutes afterwards Alderman Phillips announced that a tea would be given to 100 unemployed men each evening that week, and the following week on two or three evenings to 100 women; it was very touching to notice, in the emotion that played across their features, a proof of the deep impression which this act of kindness made upon the men.

All will heartily endorse the closing words of the address read by Mr. Dunn, that in this Jubilee year many who have the means may be led to open similar places in other centres of population for the benefit of the toiling and suffering millions.

MONS. A. PERROT-TURRETTINI, President of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, died March 2, aged fifty-four. The religious, scientific, and industrial move-

"HAPPY ANNIE!"

Such was the grimly ironical sobriquet borne by a miserable woman who was found dead at the bottom of a London area in the early morning of the 19th inst. At the inquest a cabman said that she was well educated, and when he first knew her, seven years ago, was a very respectable woman, engaged at an hotel as barmaid. For the last six years, however, she had increasingly given way to drink, had fallen lower and lower, until for some time past she had become homeless, forsaken of all her friends. Other evidence showed that it was a sight familiar to the inhabitants of Tottenham-court-road and neighbourhood to see this unhappy creature being baited and worried by street boys, whose delight it was to pursue her, and greet with derisive cheers her vain endeavours to be rid of their importunities. Her only refuge was an area dusthole, outside which she was found frozen and with fractured skull. Sad, inexpressibly sad, is the recital of such a painful case, but we also feel the shame expressed by The Daily Telegraph that such dastardly acts can be tolerated in a so-called Christian land. We have seen similar spectacles to those enacted in Tottenham-court-road in other as prominent thoroughfares, and bystanders will look on and see a fellow-creature, generally a woman, tormented in the manner above described, without a word of protest. In vain does the hapless creature try to walk away, pushed, pulled, beset behind and before by youthful vagabonds. A policeman appears and orders her to "Move on!" "How can I," is the reply, "when these boys are worrying me like this?" "Now then, no talk!" says the officer, and with little more ado she is locked up. But what about her tormentors? No word of rebuke do they receive from the constable, but unchecked they are allowed to jeer and insult their hapless victim till she disappears within the portals of the police-station. Why do not bystanders and passers-by interfere? Because they might share the experience of a friend of ours, who was taken up for an alleged hindrance of an officer in the performance of his duty, though afterwards discharged. Many people have not time to become involved in matters of this sort, but if at the risk of such inconvenience a remonstrance were made, we think it would be time well spent if the proceedings resulted in putting a check upon these disgraceful scenes.

We advocate everything which conduces to the maintenance of law and order, but we think this result would be better attained by making examples of the boys than by locking up the woman, who is not the real cause of obstruction. When young roughs understand that they are liable to punishment for such cruel horseplay these cases will be of less frequent occurrence.

We warmly endorse the concluding words of our contemporary upon this sad case:—

"Annie—happy Annie! maintains henceforth an eternal silence, and anybody may say what he chooses about her deplorable life and miserable death. Yet all the same she was a woman, and not a beast, to be hunted, and to perish, forlorn, persecuted, and without one hand to help her in this capital of four millions of fellow-creatures."

NEWCASTLE CENTRAL HALL.—The seventh annual report of Gospel temperance work carried on at this hall shows that substantial results have been obtained. During the year no less than six hundred meetings have been held, not the least important of these having been one on the Town Moor, on Race Sunday. The Sunday morning prayer-meeting is well attended, and the Gospel meeting in the evening has been productive of much real fruit. Sunday-schools, band of hope, to which has been added a busy-bee society, and other agencies for the moral and temporal well-being of the people, help to maintain and extend the good work the managers desire to accomplish. Altogether about 2000 names have been enrolled in the pledge-book during the year. The secretary is Mr. W. J. Townsend, 6, Loraine-place, New-

GLEANINGS among GOLDEN SHEAVES

IN THE CITY HARVEST FIELD.

Our earnest and active friend, Mrs. Fisher, writes:—Once more, with hearts full of praise and thanksgiving to God, we send forth to our friends a little report of the progress of our work amongst our young sisters in this great city. We will gladly send copies of the report to any interested in this branch of service. A few details may be useful in stimulating others to come forward and give either their time, talents, or gifts for the furtherance of this great work.

The daily meeting in the lecture hall at Aldersgate-street is always well attended. The visits of many kind friends to tell the "old, old, story" are warmly welcomed. The most important branch of the work is the weekly visits to the work-rooms by voluntary helpers, who are gladly welcomed, and the visits looked forward to with delight and avidity, which in some cases denote real soul-hunger. The Flower Mission still gladdens the recipients of the tiny floral messengers. Friends in the country might help on this branch of the work by contributing either wild or garden flowers; if friends could only witness the delight with which they are received, their trouble would be amply repaid.

Our monthly missionary meetings have proved blessed opportunities for stirring up the Christians; God has laid it on the hearts of several that He has need of them for his work. One has lately gone out as Bible-woman in Drury-lane. Several of our girls have spent a week or fortnight in the country through the kindness of friends. With full confidence in an unfailing Friend, we desire to go forward in the spirit of praise and expectation for fuller and greater blessings this year.

BLACK ROCK CONVALESCENT HOSPITAL.—Miss Catherine Marsh has issued a delightful brochure, which in several ways appeals to the sympathies of its readers. It reminds them that the hospital had its origin in the Convalescent Home established during the last visitation of cholera in 1866. The success of this experiment induced Miss Marsh to secure the two houses at Brighton, where, ever since, a splendid work of healing for body and soul has been carried on. In the interval more than 9,000 patients have been here received and treated with tender care. The hospital is close to the sea, of which it commands a full view. The happiness of the patients is the first consideration, and so much has this kind thoughtfulness for their comfort been felt by some of those least inclined to better things, that they have been thereby led to the Saviour. Very touching evidences of the change of life wrought during a visit to the Home are given in several letters printed in this little volume, in which also are exquisite sketches of two of its best friends, who have departed this life, the Earl of Shaftesbury and the Rev. Frederick Chalmers.

SCHOOL OF EVANGELISATION, MARSEILLES.—With thirty millions of souls in France in complete ignorance of the glad tidings of salvation, it is evident that there is a crying need for many such schools as this, which we hope will become a true school of the prophets. The state of France in this particular may be further indicated by the fact that in the National or Reformed Church there are at the present time fifty-three churches without pastors. The object of the school, the only one as yet existing in France, is to train truly converted men as evangelists fitted to go from place to place proclaiming the Gospel. Candidates have to undergo a three months' probation, and then, besides the scholastic training, by taking part in the MacAll meetings, and in evangelistic work generally, they become practically acquainted with the various duties of the work to which they intend to devote themselves. The School was founded in 1880 by M. Reuben Saillens, and, subsequently, was for a time fused with the MacAll Mission. In January, 1886, however, Rev. S. J. Richard, assisted by a consulting committee, became the responsible director. At present there are only eight students, the number being limited by the want of funds. The address is 75, Rue St.

CHINA TOWN, SAN FRANCISCO.

By WILLIAM MARK NOBLE.

In the course of his peregrinations in the far West, Mr. Wm. Noble visited San Francisco. He was accompanied by his son, Mr. Wm. Mark Noble, who has written a graphic and interesting account of what they saw in that part of the city called China Town, both by night and by day. We are unable to find space for the whole of the detailed narrative, but the following is a presentation of the main facts stated:—

CHINA TOWN BY NIGHT.

During our short stay in San Francisco, we made the Chinese town and Mission special places of visitation. The Mission was founded in 1868. Rev. F. J. Masters, the principal, has, besides the permanent staff, a large force of Sunday and day-school teachers. The other cities at present occupied by the Mission, which receives a working grant from New York, are San Jose, Sacramento, and Oakland. Acting on a gracious invitation, we proceeded on Christmas Eve to the house of Mr. Masters. Our knock was answered by a veritable son of "Far Cathay," and in a moment more Mr. Masters himself welcomed us. An appointment was then made for nine o'clock, and directly after this hour three muffled persons stumbled down the hill in the direction of China Town.

"I will first take you to the house of a Christian Chinaman," said the missionary, as we swerved round a corner. We were now in China. A stream of Celestials swung past us—laughing, chattering, giggling, talking, smoking, chewing. On all sides were gorgeous signs, intricate filagree work, lanterns and lights—celestial in all conscience. Everything in this Chinaman's house which we now entered was the picture of methodical arrangement and cleanliness. He was a shirt manufacturer, and we learnt one very cruel fact, that through the operation of the act forbidding the immigration of any more Chinese, the wives and families of this man and of others cannot now join them. Yet by a system of feeing officers, Chinese girls are surreptitiously landed for immoral purposes.

"Now for the Joss House, Temple or Chinese Cathedral," said our guide in between the nods of recognition which he bestowed on the "Heathen Chinee." To reach this we struggled through noisome alleys, dived 'neath subways, till we reached a porch over which swung a dust-begrimed lamp. Passing up a circular stairway, we gained the entrance. In the doorway sat the two priests in charge, who rose to greet us with eager smiles and out-stretched hands, and exclamations of "How do? Welcome." The whole system of worship, as then explained, centres in hero-worship. As to the manner of worship, no services are held on any particular day, but the worshipper can come in at any hour of the day or night, and offer his prayer, and consult the god about his business. After an explanation of the system and accessories of worship, we stood in the centre of the temple. Right in front of us was a high counter on which were pans, vessels, vases, and other necessities for conducting worship. Beyond these was a stage and proscenium on which were ranged four god heroes, one in the centre with flowing beard and red face, this being the god of war. Beneath were written, in letters of gold, a number of commandments, among which were, "He who prayeth with a sincere heart shall surely be rewarded," "Ask, and it shall be given you." There was nothing sombre in the decorations of the temple; everything glittered with spangles, gold, silver, and fine silk. Emblazoned dragon banners hung from the walls, supported with spears and emblazoned hatchets.

Gaming houses we next prospected, where crowds of Chinamen gathered three deep round a long table, on which were spread abnormally large dominoes, upon the turns of which the gambler bet his money. The intense fascination proved by the strained forms and eager, expectant, disappointed faces, proved the depths to which this one vice leads. An illustration of the lawlessness so visible in the great West presented itself to our notice. At intervals of every half-dozen houses were narrow porches, wide enough to permit of a sentinel or spy to stand. On our approach these men signalled, and heavy iron doors swung to, preventing our intrusion on the Chinamen's worst hovel, the fan-tan den. The police officers of the city say it is impossible to open them, they are so surely guarded. We begged one of the Chinamen to let us see the inside of a fan-tan lottery. "No, no, this bad place; you Jesus men don't want see this!"

The last scene of infamy visited was an opium hell. A cloud of smoke rushed out as we entered, carrying with it an odour of corruption. Not till we stooped and entered 'neath this pall, which, like a sentinel of death, hovers over the resorts of these slow suicides, could we view the horrible picture there presented. In a compartment barely twelve feet square we counted fourteen men under the influence of the deadly narcotic, as they lay, with their smoking utensils, in berths or shelves, of which there were three tiers. This is the corruption which exists in China Town, where there is a population variously estimated at from 26,000 to 40,000 Celestials. It is impossible to obtain a correct census, for, as it has been remarked, "For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, the heathen Chinee is peculiar."

AN OPEN-AIR SERVICE.

The following Sunday, desiring to witness some of the Sunday work of the Chinese Mission, we met the missionary band of workers at three o'clock. At once the crowd commenced to assemble—side-walks were thronged, balconies and verandahs crowded, the windows filled by eager expectant faces—it was evident the street service was a matter of interest. "Hold the Fort" was given out, but one of the Chinamen asked that "Come every soul by sin oppressed" might be sung. The inner circle of the ring consisted of Christian Chinamen, whose appearance presented a marked contrast to that of their countrymen. Rev. David D. Jones, of China, first prayed and then spoke in Chinese, the address being upon the slavery of sin and how men are bound down by it. Mr. Jones spoke especially of the opium habit, and used some telling illustrations, which served at once to bring out the depths to which men sink through sin, and the power of Christ's redeeming love. That the blood of Christ, and that alone, could redeem them, Mr. Jones very forcibly and clearly showed. The effect produced upon the Chinamen was wonderful. Some carped, and critised, and ridiculed, but I saw one old Chinaman, whose eyes filled with tears at the mention of a mother's love, reprove two boys for laughing. Other members of his household tried to draw him away for fear "he believed that Jesus-devil." Tears stood in the eyes of others, and one could see they were considering weighty matters.

Mr. Masters and his co-workers are engaged in an arduous task, having many discouragements in a direction from which naught but sympathy should come. We saw China Town at its worst, and have no wish to see it again, for sights and sounds we saw and heard which no pen could record or describe, and no paper would publish.

FINISTERRE.—Mr. Shields, writing from this port, says that a large number of Jersey vessels come there to trade. Some of the Christian men amongst them have, with the help of Mr. Ormsby, an Englishman, hired a house in which they meet together each evening for prayer, praise, and reading of the Scriptures. It was at first intended to open it as a Sailors' Home, but for the present this is not possible, in consequence of the additional expense that would be involved in the appointment of a caretaker. The meetings are, with rare exceptions, conducted entirely by the sailors and Mr. Ormsby, and it is delightful to hear them pray. An effort has been made to start a Blue Ribbon Society, but the movement was greatly opposed. The Curé, it is said, denounced those concerned in it, and, therefore, nearly all the French people who used to attend have ceased to do so. One woman told a captain she would rather see her son die a drunkard than join the temperance people. Mr. Shields' present address is Maison Blanche, Boscoff, Finisterre.

BILLINGSGATE MARKET PORTERS.

The work that has for some time past been carried on in and about Billingsgate Market is evidently growing, and has already exercised considerable influence amongst salesmen, porters, and others. On Tuesday morning, last week, the Gospel meeting periodically convened in the Subscription Room above the market was held, under the presidency of Mr. A. Walters, who takes a deep interest in the work.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, gave an excellent Gospel address from the words, "There were also with Him other little ships." There was a large attendance, including many porters, and the hearty singing and earnest attention paid throughout were good evidences of the reality of the work that is here being done.

In a cellar under London Bridge we were introduced to another phase of the work. Here evangelistic meetings are held. Every Sunday morning there the large cellar is filled with poor, who are provided with a soup breakfast, and then are told of the Bread of Life. After this a number remain and read together the Word of God. Some very interesting cases of conversion have lately occurred.

YOUNG WOMEN IN RESTAURANTS.

Many of our readers will remember that the work so effectively carried on by Miss C. M. Gough among young women who serve the public in refreshment rooms, was greatly helped in its inception by the late Mr. Samuel Morley. His tender, chivalrous heart went out in strong sympathy to these young people, who, in so many cases, find the battle of life a hard one to fight. He made himself responsible for the rent of the Morley Rooms, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C., which form the headquarters of Miss Gough's work, and are at once a place of refuge and of pleasant resort for these busy workers in our big hive of industry.

Mr. Morley has gone from our midst, but his spirit has descended to those who bear his name, and have inherited his wealth. We have learnt with much pleasure that Miss Morley and her two brothers, Messrs. Howard and Charles Morley, have guaranteed £90 out of the £130 payable for the yearly rent of the Morley Rooms. Miss Gough hopes that other friends of this good work will undertake to pay or raise the remaining £40, so that she may be freed from this monetary burden, and be able to bend all her energies to the work of ministering help to her tried and toiling sisters. Our readers may rest well assured that that help is sorely needed. There are few chapters in the social life of our great city that would constitute such painfully interesting reading, if it could be faithfully written, as that which records the struggles of our young working women to maintain themselves in a life of virtuous honesty. The hindrances which they meet with can only be explained by the fact that, as of old, the devil goeth about, not, indeed, as a roaring lion, but as a multitude of cunning serpents, seeking whom he may devour.

Miss Gough devotes herself to her loved work, heart and soul, taxing her physical powers more than she ought. We sincerely hope she will have the sympathetic fellowship of those who would fulfil the law of Christ by bearing one anothers' burdens.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL.—The ladies of North London, under the presidency of the Baroness Burdett Coutts, are exerting themselves to raise a Jubilee Hospital Fund, which it has been determined shall be devoted to the building of the out-patient department of the Great Northern Central Hospital, now erecting in Holloway-road. Mrs. Harkness, 1, St. Mary's-road, Canonbury, N., is one of the hon. secretaries.

GOOD NEWS IF TRUE.—The Interior informs its readers that Col. Robert G. Ingersoll has left off fighting God, declaring, "I have fought God long enough. I have given up fighting God." Better would it have been for him, and for thousands of his countrymen whom he has led astray, if he had reached this decision years earlier. And if, instead of spending his strength fighting God, he had received the spirit of Christ, and told, with all his eloquence, the story of the Cross, how much good he might have done! And even now, although late, the door is not, we trust, entirely closed.—Congregationalist.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Charles Garrett, of Liverpool.

In an excellent article on Foreign Missions a contemporary states that, although in all parts of the mission-field the conditions of success are to be seen—daring faith, magnificent activity, and heroic self-sacrifice—

> The Church at home supports the work with but a niggard hand. The nation spends annually sevenpence halfpenny in the pound of its income on the Army and Navy, threepence farthing in the pound on tobacco and snuff, two and sixpence on intoxicating drinks, and a little over a farthing in the pound on missions to the heathen. A little less than five shillings in the pound is saved every year; a little more than a farthing in the pound is laid on the missionary altar.

A noted Roman Catholic philanthropist in Liverpool, when he was organising a Boys' Home for waifs and strays, once appealed to the working men each to give a glass of beer per week, and said that if they would only deny themselves that much, he could proceed with his work. What an impetus might be similarly given to missionary effort by self-denial in the direction of that two and sixpence in the pound on intoxicating drinks, which in the foregoing statement looks so terribly large in proportion to the poor little farthing in the pound given to foreign missions.

"Sad to say, they do not live; they die morally and physically" were the words of Mr. Westgarth at the last meeting of the British Association, with reference to the needle-women and other female labourers in London and elsewhere, and the insufficiency of their wages. A correspondent has expressed surprise that we have not supported the plan proposed by Mr. Westgarth for the amelioration of the lot of these miserably paid toilers, namely, "co-operation and the wholesale scale," the co-operation involving residence in a huge barrack, with "sleeping berths and redemption fund." We should gladly have done so if we had been convinced that Mr. Westgarth's scheme was capable of practical solution.

The plan was stated in some detail in The Times of September 9, 1886. "An entrance deposit of 5s. to 10s. to begin the redemption fund," and a minimum weekly expense of 5s. 4d., "clothing excepted," even with 2000 tenants massed together, seems to us quite beyond the means of the majority of the East-end workers, most of whom do not earn a shilling a day. The question is as difficult of solution as it is painful of contemplation; but, desirable though it be that the toilers should be helped in the direction of making their earnings go further, a larger remuneration is still more desirable, and to attain to that it will be necessary to Christianise much of our commerce.

We rejoice to learn that Dr. Lansdell has recently distributed, in Siberia, nearly 60,000 Bibles. There are few peoples who need the comfort of God's Word more urgently than the Russian peasantry in the utter hopelessness of their abject lives; there is no reason why the Bible should not bring light and freedom to Russia as to other lands.

Captain Conder, whose name is so favourably known in connection with the exploration of Palestine, gives some hard knocks to modern critics in a paper in a recent number of The Contemporary Review, and the following extract from the valuable article may, with advantage, be remembered not only by critics of the Bible, but also by readers of their productions:—

> The fact is, that exegetical study is an extremely narrow basis on which to found a scientific estimate of Hebrew antiquity. To Wellhausen Graf is more important than Sennacherib, and the views of Vatke more instructive than the researches of Layard. The school to which he belongs takes to pieces the Bible and builds up a new puzzle of its own from the fragments. The pieces do not always fit into the new plan, so they are broken off and inserted into the gaps. This somewhat rickety structure is presented to us as a firm basis on which to build, and the authority of the critic is very often the only foundation on which we are asked to rely... What we want, indeed, is not a new theory as to the Elohist, or a new refutation of the errors of some obscure critic, but a new spirit of comparative study and an independent comparison of the Bible with monumental history. We want, in fact, to take our critic out of his study, and to sit him on a camel in the wilderness, to surround him with the same beings in all their primitive conditions of society and of thought, to humanise and to Orientalise the student.

In Rev. Herbert E. Miles's singularly interesting volume, "Poverty and the State" (Kegan Paul & Co.), there is a pathetic story, told originally by a special commissioner who was deputed by The Liverpool Courier to visit the homes of the poor:—

> In one house I entered there was a large loaf on the table, and the wife was about to divide a portion of it amongst the family, consisting of herself, the father, and five children, the latter eyeing the bread with painful avidity and earnestness. "Well," I said, cheerily, "I am glad to see you with such a good loaf." The woman, without answering, but with a quivering lip, turned the top of the loaf towards me, and there branded upon it, in large letters, was the word "Parish."

We fail to see the imperative necessity of thus wounding the susceptibilities of honest and deserving creatures whose misfortune it is to have fallen upon sad days. It is to useless degradation of this kind that we owe much of that feeling of dread of Poor Law relief which still influences the starving poor, and which leads numbers of men and women to face hunger and death sooner than accept parish assistance. It is time that these matters should be remedied, and that more of the spirit of Christ should be infused into our machinery of relief.

In our young contemporary, The Faithful Witness (Toronto), the following allusion is made to some remarks which appeared in these columns a few weeks ago:—

> The London CHRISTIAN very wisely comments upon the form of expression now so common with many Christians—viz., that of saying, "If the Lord tarry, we will do," &c. We fully agree with the editor when he refers such persons to the words of the Apostle James, "If the Lord will, we will both live, and do." Scriptural replies are always the best, for such will be in accord with the Divine will. Our Master may tarry, and we may live, and yet the work asked of us may not be in the line of his will. Brethren, let us be Scriptural. Don't coin expressions.

At a meeting in the Lower Exeter Hall, last week, the most prominent object, second to the lecturer, was one of four young ladies in the centre of the first gallery, engaged in a study in black and red, executed in Berlin wools. A speaker, less absorbed in his subject than was the lecturer, would have been uncomfortably attracted, not to say distracted. If our industrious sisters find it necessary thus to relieve the strain on the mind by the employment of the fingers, during the coming May Meetings, it would be desirable that they be seated a little less obstrusively than was our charming friend on this occasion.

We learn from our letters that there is a general desire for a Pentecostal blessing felt by most of the missionaries in Madagascar. They want their own hearts warmed, quickened, and then they believe God can work through them. They ask the prayers of Christians at home on this behalf. And not in Madagascar alone do we hear of the same want felt. If the missionaries themselves are feeling their need of new life, and seeking it, they will surely get it. That great blessing on the Congo last year, when so many were converted, came in answer to an almost despairing cry of one of the missionaries. He had been sowing the seed for some time without seeing any fruit, so he thought it better for him to leave that station; another might be more suitable. He determined to have three days with God alone that he might know His mind. In the second day, while yet praying, a chief came in sore distress on account of his sins. Then came another native, and another, all with the cry, "What must I do to be saved?" Thus was the answer sent in showers of blessing.

A distinguished visitor to our shores once declared that the most beautiful expression he had found in our language was the one he read upon the walls of our hospitals—"Supported by voluntary contributions." The words are still to be found, but we are sorry to learn that they are becoming to a large extent obsolete. A competent authority has stated that in order to relieve the metropolitan hospitals from their pecuniary embarrassments, and set them thoroughly free for their work, a sum approaching a million of pounds is necessary. We do not believe that our fellow citizens will readily forfeit their character for generosity by allowing such institutions to be placed upon the rates. It is a matter of regret, we think, that less important objects have obtained precedence over the claims of hospitals in this year of Jubilee.

Waste of energy through overlapping on one hand, and great neglect of certain districts on the other, are concurrent and striking features in London mission efforts. We are glad to record that the work in Glasgow, which was, four years ago, reduced to a system by which every congregation had a certain district allotted to it, is producing most satisfactory results. One of the co-operating churches alone has received an addition of one thousand members through the continuous missionary efforts of its voluntary workers.

Our readers will be rejoiced to hear that, after eighteen years' labour, the revision of the Kaffir Bible has been completed by Rev. Mr. Kropf. He is coming to England to see it safely through the press. Eighteen long years of patient work; but what a harvest of blessing is to be reaped on the white fields of Africa.

It is easy to theorise about thrift; it is difficult to realise how hard it is for some to practise it. The poor man who detailed his circumstances at the Bow-street Police-court the other day most assuredly had met with hard times. He said he had come from Bristol with his wife and two children, had found work at the Tilbury Docks, and had saved £14 10s. But work had failed, his two children sickened and died, and all his savings were spent. He proposed to walk to Bristol, and he asked for a little sum to help him on his way. He received twelve shillings. The donors to the poor box at the police-court will be gratified to know to what needful cases the money is applied.

But thrift is a means, not an end; and if this were recognised and practised after the following fashion, we can imagine that our great rescuing societies would almost become self-supporting:—A gentleman called at the Royal Caledonian Asylum a few days ago, and begged leave to present the treasurer with a cheque for a hundred guineas. He had been educated in the institution, had attained to a competency, and thus desired to acknowledge the value of the training he had received. We should be glad to record similar incidents.

It is the growing fashion for the Press, in the prostituted name of freedom, to praise and exalt the Romish tyranny. A few days ago The Pall Mall Gazette spoke of Popery as the most conservative, and The Echo advocated its claim as the most ancient, Church in Christendom. Then The Pall Mall asks, in its first article on March 24, "Why should we boycott the Pope?" eulogises Prince Bismarck as the shrewdest statesman in Europe, and applauds him for having eaten his proud boast uttered in 1875, "We shall not go to Canossa," by going to Canossa in 1887. When Prince Bismarck gained his Parliamentary majority the other day by the intervention of the Pope and the Roman Catholic vote, men who read the Scriptures and gain understanding of the times, wondered whether other European Governments would also accept or invite the Pope's intervention. The Pall Mall, in its oracular way, answers the question thus:—

> The Pope has learned that, subsidiary to his primary function of chief pastor of the souls of men, an immense deal can be done by a judicious attention paid to their worldly welfare. To avert needless war, for instance, is one of the most simple and obvious of all the duties incumbent upon a well-meaning man. The Pope has already arbitrated in one international dispute, of small importance, it is true, but it is the first step that costs, and the Papal Chair may become the Peace Centre of the modern world. This, however, is but one of many possibilities of the future to which we cannot shut our eyes. How much longer is England to remain outside a centre of influence which seemes destined to effect great things for humanity and civilisation?

Thus Englishmen, in the name of liberty, applaud the foulest tyranny the world has ever seen, and which can no more change its nature than the negro his skin or the leopard his spots. Was a vainer speculation ever dreamed than that "the Papal Chair may become the Peace Centre of the modern world"—"a centre of influence which seems destined to effect great things for humanity and civilisation"? Let History, the Inquisition, the Quemadero, and a thousand events more recent, if less startling, answer. Let the persecution of the Madiai reply. Or, if they have faded from memory, ask any of Christ's faithful witnesses in any country where Popery at the present time is dominant.

"OF ONE ACCORD."

WE cannot too cordially express our appreciation of the excellent anti-Papal Lectures delivered by Mr. Grattan Guinness at Exeter Hall. They will shortly be published, and will, we trust, have a world-wide circulation. We observed, however, not a few faithful and earnest Protestants who were smitten by the scathing assaults upon Futurism. There were brethren who smiled uneasily and incredulously, and sisters who frowned severely and defiantly. In all probability the uppermost feeling with which these went away was hostility to the historic interpretation of the Revelation rather than to the Romish apostasy. This was not the desire of the lecturer, nor the purpose of the Association under whose auspices the lectures were delivered.

The north wind makes the traveller draw his cloak closer round him; the warm south wind woos him to lay it aside. Is it really impossible for those who take such apparently opposite views of New Testament prophecy, to admit that their opponents are not altogether fools and blind? At present they practically say to each other, "The prophecy which promises blessing to him that readeth it, is read in vain by you. It is worse than useless to you, for instead of sucking the honey of truth out of it you only extract the poison of error." We believe this to be a cruel and unfounded charge on either side. God is not, to one or to the other, "as a liar, or as waters that fail." Every reader gets his blessing; but it consists chiefly, not in the outward interpretation, but in the deep that lieth under. For example:

In Rev. vii. the Seer records two visions full of comfort to the suffering saints of God in every age. An endless controversy rages as to whether the 144,000 are Jews or Christians; whether the number is literal or symbolic; whether the fulfilment is past or future; whether the great multitude are the same or a different people; whether "the great tribulation" relates to the Church in a past or present period, or not to the Church at all, but to the Jews when the Church has been removed to heaven. And all the while the chief joy of the visions is missed, viz., this—(1) That before He that sitteth upon the throne will permit the winds of the earth to blow, or the four angels to hurt the earth and sea, another angel having the seal of the living God stays their hand until the servants of God have been sealed upon their foreheads. And (2) That after the great tribulation has been endured, they who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb are before the throne of God and serve Him day and night in his temple. They were his servants on earth; now, saved and blessed, they serve Him in heaven. And not only so: "He will gird Himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them" (Luke xii. 37). "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

These visions were surely given to comfort God's servants in all ages, whether it be the corporate Church or the individual saint; on a scale as long as the dispensation, or as brief as the experience of a lifetime; and to assure them that the living God seals them with their Father's name; that He that touches them, touches the apple of his eye; that not one of them is lost, or the defined number would be incomplete; that the little flock is an innumerable multitude; and that though men kill the body, there is no more that they can do; but when Satan has done his worst for them in time, God does his best for them throughout eternity.

The simple reader, who knows nothing of systems of fulfilment, finds truths like these, now comforting to the redeemed, now denunciatory of their enemies, on every page of this holy Book. If brethren who, down in the depths of their hearts, love each other, would come apart into a desert place and rest awhile, with one accord, in one place, at the Master's feet, the Lamb in the midst of the throne would even now lead them by the fountains of the water of life, and feed them there on the bread of heaven—on angels' food. Ephraim would then no more envy Judah, nor Judah vex Ephraim. "They shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again ZION"—where the twelve tribes are one united Israel. M.

UNION HALL MISSION.

THE annual gathering in connection with this Mission, which is now in its twenty-seventh year, took place on Thursday evening in the Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgeware-road. In the afternoon a meeting for praise and prayer, which was well attended, was held. Among those who took part were Messrs. Robert Paton, James Townley (of Wood Green), W. R. Lane, J. Jackson, and Robert Bilke, the energetic director of the Mission.

In the evening the hall was crowded to overflowing. Mr. Bilke read the report, which was replete with tokens of God's power and goodness. The different agencies are being vigorously carried on, and large numbers of the spiritually destitute are constantly being brought under the power and influence of the Word of God. A new branch has been added to the Mission in close proximity to the Wandsworth-road, and to this fresh effort much encouragement has already been given. Bible carriage work is carried on with two tricycle carriages and a hand carriage.

The Chairman (Mr. R. Paton) rejoiced that Mr. Bilke received so much assistance from volunteer workers, by whom he was surrounded, and expressed the hope that Christian friends would show their practical sympathy with the mission. Mr. Henry Varley delivered a soul-stirring address. He showed that one effect of the present depression in trade had been to render the country heathier, freer of crime, and more sober. Brief speeches were also given by Messrs. Thomas B. Miller (of Barnet), Herbert W. Taylor, and Dr. Barnardo.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.—This much-needed work has been continued by The Christian Community since October last. Instead of diminishing, the need seems to increase as the winter advances; the numbers have grown from about 100, till they now reach as high as 170, as many as can be accommodated at one time. These poor and destitute men (few women are met with) are gathered from the streets in the dead of night, without a penny to secure a night's lodging, many poorly clad and all but perishing with want and cold. In this state they gladly and gratefully accept the shelter of the Mission Hall in Thrawl-street; where, after resting till seven o'clock, they are supplied with a good breakfast, which proves a great boon to them; indeed, to see them at breakfast is quite a scene, as many simply devour the food, showing the terrible condition they are in. After the meal a religious service is held, when they are faithfully dealt with. Besides this night-work, the Mission has been doing a great deal by free dinners, breakfasts, teas, and cocoa-suppers, to alleviate the general distress; as well as by bread, coal, grocery, and lodging tickets, and in other ways helping, in connection with the seven Mission Halls which are all in destitute localities. The secretary is Mr Jas. Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, N.

A MISSIONARY VALEDICTORY.

Very encouraging progress is being made by the China Inland Mission towards securing the hundred new workers they hope to send this year to the front. Already two parties have left our shores, and are being carried swiftly across the sea, Chinawards. A third party will soon follow them, and for these a very hearty farewell meeting was held at 186, Aldersgate-street, last Friday evening. The large attendance of young people was a pleasing indication of the growing interest that is being felt in the evangelisation of the world. The following are the names of the outgoing party, who leave on April 7:—

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, Miss A. E. Knight, Miss L. K. Ellis, Miss M. E. Scott, Miss A. A. Miles, Miss H. Judd, Miss E. Culverwell, Miss L. M. Forth, Miss Stewardson.

The president on Friday evening was Mr. Robert Scott (of Messrs. Morgan & Scott), whose interest in the occasion was a special one, his daughter being one of the outgoing party. It was with a good deal of suppressed emotion that he made some references to this personal matter. He said he had desired to follow the leadings of God, without attempting to hasten or to hinder a decision, and now that his beloved daughter was on the point of leaving home and native land for this blessed service in a far-off country, he could only say, "The Lord gave, the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord." Mr. Broomhall and Mr. Hudson Taylor, both of whom have children labouring in the same field, assured the chairman and other parents who had made similar sacrifices, that, though absent in body, their dear ones would be even nearer in spirit than before, and their service for the Master would bring a fresh joy to the parental heart.

Brief but touching words were spoken by Miss Judd, Miss Knight, Miss Ellis, Miss Scott, and Miss Stewardson. All had something to tell of the marked and wonderful way in which God had laid this step as a burden on their hearts, and how He had cleared obstacles out of the way, making for them a plain path. All asked to be remembered in prayer by Christians at home, that God would use them, both by word and by life, to commend the Saviour they loved to those among whom they might labour. The last-named lady, Miss Stewardson, goes out in connection with the Bible Christians, and her field of labour will be Yunnan, where several young brethren attached to the same community are now working.

It must have been highly encouraging to the departing sisters to hear the good news of progress, and the open doors on every hand, told by Mr. Hudson Taylor, in a short address. Equally encouraging were the extracts he read from the letter of one of the lady missionaries in China, describing the daily joy that filled her own soul from communion with God and a growing sense of his presence and power. Mr. Taylor did not paint the picture exclusively in bright colours; he spoke of many things in which the native Christians are sadly deficient by reason of previous surroundings, and the workers need much patience and wisdom in helping them on in the Christian life. Mr. Taylor said he hoped the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. would prove good recruiting ground for future additions to the ranks of the workers.

The proceedings were closed by earnest prayer from Mr. R. Burn, commending the young friends present and those already in China or on the way to the protecting care and guidance of God. The meeting was convened in connection with the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society.

WINCHESTER.—Mr. Herbert R. Francis has been holding nightly meetings at the Pavilion and St. John's Rooms, for three weeks, which have resulted in much cause of thankfulness for salvation of souls. Mr. Francis will (D.V.) conduct a similar mission at Wood Green, N., from April 3 to 10, for which prayer is asked.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These earnest and popular evangelists have just concluded a fortnight's mission at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, which has been richly owned of God. On each succeeding evening large congregations have listened with unabated interest to the singing of Mr. Smith, and to the forcible evangelistic addresses by Mr. Fullerton; whilst the Lord's Day congregations have been simply overwhelming, the overflow meetings in the lecture hall numbering five to six hundred persons.

There have been many tokens of the presence of God's saving power; not the least of which has been the conversion of several lads from Mr. Meyer's Working Boys' Home. In one family five of the children have been converted, to the exceeding joy of their godly parents. On two occasions Mrs. Fullerton has addressed overflowing congregations of women only. Already nearly two hundred names have been handed in, and an impulse has been given to the whole work.

THE MINISTRY OF SONG.

On Thursday evening last, by invitation of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, a gathering of the various evangelistic choirs engaged in mission work in the metropolis and suburbs took place in the New Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue. Seven choirs were represented, two of which—the North and the South London—have been in active work since Mr. Moody's visit in 1875. Much pleasure was felt at the spiritual tone and unanimity in the discussion that followed the opening remarks of the chairman, Mr. Mathieson, who specially pleaded that the work should be carried on in Gospel simplicity, and not simply to please an audience.

Mr. M. H. Hodder urged individual responsibility to realise that the singing is for the Master, and, therefore, should be rendered in the brightest, truest, and heartiest way possible.

We were glad to hear the outspoken remarks of various gentlemen on the necessity of abstaining from the introduction of more pretentious music than that conveyed in the simple Gospel hymns of Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan.

About 250 ladies and gentlemen were present, representing choirs from Stratford, Peckham, the Mizpah Band, Walthamstow Male Choir, the South, North London, and North-west Choirs. Early in the evening Lady Ashburton gave an invitation to all the choirs to hold the next Conference at her house at Addiscombe. From the discussion that took place it was evident that the interchange of thought and method of work is one which should be well supported by Christian workers who recognise the mission of consecrated voice and song in the glad work of spreading the Gospel.

A NEW VOCATION FOR EDUCATED WOMEN.—In connection with the West-end Hospital for Nervous Diseases, 73, Welbeck-street, a new school has been formed, the object of which is the training of nurses competent to apply the massage and electrical treatment so effectual in nervous diseases. There are at present about twenty-five nurses undergoing training, and certificates of qualification were recently given to three by Dr. Tibbits, who said that a new and altogether suitable career for educated and well-nurtured women was thus opened out.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following special missions:—Mr. Herbert R. Francis, at Wood Green, N., April 3 to 10; Mr. J. M. Scroggie, at the great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Sunday next; Rev. W. Hay Aitken, at St. Jude's, Mildmay, N., April 3 to 11; on a mission now being held at Scole, Norfolk.——For special services for children and young people, by Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood; also at Woodside-park, near Barnet; also at St. James's Church, Hatcham, by Mr. Martin J. Hall.——The widow and daughter of a deceased missionary request prayer that they may have a safe voyage on their return from Africa; also, that they may be made a blessing on board ship.——Praise for great blessing received at Mr. Herbert R. Francis' mission at Winchester, and Mr. Opie Rodway at Cinderford, Forest of Dean.

THE BRIDEGROOM.

Sweet and tender are the accents
  Of the Bridegroom of my soul;
Since He told his love unto me,
  Peace doth like a river roll—
Peace of conscience, not of spirit;
  All He gives me, I am his,
And I know it—know it truly—
  He, the source of all my bliss.

Yea, the accents, soft and tender,
  Make the darkened pathway bright—
Heard as well when morn is smiling,
  As in disappointment's night;
Only He can speak to gladden,
  Only his sweet words can cheer,
And the loving way He says it!
  Breaking on the listening ear.

Speak, then, often, blessed Bridegroom,
  Weary thou canst never be;
Sad, that e'er the thought could enter—
  I could weary be of Thee!
Grace alone can keep me listening,
  Wakeful, restful, safe, and sure;
In thy clear and tender accents,
  Saviour, speak for evermore!

BOYLE, IRELAND.—Most successful evangelistic meetings have been held here during the past month, conducted at first by an agent of the Irish Evangelisation Society, and afterwards by a Presbyterian minister. The meetings have been greatly blessed, and much good has been done.

THE CARTER HOME, CLAPHAM.—The friend of this Institution assembled in large numbers i Clapham Hall last week to take leave of thirtee of the lads who are to form part of Miss Macpherson's Jubilee party of emigrants. Dr. Cronin, th treasurer, spoke of the excellent rescue work tha had been done by the Home, and also of th wonderful health enjoyed by the boys, of whom not one has proved a failure. One lad goes t South America, where, under the care of a missionary association, he will work at his trade as shoemaker, and render assistance to an industria mission.

SANDGATE SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE. — Thi Institute, with which the name of the late Mis Papillon will always be associated, has issued very satisfactory report of the year's work. Ove 10,000 visits have been made to the Home b soldiers, and there has been great blessing amongs these, as well also as amongst the coastguardsme and others who have attended the meetings. Th attendance on Sunday evenings is sometimes s large that the necessity of enlarging the hall i being considered. The Gospel temperance societ has sixty-three members, and is proving its usefulness in many directions. The missionary is M H. Hall, Institute House, Chapel-street, Sandgat

OBITUARY.—Thomas Rawlinson, evangelis of Northampton, died on March 21, aged sixty-seven. At the time of his death he was engage in connection with the Prison Mission at Northampton by Rev. Edward G. Parr, chaplain of th goal there, who writes:—"He was ill three week but being 'ready both in body and soul' for a lon time, he had nothing to do but to die. I ca hardly realise that his bright cheery presence is be seen no more here; for he was one of the mo faithful souls and friends that I ever expect meet with in this world. It was 'short toil, etern rest' with him. He was a faithful member of th Open-Air Mission, and was accustomed to take h musical instrument, stand, and banner into Northampton Market-place, and was thoroughly at hon in 'the diocese of open-air.'"

TEMPERANCE WORK AT MANCHESTER.—A the annual meeting of the Manchester Women Christian Temperance Association and Polic court Mission important statements were made wi reference to the progress of this work. Th Police-court Mission has been signally blesse Much careful attention has been given to the po victims of intemperance and other sins, with go results. Altogether, nearly 1900 pledges ha been taken through the efforts of the Associati in the past twelve months. Arrangements ha now been made whereby inebriate women may sheltered from temptation in a Home opened the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperan Association. Mrs. Ormiston Chant, in an earne address, urged the women of the country to becor abstainers, whereby, to a great extent, men wou follow such an example.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Newman, of St. Neots, have conducted a fortnight's special services at the Ragged School, Chesterfield, and much spiritual good has resulted therefrom.

Sunderland.—In co-operation with the local Y.M.C.A., Mr. C. Russell Hurditch has held a series of most fruitful Gospel meetings in this town. They were well attended, and afforded some remarkable cases of awakening. The afternoon Bible-readings were times of refreshing and inspiration.

Queen's Park, Paddington.—The evangelistic mission conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan at the Tabernacle, in Herries-street, Queen's Park, has been remarkably prospered, and the prospects are very cheering. Every branch of work is going on well, the congregations are large and happy, and there is a large Sunday-school, with growing Band of Hope and Temperance branch. Many persons have made profession of faith in Christ at the services.

Sherborne.—Mr. Wookey recently addressed upwards of three hundred men in this town on the subject of "Social Purity." His earnest and pointed words in denunciation of the prevalent sin, of iniquity, and of those who are ever ready to impute all blame to the woman's side, were listened to with the deepest attention. Many responded to the fervent appeal then given to yield themselves to Christ. A resolution, condemnatory of the C.D. Acts in the Colonies, was unanimously carried.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings for the past four weeks in the upper part of New York City, in a large hall accommodating thousands. The various churches in the locality have united in the movement. Many who seldom attend church are being drawn out to these meetings. It is in a locality where there are multitudes of non-churchgoers. During the past four weeks in these meetings, and in those in Washington Heights, something like 800, young and old, have professed conversion. Mr. A. J. Maxham has assisted Mr. Hammond in rendering very attractive solo singing. Many hearts have been moved by his pathetic and thrilling songs.

Savannah, U.S.A.—Rev. James Wharton, of Barrow-in-Furness, has been giving another winter to Gospel work among the freed men of our Southern States. This is Mr. Wharton's fourth winter in this important work. Gracious results attended his work three seasons in New Orleans. Last October he arrived in Savannah, Georgia; he has held meetings in the thickly settled rice lands, where nearly all the people are negroes, sleeping in open cabins, and knowing all the privation of these poor souls. They are hungering for the simple Word of Life, ready to yield to the charm of a complete salvation. The results in these rural places, and in Savannah, have been of a remarkable and cheering character.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost has for three weeks been conducting a mission in Norwich, N.Y. For twelve years, since the last mission, the religious life of the people has been growing colder and harder, and at the end of the first week's work Dr. Pentecost declared it the hardest community to move he ever found. The Bible-readings in the afternoons were a continual feast of Scripture instruction, and it was here the battle was really won. At the end of the second week's work, says the New York Independent, the whole aspect of the community was changed. Before the close of the mission there had been one hundred professed converts, and at prayer-meetings held in the different churches afterwards there were also many conversions.

Mr. Spencer Walton held a united mission of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., Harrogate, from March 3 to 14. The Bible-readings every afternoon for Christians were well attended, and proved, we believe, a rich blessing to many. The evening evangelistic services were also attended by growing numbers, till on the last Sunday of the mission the large hall was filled to overflowing. From the first there were manifest tokens of the Holy Spirit's working; but it was after a very searching appeal to Christians and backsliders on Thursday evening, March 10, that the blessing was most clearly and fully manifested. The following Friday and Sunday were also days when all could not but feel, "Truly the Lord is in this place." There had been much special prayer beforehand for young women and for the railway-men, and marked definite answers were the result for both Ryde.—Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting mission work for a week at George-street Chapel, Ryde, Isle of Wight.

Avock, N.B.—The special Gospel meetings in this Ross-shire fishing village have closed, but have left a very deep and genuine blessing behind them. Subsequent to the time at which our recent account of the work was written, many were brought under the power of the truth, and give every evidence of real conversion. The whole place has been stirred to a deeper interest in spiritual things, and one can scarcely enter a dwelling without meeting traces of the movement.

Mr. C. James.—It is evident from the Canadian newspaper Press that the visit of Mr. Charles James (of the Gospel Purity Association) to Canada has been fraught with much good. His first meeting at Toronto was under the presidency of the Bishop. He also addressed a great meeting there in conjunction with Rev. Sam P. Jones, the Southern evangelist. At one of his lectures on "Purity," at the Y.M.C.A., Hamilton, every young man present rose to signify assent to the White Cross obligations. Mr. James is now in the United States.

Chicago. — The mission in which Messrs. Moody, Murphy, and Sankey are now engaged in this city, has already resulted in a great awakening. A class has been reached utterly untouched before. "Old church-goers, the hardest men to reach in Chicago," are being greatly moved. The ministers of the various churches are uniting heartily in the work, and out of the largest congregations ever seen large numbers are coming forward for Christ. In one church over forty have already been baptized as a result of this effort, the influence of which is being felt all over the city. Mr. Moody says he is amazed at the interest excited. All they have to do is to put in the sickle, as the fields are ripe. Mr. Murphy is to remain all the summer, as the work he is engaged in has only just commenced.

Mr. Henry Varley held a mission at Eastbourne from March 13 to 23. Commencing at the Y.M.C.A. the meetings increased until the large Town Hall was crowded out. At the afternoon Bible-readings, attended by between five and six hundred, many difficulties were confronted and removed. The setting forth of the Lord Jesus as the present life of the believer, and the bold reputation and exposure of the heresies of modern thought were the leading themes in these meetings. On Saturday evening, the 19th, a stirring address to men only was listened to by upwards of seven hundred, with marked attention and evident profit. Mr. Varley is arranging visits to a number of towns in the South and South-west of England, to preach Christ, and will make this an opportunity to advocate the work of the China Inland Mission, and to seek help towards the sending out of the proposed hundred missionaries this year.

Rev. W. Haslam, during April, will be engaged as follows:—1—9, Trinity Church, Buxton; 9—19, St. Peter's Church, Congleton; 23 to May 3, St. Mary's Church, Hammersmith-road, West Kensington.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Mr. P. I. J. Warschawski in his seventh report pleads for work among his Jewish brethren. He is able to rejoice over several who have testified their entire faith in Christ, and who, therefore, have had to endure the scorn and contumely of members of their own families. Numbers of the Jews in London are in great distress, many being refugees from Russia whence they have fled with barely sufficient clothing. The various classes and Gospel addresses are well attended, and the monthly Bible-readings are much appreciated. Mr. Warschawski's address is Barbican House, 11, Torriano-avenue, Camden-road, N.W.

HOME FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN, CRAIGS, STIRLING.—In The Stirling Journal and Advertiser a correspondent gives an interesting account of a visit to this Children's Home, originated and carried on so successfully by Miss Croall. The picture presented of cleanliness and comfort pervading the establishment, and of the happiness of the inmates, is a very attractive one. The contrast between the past life and the present of these little ones is great indeed, the change being in itself a long stride in the upward way to purity and holiness. Attention is, however, drawn to the need for further room and space. "The nursery, for instance, is much too small for twenty rompers —big boys and little babies." A separate room

THE GUILD OF THE "IRON CROSS," a Society of working-men leagued together against intemperance, blasphemy and impurity, was founded in Philadelphia in 1883, and has a large membership.

SOUTH SEAS.—After twenty years of work in the Melanesia Mission, Rev. C. Bice has landed at Plymouth. His twelve months' leave of absence is to be employed in giving information regarding the work, conditions, and prospects of the Mission to the savage tribes of the Southern Seas.

DEATH.—Mdlle. Solle, of Contréglise, near Vesoul, well known for her Christian liberality, has just died, aged sixty-one. She has left to the Presbytery her château and adjoining estate, to be used as an orphanage hospital, or for some other useful purpose in connection with the church.—Le Petit Messager.

THE COLOUR PROBLEM.—The authorities of the Methodist Church have decided that coloured students shall not be excluded from the Chattanooga University. They also require the local directors of the University to ask for and insist upon the resignation of Professor Caulkins for refusing to shake hands with a coloured minister of his own denomination. Unless these demands are met within sixty days, the board of managers will cancel their contract with the local authorities.

THE PEACE SOCIETY OF FRANCE.—The Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, London, E.C., has recently circulated in France a large issue of papers specially prepared and translated, with a view to interest our neighbours across the Channel in the great question of International Arbitration. M. Frederick Passy and several other members of the Chamber of Deputies are heartily co-operating in similar efforts. They have secured powerful allies and supporters in M. Jules Simon, M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, and M. Godin, of Guise (Aisne).

FACTORY WORK by women and children is happily being inquired into by some continental nations. In the Netherlands it was found that children are sometimes employed twenty-four consecutive hours in bakeries, and are made to sweep out red-hot furnaces. In France the law forbids children under thirteen being sent out to work, and boys under sixteen and girls under twenty-one are not allowed to labour more than twelve hours out of the twenty-four, but these laws are continually evaded; some more effectual methods of working them are therefore being adopted.

BALTIC PROVINCES, RUSSIA.—Matters here are in an unpleasant state. Many Lutherans have been got to give in their adhesion outwardly to the so-called Orthodox or Greek Church, and these come under the operations of the penal laws which forbid members of that church to have any religious dealings with other churches. The latest intelligence from Turkey is to the effect that two American missionaries have been expelled from Monastir for distributing books opposed to Islamism. Turkey and Russia agree in one thing—namely, that they will permit no conversions from the national faith of each.

INTOLERANCE IN TURKEY.—Miss Webb, secretary of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, in addressing a meeting of ladies at Exeter, said a wave of religious intolerance seemed to be passing over Turkey. The Society had had notice to close their schools unless certain, almost impossible, conditions where complied with in one month. The work at Bethlehem had since been threatened, and it was feared that the same interference would be experienced at Lebanon. There was no personal danger at present, but the closing of the schools would be a calamity. In the course of her address Miss Webb contrasted the action of Turkey, which professed to be a civilised power in Europe, with that of China recently.

A MOHAMMEDAN COLLEGE.—A rumour was recently circulated widely of the existence of a vast Mohammedan College in the north of Africa, which was reported to contain ten thousand students, and from which it was said that one thousand Moslem missionaries are annually sent forth. General Haig, who has just completed a most important journey of exploration in the interior of Arabia, has sent to the Church Missionary Society a report in which he describes the true state of this Moorish University. It appears that the students of the College do occasionally number eight thousand, but that is only just before a conscription, and the number is rapidly reduced as soon as the conscription is over. As a matter of fact, only about half-a-dozen of its members proceed to a degree each year, and they become crystallised bigots rather than active missionaries. In fact, the General says that Mohammedan missionary zeal is a thing of the past; it never outlives the power of the sword, and the Arabs themselves say there are "no Moslems now, they are just like Kaffirs." Nevertheless, it is a fact that among the ignorant tribes of Central Africa the religion of the Prophet is rapidly spreading through the influence of the Arab traders, and experience has long taught how much more difficult it is to bring the Gospel home to those who have embraced the tenets of that religion than to those who still remain

Letters to the Editor.

DAILY LIGHT ON THE DAILY PATH.

DEAR SIR,—In the article on Mrs. Daniell, in last week's issue, you say Mr. Wilson was the compiler of the above-named book. This is a mistake. No Mr. Wilson had anything to do with the book, which was entirely compiled by the late Mr. Jonathan Bagster, his eldest daughter, and one of his sisters.

I should be obliged if you would correct this accidental mis-statement.

Yours truly, ROBERT BAGSTER.

UNPAID NATIVE AGENCY.

DEAR SIR,—I have been reading with the deepest interest the letter of Messrs. Radcliffe and Mathieson on "Unpaid Native Agency in Heathen Lands," and would like to commend the subject to your readers for deeper consideration.

How are new converts, and they of comparatively ignorant races, so far as spiritual religion is concerned, to be induced to enter upon lives of devoted, unpaid service to Christ without having the example shown them by their white leaders, as Paul showed an example to the "native agents" of his day?

Nay more, seeing that the common reproach: "They are well paid for it," prejudices so many English people against all ministers of religion, how can we imagine a heathen nation remaining without the strongest prejudice, if they see one class of ministers, foreigners, apparently well-circumstanced, and a larger class, their own countrymen, labouring without pay?

Surely the order of things should be the reverse, the leaders suffering most, the fountains of teaching giving the very highest example! And, thank God, there are not wanting in our days, I believe, many specimens of such following of Paul and of Christ abroad as well as in this country, so that if the right ideal be only held up there is every reason to hope that ere long every heathen people may be blessed with the sight of labourers who, instead of repelling them with the surroundings of wealthy civilisation, will win their hearts by manifesting absolute self-renunciation.

To attain this result, however, demands of us who are amidst all the comforts of our own land a no less complete self-denial. It would be monstrous to call upon our representatives amongst the heathen to live in poverty, whilst we clung to all the comforts that money can buy. And I am certain that we cannot expect either white or "native" servants of God abroad, to be more devoted than those from whose "bowels of mercies" they spring.

Is it possible to raise up "native agents" here who will really give up their all freely for the salvation of souls? I thank God that we can say from positive experience, it is. In this country we have in the Salvation Army no less than 480 officers in training who receive no salary, but are simply provided with plain food, mostly given to them by the people amongst whom they labour.

Every one of these, before being accepted, was certified as a good servant by his employers, so that there is no doubt they could all be in "good situations," if they preferred money-making to soul-saving. But, thank God, they have renounced the world for ever, expecting no better lot when officers commanding our Corps, than in their candidate days. I recently met our officers in a certain agricultural district, and I found that the average amount of money drawn by them weekly for their support was during January 4s. 5d. per week. Yet not one of them wished to leave that district for a richer one, or, indeed, thought himself in hardship. Even in the colony of New South Wales a recent letter informs us that "very few of the officers" of one district "draw any salary." In India and Ceylon our white and native agents live alike upon the native food, which costs them from 2d. to 4d. per day. And God has raised up thousands of men and women of all classes, not only in this country, but in the United States and Canada, where the incomes of the working classes are larger, who are eager to accept the position of a Salvation Army officer, as rapidly as we can raise funds for their outfit, training and travelling expenses.

Under these circumstances, I would appeal to your readers to adopt for themselves the life of self-denial which they wish Chinese, Hindoo, and African converts to come up to. Then the resources of Christ's kingdom will soon be equal to the maintenance, without any secular labour, of millions of "native agents," besides the hosts of converts working under each of them in their leisure time, without any cost at all.

I never can see the advantage of puzzling discussions as to the precise arrangements of the Apostolic Church. Surely God expects us to-day to serve Him, not merely as the Apostles did, but with all the improvements our century puts within reach. Nobody would tolerate the idea of a Paul to-day occupying part of his time with tent-making, when a Roman penny from half a dozen of his brethren would free him weekly from all earthly cares, to spend all his time for the world's salvation. If every reader of THE CHRISTIAN would imitate the Apostolic style of living, and give the consequent saving-up to maintain those who labour only for Christ, there need be no more appeals for funds to support them, and no more difficulty in supplying "native agents" by the million.

Who, by the grace of God, will celebrate this Jubilee Year by getting themselves freed from all the chains of wealth and fashion, and sending all their portions to their brethren at the battle front? I confess that I should write far more strongly, were it not for the conviction that the gentlemen who sign the letter on native agency are themselves far ahead of their own appeal, and that they write, probably, in despair of inducing white men to live as they propose yellow and black men should. To my mind, these distinctions, in connection with the cross of Jesus are horrible. What we wish the heathen of yesterday to do, let us do ourselves. Then shall we know in our own souls all the glorious gladness of God's Jubilee, and be able to raise the millions of heathendom to the same grand level. G. S. RAILTON.

THE CHOICE OF CHAIRMEN.

DEAR SIR,—I read the following lines in your last week's issue, "We could not but feel that it is a hazardous experiment placing in the chair of such a gathering, one who is unfamiliar with the ways and methods of the Association." I do not desire to refer to this particular incident, but to express my surprise that so many of our religious meetings are rendered unbearable through the unfitness of the selected chairmen.

It appears to me from facts continually before me, that "wealth" (and in some few cases a "title") is the only fitness sought by those who have the arranging of such meetings. Surely a higher standard than this is required amongst us?

The Churches of our land are overrun with men who have no gift (and in many cases little piety), who have pushed themselves forward, relying on their acquired wealth or position; and it is to be deeply lamented that they are made use of as chairmen, to the detriment of God's work.

Many men now posing at our Christian assemblies as chairmen and speakers have little to recommend them but their gold, and yet they are thrust into leading positions by our religious committees, because it is the impression that "wealth" carries so much influence in these days. What use is a man as a chairman unless he has a fair knowledge of the Society's work he has undertaken to advocate. I would thank you to allow me to enter my protest against this growing evil; it is an awful stumbling-block to the progress of Christ's work.

Yours truly, JOHN SHRIMPTON.

HOME FOR AGED BLIND MEN.—This new Home, which is an off-shoot of the Home for Aged Christian Blind Women at Crouch-hill, was opened on Friday last. Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of Tollington-park, presided, and was supported by Rev. W. H. Barlow, the new vicar of Islington, who delivered the dedicatory address, and others of the local clergy. Rev. Henry Bright, through whose exertions these Homes have been erected, is the superintendent.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.—The ninth annual report of this work, conducted by the Misses Perks, states that at the several stations many souls have been saved during the past year. Through the generosity of friends a Testament has been given to every soldier leaving for foreign service. A very gratifying statement is that many of the men who have been here converted are doing good work in the Lord's vineyard abroad, where they are successfully working amongst the heathen. Letters are constantly being received from those soldiers, telling the good news that precious souls are coming to the Lord Jesus as their Saviour.

MISS WHATELY'S SCHOOLS, CAIRO.

DEAR SIR,—My sister has just returned from her annual trip among the Nile villages round Cairo, and never have she and her devoted helpers been more cheered than in their visit, by the readiness to receive the Word of God. At several places, as soon as it was known that the boat had arrived, crowds of men and boys hurried to the shore, many standing almost knee-deep in water, to wait for their turn to get a book. None are given but to those who can read, or come to fetch a book for relations who can. In one place the doctor of the Medical Mission, when reading a Bible history, was stopped by an auditor, who finished it for him, and then repeated others from memory. He had received a Bible three years ago, which he declared he read daily, and evidently had studied.

"We were looking out for you! Why did you not come before? We were afraid we should not see you this season." These are the words which continually greeted the missionaries. Often they were inquired for by name. "Where is ——?" "And the lady who was with you last year?" &c.

At two places, at least, if not more, there is a wide opening for schools to be established. The teaching to be had is of the scantiest; the little boys who come with their tin slates to show the ladies they can say their Arabic alphabet, and beg for a book or a text paper, are longing to have more, and the parents entreating for a teacher to be sent. Fifty pounds would enable a boy's school to be opened at once; my sister would send a teacher and books from Cairo, and eventually some expenses might be met by the boys' payments. They would come from several villages round. In one very important and populous village the Jesuits are planning to fill up the opening. If once they get in, the door will be probably closed for the Gospel, for though an image or picture worshipping church will never attract Moslems (except in very rare isolated cases) it can effectually prevent others from doing so. No one but those who have witnessed it can conceive how so-called Christian idolatry keeps the Mohammedans from receiving the Gospel.

Time would fail to give half the interesting incidents which show how white the fields are to the harvest. And I have not spoken of the number of sick (upwards of 300 in the various places, taken together, we visited) who have been relieved by the doctor (some of whom can come by boat to Cairo, to follow up the cure), nor of the readings by my sister and Mrs. Shabon to women in their huts or in the fields. This itinerant work among the villages near Cairo is most important, the hire of a Nile boat is very costly, and the uncertainty of winds and currents often prevents visits to promising places during the very limited time which that hire can be paid, while the impossibility of procuring a night's lodging prevents these places being visited by the railroad, as there would be no time to go and come in a day. If a circle of ten friends would undertake to support a Nile school, care would be taken to keep them supplied with details of the progress of their work, and they might be sure that a number of intelligent Moslem children, who would otherwise remain in ignorance, would be thoroughly instructed in the Word of Life. Miss Jourdan, of 21, Westbourne-park Villas, will gladly furnish other particulars.—Yours faithfully,

Cairo, March. E. JANE WHATELY.

CHICAGO.—An average of about 19,000 young men visited daily the different Y.M.C.A.'s here last year.

BOMBAY.—The Bombay Gazette has published the speech of Bishop Mylne in which he informed the Bombay Social Purity Alliance that Government had rejected the Society's memorial praying for the repeal of the C. D. Act. It is, says The Indian Witness, a most logical and earnest setting forth of facts, and shows the indecency and barbarity of the statute more forcibly than many impassioned speeches and essays have done it. The Bishop advised the friends of purity not to be discouraged by the rebuff which they had sustained from the Government of Bombay, but let them pledge themselves never to desist while the Act was applicable

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, APRIL 3.—PSALM LVII.

THE words "Al-taschith" in the title mean "destroy not." The same expression occurs in titles of Psalms lviii., lix., and lxxv. "David knew that he might successfully plead with God 'destroy not,' seeing that he had abstained from taking the matter into his own hand (1 Sam. xxvi. 9) by destroying the Lord's Anointed."

The occasion of the Psalm was "when he fled from Saul in the cave;" but whether that of Adullam (1 Sam. xxii. 1) or that in Engedi (xiv. 1) it is not easy to say.

2.—God that performeth all things for me.—The verb "performeth" means in Hebrew "to complete," or "bring to an end." "With God the beginning always delivers a pledge for the finishing."—Hengstenberg. See Phil. i. 6, which is the Gospel expression of this truth.

4.—I lie even among them that are set on fire.—The parallel "lions" points to those who are instigated by the devil—the "roaring lion" (1 Pet. v. 8), and "them that are set on fire" recalls James iii. 6, where the tongue is said to be "set on fire of hell"—i.e., to be inspired from beneath.

6.—They have digged a pit before me, into the midst whereof they have fallen themselves.—The pit of destruction which Judas, instigated by Satan, digged for Jesus, was the destruction both of Judas and of Satan (Heb. ii. 14).

8.—Awake up, my glory.—"'My glory' is an emphatical designation of the soul, comp. Ps. vii. 5, xvi. 9, xxx. 13."—Hengstenberg. I myself will awake early.—Literally, "I will awake the dawn." "With the music of stringed instruments and song he will awake the not yet risen dawn."—Delitzsch. Rashi (the Jewish commentator) says, "The dawn awakes the other kings, but I, said David, will awake the dawn."

MONDAY, APRIL 4.—PSALM LVIII.

1.—Do ye indeed speak righteousness, O congregation?—"The word rendered 'congregation' is very obscure. Elsewhere it means 'silence,' 'dumbness.'"—S. C. "Will ye indeed utter long-silent justice?"—Kay, who explains it as an allusion to Absalom's rebellion, when he "assumed the character of a reformer and rectifier of abuses, saying to suitors, 'See, thy matters are good and right; and yet none is deputed from the king to hear thee. Oh that I were made judge in the land'" (2 Sam. xv. 3, 4).

2.—Ye weigh the violence of your hands.—R.V. is better, "Ye weigh out the violence," &c. As judges, instead of weighing out justice, they weigh out violence. "From this we see that the persecuted Christians have no audience and no help with worldly and spiritual jurisdictions when false doctrine is in vogue."—Arndt.

6.—Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth.—The wicked judges of the earth are compared to lions, who aim to devour God's flock, and, that they may be thwarted in their aim, the Psalmist prays that their teeth may be broken, and so be rendered harmless.

9.—Before your pots can feel the thorns, &c.—"The wicked are compared to a heap of thorns ...lighted under a caldron, and then swept away by a sudden storm. The words rendered 'living' and 'in his wrath' are supposed by some to describe the flesh in the pot, either quick or heated through, but this is contrary to the statement; the thorns are swept away before they have heated the pots. All the plans of the wicked are frustrated by their sudden and complete destruction."—S. C. See Rev. xix. 20, where both "living" and "in his wrath" receive a striking and solemn fulfilment.

10.—He shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.—Comp. Rev. xiv. 20, which shows that this washing is no voluntary act on the part of the righteous, but a necessity, arising from God's judgment on his enemies. Mark the harmony between Rev. xix. 14, where the armies of heaven follow Christ to judgment "upon white horses," and the language of Rev. xiv. 20, which refers to the same final judgment of professing Christendom—"the vine of the earth" (xiv. 18), and where the depth of blood to be waded bridles." See also Isaiah lxiii. 1—6, where Jewish tradition identifies Edom with Rome.

TUESDAY, APRIL 5.—PSALM LIX.

"The inscription states the circumstances under which this Psalm was composed, and it is borne out by the context. David writes in imminent danger; troops of his enemies lie in wait to seize him, or prowl about the city uttering threats against him. He protests his innocence, prays for the overthrow of his foes, and expresses entire confidence in the mercy and protection of God. These points agree with the account in 1 Sam. xix., when Saul sent messengers to take away David's life, which was only preserved by the affection of his wife. This Psalm is therefore in all probability one of the very oldest writings of David which has been presented to us."—S. C.

5.—Awake to visit all the heathen.—"The Psalmist evidently reckons himself as belonging to an Israel, from which he excludes his enemies, viz., the true Israel, which is in reality the people of God. Among the heathen, against whom he invokes God's interposition, are included the heathen-minded in Israel."—Delitzsch. See Psalm lxxiii. 1.

12.—For the sin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, let them even be taken in their pride: and for cursing and lying which they speak.—In the spiritual application of these words one is reminded of Dan. vii. 11: "Because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame." Compare, too, the next verse, 13: "Consume them in wrath, consume them."

14.—And at evening let them return, &c.—Kay and Delitzsch render this and the next verse: "They return—they wander to and fro for food." Kay adds, "David himself was the prey they were in quest of."

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6.—PSALM LX.

The inscription sends us to 2 Sam. viii.—x., where we read of David's Aramæan wars. "Whilst the arms of David were making triumphant progress in the north, the Edomites in the south had invaded the land, which was denuded of troops, and here a new war, which jeopardised all the results that had been gained in the north, awaited the victorious army."—Delitzsch.

1.—O God, Thou hast cast us off.—The serious defeat which David had sustained through Edom's invasion is here the subject of lament.

4.—Thou hast given a banner to them that feared Thee.—"In Isa. xi. 10, it is foretold that 'the root of Jesse shall stand as a banner of the people.' Probably here, too, the allusion is to God's covenant with David."—Kay.

6.—God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice.—"A Divine utterance promising him victory, which he has heard," becomes the ground of triumphant anticipation of victory. He speaks of Moab, Edom, Philistia, as already conquered. Faith calleth the things that be not as though they were. "It is possible that at the time of Edom's invasion, David received an oracle from the High Priest, by means of the Urim and Thummim, which assured him of the continued possession of the Holy Land."—Delitzsch. Or it may be that his faith laid hold of God's promise referred to in Ps. lxxxix. 35, "Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David."

THURSDAY, APRIL 7.—PSALM LXI.

Delitzsch, after giving many conjectures of others as to post-Davidic time and circumstances which may have formed the occasion of this Psalm, says, "We abide by the proudly ignored 'of David' and have as our reward a much more simple interpretation. It is a Psalm of the time of Absalom, composed in Mahanaim (2 Sam. xvii. 24), or elsewhere in Gilead, when the army of the king had smitten the rebels in the wood of Ephraim. It consists of two parts of four verses each." So also Hengstenberg.

2.—From the end of the earth will I cry unto Thee.—"Driven out of the land of the Lord, in the more limited sense, into the country on the other side of Jordan, David felt as if he were banished to the extreme corner of the earth, far from the presence of God."—Hengstenberg.

"The rock is mentioned as a place of security (comp. xl. 2). 'That is higher than I' means 'which is so high that I cannot in my own strength ascend it.'—Ibid. 'Too high for his natural strength.'"—Delitzsch.

3.—For Thou hast been a refuge for me.—Of all commentators Delitzsch alone seems to render this in strict conformity to the Hebrew which is "Thou hast become a refuge for me." Viewed spiritually this is faith's confession of what God has become to the soul in Christ; but to grasp this truth, or to stand upon the rock, needs the guidance of the Spirit, so that faith can both say, "Lead me to the rock that is higher than I," and also "for Thou hast become a shelter for me." It is a concentrated form of the prayer which is expanded in Eph. i. 17, &c.

FRIDAY, APRIL 8.—PSALM LXII.

The key to this Psalm is the six times repeated particle with which it commences, and which should be translated "only." The R.V. so far improves upon the A.V. as to render it "only" in ver. 1, instead of "truly," but in verse 9 it retains the "surely" of A.V. which is a pity. This "only" is "unquestionably the characteristic mark of the Psalm."—Hengstenberg, who adds, "All the positions which are introduced by the 'only' are arranged in a continuous series: only in God does my soul find rest, because it is only God who is my helper, at a time when my enemies are only considering how they may destroy me." This series is repeated in the same order in the second part of the Psalm.

1.—Truly my soul waiteth upon God.—"Literally, 'only toward God is my soul in silence.' The silence is that of tranquil faith which abstains from fretfulness or self-vindication."—Kay.

3.—How long will ye imagine mischief against a man?—R.V. gives what is adopted by others as a better rendering, "How long will ye set upon a man, that ye may slay him, all of you?"

4—They only consult to cast him down from his excellency.—Applicable to David in the time of Absalom's rebellion, but always descriptive of the world's attitude to Christ. See John xv. 18—25.

11.—Power belongeth unto God. 12.—Also unto Thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy.—These are the two Divine utterances alluded to in "twice have I heard this." (1) That God is a Sovereign; (2) That as such He exercises mercy also, seeing that judgment, being according to every man's work, must involve every man in condemnation. Comp. Jas. i. 13, "Mercy rejoiceth against judgment." Those who take the place of sinners, condemned by judgment according to works, will ever find God in Christ a God of mercy.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9.—PSALM LXIII.

This was "the morning Psalm of the ancient Church with which the singing of the Psalms was always introduced at the Sunday service."—Delitzsch. All three Psalms (lxi.—lxiii.) were composed during the time of Absalom, and this must be the occasion on which David tarried one or two days "in the wilderness of Judah." See 2 Sam. xv. 23, 28, xvii. 16.

1.—O God, thou art my God.—"Just as a magnet has lost all its power when it does not quickly turn to the north, so faith has lost all its power and is dead, when it does not without delay turn to God and say, 'my God.'"—Arndt.

2.—So as I have seen Thee in the sanctuary.—"Just as he does now in a dry land, so formerly in the sanctuary he looked forth longingly towards God."—Delitzsch. Applied to Him of whom David was a type, this would refer to the upper sanctuary, "the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (John xvii. 5).

7.—Because Thou hast been my help.—It should be "hast become my help." So rightly the LXX.

8.—My soul followeth hard after Thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.—Just as a little child with feeble steps "follows after" his father, and yet is safe while so doing, because upheld by the grasp of the father's hand.

11.—Every one that sweareth by Him shall glory.—Hengstenberg understands "Him" to refer to the king rather than to God, "swearing by the king is a sign of fidelity." David is here

HORNER'S PENNY STORIES FOR THE PEOPLE

Contain as much reading as a Shilling Volume! Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, & 6 Now Ready. Ask your Bookseller to get them.

"These cheap and wholesome books are admirably adapted to counteract the pernicious literature that issues in such profusion from the printing press in these days. The stories set forth in a vivid and impressive manner the inseparable connection between sin and suffering, the patient love of God, and his readiness to receive the worst if they will but turn to Him, the simplicity of the Gospel, the higher life to which it leads, and its power to sustain and comfort human hearts amid the conflicts of life and in the realities of the dying hour. These precious lessons are so attractively interwoven with the incidents and accidents of daily life as to give the books all the charm of the inferior sorts they are meant to supersede. They will gain the ear of thousands who would not touch a tract, and are thus worthy of a broadcast circulation.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION

(INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL AND INSTRUCTION SOCIETY),

In co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India. Established 1852.

JUBILEE FUND FOR CHRISTIAN MEDICAL WORK AMONG THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

The Queen's Testimony.

Her Majesty said to one of our medical lady missionaries, who had the honour of an interview in 1881, "We should wish it generally known that we sympathize with every effort made to relieve the suffering state of the women of India."

In addition to its Evangelistic and Educational work, the Society has a Hospital and Dispensary for Women at Lucknow, where their Medical Missionary, Dr. Alice Marston, is at work.

In 1886, she reports:—

2,943 new cases.
100 patients in the Hospital.
131 patients treated in their own houses.
6,920 total attendances at Hospital and Dispensary.

The Committee desire to commemorate the Queen's Jubilee by inaugurating a Jubilee Fund for extending their medical missionary work. They have now three thoroughly qualified medical ladies, two already in India and one on the point of proceeding there. They have three other ladies, students at the London School of Medicine for Women, who will soon have completed their four years' course and be ready to proceed to India.

The Committee APPEAL for FUNDS to enable them to extend their work, and establish Hospitals for Women at Benares, Jeypore, Patna, and Fyzabad.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Sub-Treasurer, at the Society's Office 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C. Bankers—Ransom, Bouverie & Co., 1, Pall-mall East, S.W.

The Book World.

THE YOUNG MAN for April (Partridge & Co.) contains some hitherto unpublished incidents in the life of the late Bishop Fraser, and an article on General Gordon, by Prebendary Barnes.

The March number of THE HOMILIST (6d. Houlston & Sons) is a really good number. The articles on "God's Goodness," and "The Way to true Manhood" are both interesting and stimulating.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR (No. V. 7d. James Nisbet & Co.) promises to be the most useful cyclopædia for ministers issued as yet. Wise in its range of topics, catholic in its selection of extracts, and thoroughly practical in the ends it seeks to serve, it is deserving of the success it enjoys.

GOSPEL TYPES AND SHADOWS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By REV. WILLIAM ODOM. Third Thousand, Revised. 1s. James Nisbet & Co. We are not surprised that this little book should have found a welcome from Bible readers. It is an admirable and successful attempt to show the unity and inter-dependence of the Old and New Testaments, and how our Lord Jesus Christ is the sum and substance of both.

SATAN'S HISTORY. By ARCHDEACON A. DISSELHOFF, of St. James, Berlin. 1s. Religious Book Society. This is a translation of a German work which has had a large sale. It deserves a wide circulation in its present form. The views set forth in it are not new in this country, having already been elaborated by writers on prophecy; but the way of putting them is so fresh, striking, and concise that few can read the book without learning some truth worth learning.

SERMONS. By JOHN KER, D.D. Second series. Second edition. 6s. David Douglas. To our Scotch friends this book will need no word from us to commend it. For many a long year the author stood among the first half-dozen great preachers of Scotland—a man greatly beloved. To others we can only say, Get the book for yourself, and listen to its sweet discourse. Like its author, it abounds in gentle wisdom. There is a large and noble atmosphere about the book—a commingling of intense and real spirituality, with great poetry of thought and expression, which refreshes like a mountain breeze. It is one of those books that rest and delight the reader, bringing health to the jaded spirit.

MERCANTILE MORALS. James Blackwood & Co. This volume purpor's to be a book for young men entering upon the duties of active life, and admirably does it serve its purpose. Commencing with the important principle that wealth is not the chief end of life, the author (whose name is not given) proceeds to deal with the numerous temptations that abound in the mercantile world to dishonesty and indifference to principle. In subsequent chapters Sabbath Desecration, Scepticism, Novel Reading, and Theatre-going are specially considered as dangers besetting the youthful path. A résumé of the history of English trade and commerce, together with a glossary of the principal terms used in law and commerce, the moneys, weights and measures of foreign countries with their English equivalents, complete a book of special utility. It is a good sign that such a volume has already reached its twentieth thousand; it should be widely circulated among the class for whose benefit it has been written.

THE FUTURE AS REVEALED IN DIVINE PREDICTION. By Rev. JOHN STORIE, F.R.S.T. James Gemmell, Edinburgh. The number of works on prophecy which are being produced, evidences the growing interest taken in the study of prophetic truth. So long as this is regulated by a reverential faith in the Word of God as distinguished from the systematisings of men, such study is a cause for thankfulness, and books really helpful to intelligent acquaintance with "the sure word of prophecy" are to be heartily welcomed. The volume before us proceeds on strictly literal lines of interpretation, and is of the extremest futurist school of thought. It contains many valuable hints on passages taken from both the Old and New Testaments, but is chiefly occupied with the Book of Revelation, in dealing with the details of which the author, as we think, leaves much room for criticism and further inquiry, some of his conclusions being both novel and lacking in confirmation. At the same time the book will yield interest to students of prophecy; it bears the impress of earnest thought and honest purpose; and if read in the light of Scripture, instead (as is too often the case with books of this class) of Scripture being read in its light, will be subservient to the interests of truth.

LAST YEAR'S LEAVES. By JOHN JERVIS BERESFORD. Walter Scott. These poems and sonnets make a handsome little volume. The poet finds inspiration in many subjects, and the events, domestic and public, which touch the springs of the nation's life. While we admire his versatility, we do not endorse all his findings.

MEN WHO HAVE MADE THEMSELVES. 3s. 6d. James Blackwood & Co. This interesting and readable volume contains biographical sketches of thirty-seven prominent characters, most of whom rose to distinction from the humblest walks of life by dint of talent, principle, pluck, and perseverance. Such models cannot fail to stimulate youthful ambition to noble attainments, and will help to form the basis of useful lives. Our boys should certainly read this book.

KNOWLEDGE AND FAITH: Studies, Theological and Biblical. By W. ADAMSON, D.D. 4s. 6d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Dr. Adamson is a keen, concise, and clear thinker, and may be safely taken as a trustworthy guide in these days of shifting beliefs. In this work some of the fundamental truths of Christianity are discussed with conspicuous ability. Among the principal topics are, The Sphere of Knowledge and Faith, Science a Witness of God, Personal Trinity, The Biblical Idea of God, The Personality and Divinity of Christ, The Immortality of Man, The Resurrection of the Dead, &c. The treatment is as sound in thought and scientific in method as it is clear in style. Difficulties are boldly met, objections vigorously encountered, and truths are stated with force, lucidity, and freshness. The evangelical faith finds in the author a stout champion. We cordially commend the volume. Its perusal will amply repay the thoughful reader.

CHRIST OR SATAN, WHICH PRINCE BELOVED? By an Evangelist, HENRY EDWARDS, Lausanne. 5s. John F. Shaw & Co. The author's theme is the paramount duty of all believers to maintain separation from the world, and to regard themselves as wholly and solely set apart to the service of Christ. The volume contains five chapters treating on the Counsels of God; the Death of Christ; the Positive Commands of the Divine Word; the Character of Saints as born of God; and the Church as the Body and Bride of Christ,—in their relation to separateness of walk and conversation. The main contention of the book is that those conscious of the high calling of God are bound to hold aloof from all political organisations and popular movements for worldly reform, the kingdom of Christ being entirely distinct and alien from that presided over, as yet, by Satan its usurping prince and god. Much valuable truth is found in the volume, and arguments well worthy of careful thought are set forth; but it would have been well if personalities had been avoided, these being sometimes introduced with a strength of animus calculated to alienate the reader from the writer's train of thought. The value of the treatise would have been enhanced by the omission of allusions capable of being regarded as those of a strong partisan. The book is handsomely bound and well printed, and will doubtless find favour with many.

THE REVISED ENGLISH VERSION of the Old Covenant Scriptures, compared with Inspired Renderings in the New Covenant Scriptures, and with the Ancient Greek and Syriac Versions. By WILLIAM NORTON, of Chudleigh, Devon. 3s. 6d. Mr. Norton seems to us a born reasoner, and is quite at home in the field of criticism. With many of his criticisms we heartily concur. It is unfortunate that the revisers should contradict our Lord in the interpretation given of Ps. viii. 2, though it must be granted that "strength" and not "praise" is the general meaning of the word. The case in a sense is worse in Gen. xlvii. 31, for the alteration there is a piece of sheer empiricism. The word according to the vowel pointing may be read "staff" or "bed"; but on what principle the revisers have taken it upon them to contradict Heb. xi. 21, where the inspired rendering "staff" is given, we cannot imagine. The Pope, when speaking ex cathedrâ, could hardly be more unwarrantably arbitrary. We do not, however, see with Mr. Norton in everything. He is a shade too keen, and does not make sufficient allowance for the fact that New Testament renderings of the Old Testament Scriptures are to some extent commentaries, showing the particular relation in which the original passage stands to New Testament fulfilment. Thus allowing that strength is the strict meaning of "Ghoz" (Ps. viii. 2), the hosannas of the children are declared by our Lord to be the embodiment of the strength in question. Still, Mr. Norton's work is able, and well worth perusal. It may be ordered from the author.

We have received from Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton new editions of Dr. DALE on THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS (7s. 6d.), and THE JOY OF THE MINISTRY, by Rev. F. R. WYNNE (3s. 6d.). The merits of Dr. Dale's lectures are well known. To wide knowledge of men, great breadth of intellect, and keen insight into the meanings of Scripture, he unites a red-hot glow of moral earnestness, which make his lectures very impressive. He is ethical rather than evangelical. He does not by any means put the Gospel into the background, but we think he might have put it more to the front. At the same time we cordially express our profound admiration of his high-toned teaching on ethical questions, and the unswerving loyalty of obedience he claims for Christ as Lord of life and conduct. Mr. Wynne's book took its origin in a series of addresses to Divinity students and young clergymen, who met during the University terms at his house. It is packed full of sound and helpful advice. Each aspect of ministerial life is looked at in a broad and generous spirit, yet with a strong sense of the momentous consequences involved. Mr. Wynne writes from the heart, and from the depths of a varied experience. A bracing breeze of manly sincerity plays about his pages, and makes them both refreshing and invigorating.

Mrs. Josephine Butler's paper, in the March Sentinel, on the relation of the Christian Churches to national complicity with vice, appears as one of The Sentinel Tracts. 2s. per 100. Dyer Bros.

EASTER CARDS.—Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. have issued some beautifully-designed floral cards for the approaching season, Paschal Panzies, Easter Lilies, and Thoughts for Easter being particularly elegant.

LEFT ALONE and AT THE PARLING DAYS. 1d. each. These additions to Horner's Penny Stories for the People contain much Christian teaching of a definite character, calculated to lead to decision for Christ.

THE WAY OF LIFE AND THE WAY OF DEATH. R. Hall 43, Merchant-street, Bow-road. In this sermon to young men, Mr. Archibald Brown sets forth in trenchant language the issues of these two ways—the joy and peace of the one, the sorrow and anguish unutterable of the other.

AN ANGEL'S VISIT TO THE CHURCHES (1d.) and THE DEVIL'S CRADLE (½d.). In the first of these envelope books (Horner & Son), a minister, but not a preacher of Christ, is brought to a sense of his error by a dream. The second shows how successful Satan is in lulling God's people to sleep.

"LET HIM THAT IS ATHIRST, COME." 1d. Wm. Hunt & Co. From these sublime words the Bishop of Liverpool discourses simply and eloquently on the freeness of salvation, and on the fulness of the forgiving mercy and saving grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, typified by "the Water of Life."

JOHN A'LASCO (No. 41 of New Biographical Series). By Rev. A. H. DRYSDALE, M.A. 1d. Religious Tract Society. Readers who have not seen the recently published life of the Polish Reformer should get this bright and comprehensive sketch of his work. It gives an admirable picture of the man, and of his Protestant activity.

THE SCHOOL HYMNAL TUNE BOOK (Tonic Sol-fa Ed.). Edited by John Adcock. 2s. E. Marlborough & Co. Sunday-school workers who find a difficulty in selecting tunes for peculiar metres will be glad to meet with this work. Tunes by Dykes, Sullivan, &c., are to be found, with many old favourites. The book is well printed and neatly bound.

ORGANS, ORGANISTS, AND CHOIRS. E. Minshall. 1s. 6d. Curwen & Sons. This little manual, by the Organist of the City Temple, contains much valuable matter. The chapters deal with the Formation and Conduct of Choirs, Musical Festivals, &c. All who have the conduct of the musical portion of a church service may get many valuable suggestions from the book.

THE BROKEN MAST. 2d. George Stoneman. This story, told in verse, breathing a truly poetic spirit, of the life of one who was admitted to Dr. Barnardo's Village Home, reveals some particulars of the terrible hardships and sufferings, and even worse, that many of the little wanderers in our streets have to endure. It should quicken the sympathies of all on their behalf.

VICTORIA, QUEEN AND EMPRESS. By G. Holden Pike. 1s. Partridge & Co. This volume, in which are several good illustrations, will be helpful in satisfying the public desire, in this Jubilee year, for information concerning the life of the Queen. In it some of the circumstances accompanying the principal events of the reign, as well as many incidents, are told with a freshness which constitute the book a very charming memoir.

PRESENT DAY TRACTS, No. 49. Is the Evolution of Christianity from mere Natural Sources Credible? By Rev. JOHN CAIRNS, D.D. 4d. Religious Tract Society. Principal Cairns answers this question with a decided negative. With convincing logic and rare sweep of knowledge, he shows how Christianity cannot be derived from Greek philosophy, from Jewish literature, or from the Hellenic Judaism of Alexandria. The plausible naturalistic theories of the origin of our faith are torn to tatters by his incisive arguments. In the latest issue, "The Day of Rest" (No. 50), by Sir J. W. DAWSON, there is much valuable teaching, on which is based the argument that the Seventh or Sabbath Day of creation still continues. The author shows how beneficent is the institution of the Sabbath as a day of rest for man, and speaks of it as a type of the eternal rest that shall begin when the day of the Lord is fully revealed.

Among the Churches.

⁎ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Henry Dening holds Gospel mission services every Wednesday evening at St. James's, Moore Park-road, Fulham.

Dr. Edghill, Chaplain-General to the Forces, has been appointed to the Chaplaincy of the Tower, vacant by the resignation of Rev. E. J. Rogers.

Another anonymous donation of £1000 has been made to the Clergy Distress Fund, now being raised by the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy.

Lord Rupert William Cecil, second son of the Marquis of Salisbury, who was recently ordained, has been licensed to a curacy at Great Yarmouth, and will labour in one of its poorest districts.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, it is stated, hopes to bring out by May another portion of his Commentary on the Epistles, which he has had for several years in preparation. It is devoted to the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

The annual tea to 300 poor mothers was given last week in the school-room, St. Thomas's-road, S.E. Four meetings for mothers and grandmothers are held every week, and much good results from this missionary enterprise in this neighbourhood.

It is intended shortly to hold a mission in Jamaica, under the auspices of the Bishop, who also desires the formation of a Prayer Union and Layhelpers' Association for the diocese, with the special object of helping forward this mission.

The three weeks' mission in the parish church of Long Clawson, near Melton, has been a memorable one. The union of all denominations has been remarkable, and on the closing evening men and women voluntarily testified to the goodness of God, while a great mass rose in acknowledgment of Christ as their Saviour.

Mr. Eugene Stock, speaking in the Free Trade Hall in Manchester on the 14th inst., stated that the Church Missionary Society hoped to send up an expedition under Bishop Parker, to try and treat with Mwanga for Mr. Mackay's release, and to endeavour to place the mission upon a proper basis. Mr. Ashe appealed for funds to put a small steamer on the Lake Victoria in aid of this project.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A special mission at Edenbridge has proved a season of great awakening.

Special Conferences for the promotion of spiritual life and work have recently been held by the Presbyteries of Down and Dromore, Ireland.

In connection with Waterloo-road Church, Blyth, a "Women's Missionary Society" has been formed, which already numbers forty-one members.

At a crowded meeting, at Birkenhead, in support of the Presbyterian missions, it was stated that there are now in China 3500 adult communicants in full membership of the Church.

At the annual meeting of the Brockley congregation (Rev. Hugh McIntosh, pastor) it was reported that the mission work begun at Deptford, and all the congregational agencies, are in a healthy condition.

During a mission at Forest-hill, conducted by Mr. Davey, large numbers of the non-church-going classes have been attracted to the services, and many souls have been brought to a knowledge of the truth.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The new Mission-hall, Byrom-street, Manchester, has become the centre of much active Christian work. An impetus was given by a week's Gospel mission at the beginning of the year.

A week's successful mission has just been held at Reading, in connection with the meeting there. At the closing thanksgiving service many valuable testimonies were given of blessing received.

In Bessbrook and neighbourhood, co. Armagh, the Friends are very actively engaged in promoting Ireland's liberation from her great curse, viz., strong drink. The village itself is famous for the absence of police, pawnshop, or publican, though it has 4000 people in it.

Very successful annual meetings of the adult schools of Middlesboro', Northampton, and Norwich, have recently been held. Mission work in connection with the first-named school is regularly carried on, and in Norwich other churches have borrowed the idea and established excellent schools.

Arthur Dixon has been working in Ulster Province, especially in and round Hillsboro', co. Down, for about nine months past, under the care of the Home Mission Committee of Dublin yearly meeting, and much blessing has attended his Gospel labours. He has just concluded a mission in Grange district, co. Tyrone, which lasted several weeks, during which time there were many hopeful conversions.

The first series of Gospel mission meetings ever held at Reading in connection with the Society has been concluded, after extending over nine days. Mr. Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester, was aided by Miss Isabelle Young, of York. The power of the Lord was felt. A most interesting feature was Mr. Sessions' lecture on the History of the Early Church and the Catacombs, illustrated by diagrams.

A quiet but genuine revival has been steadily going on among the scattered populations of Wyres-dale and Wensley-dale in Lancashire. From a variety of causes, the Friends had almost died out there, when a few years ago a devoted young Friend settled down in the district, and gave himself to the work of evangelising and teaching. The congregations and schools now sustained, and the various means of good in operation,

Ervin G. Taber, under the auspices of Western Y.M., is in the City of Mexico, with its population of 300,000 souls. He says that "the outlook is good for a successful mission among these people who have not the open Bible," but "who only know God as they see Him through images and feast days, and hear of Him through the unintelligent preaching of a blind priesthood." Growing interest is shown in the Bible-school, and the mid-week prayer-meetings are specially interesting.

SALVATION ARMY.

At Keswick, since the opening, there have been over one hundred professed conversions.

In the Carlisle division there are now 17 corps, an increase of 10 in a comparatively short time.

At Southampton, within the past few weeks, a publican, a poor woman led by her little boy, an Indian sailor, and several fallen girls "came out for salvation."

At Farnworth, during the opening week, the town was completely moved. Great part of the crowded congregations came straight from the public-house, and in these few days forty-nine professed to find salvation.

In connection with the rescue work carried on by the Army, a permanent "night fort" has been established at Charing Cross, where two faithful helpers may be found by any girl in distress after eleven o'clock every night.

The "Cellar, Gutter, and Garret" Brigade report twenty-one converts on their roll-call, all of whom are thoroughly reliable and tested. Every week over four hundred families are visited. Many fallen girls have been rescued, and a good deal of time is spent in nursing the sick, and helping over-worked mothers.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. Frederick Monk is holding a twenty-two days' mission with much acceptance, in the commodious chapel, Wymondham, Norfolk, of which Rev. W. Parry is the minister.

Considerable additions to the membership are reported from the churches at Crown-street, Ipswich, Victoria-road, Cambridge, St. John's-wood, and Albion Church, Hammersmith.

Last week we stated, on the authority of a contemporary, that Dr. Conder, of Leeds, had been giving lectures on "Present Day Politics;" it ought to have been "Present Day Scepticism."

Rev. B. Waugh, of New Southgate, has resigned his charge in order to devote himself wholly to the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, of which he is honorary secretary.

At the seventh anniversary of Rev. R. Berry's settlement at Islington Chapel, it was stated that all the numerous organisations have been kept going with great vigour, and that during the winter breakfasts to over 200 poor children have been given four days a week.

The Alexandra Mission Hall, Penge, carried on by the Anerley Church, has become a power in the neighbourhood. Sunday night services are crowded, the Sunday-school has nearly 500 children, and many organisations for the uplifting of the people are in good working. Twenty-two persons from the mission have become members of the parent church.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes (of Birmingham) has held a weeks' mission service at Park Chapel, Crouch End, of which Rev. Alfred Rowland is the pastor. It has been a very solemn season, and evoked on the part of the members of the church an earnest spirit of prayer and expectation for a greater blessing on the faithful ministry of the pastor. Large numbers attended the meetings on Sunday and during the week, and a deepened feeling of spiritual need is not the least of the results which have followed.

METHODIST.

Encouraging reports of work in the villages have been received from several Joyful News evangelists.

From Indiana over 7000 accessions and conversions are reported in one week of the revival season.

During a twelve days' mission at Hounslow, conducted by Rev. T. Waugh, over 150 persons entered the inquiry rooms.

At Normanton, during a Primitive Methodist revival mission, seventy adults and fifty Sunday scholars professed conversion.

Dr. Peck, of New Haven, Conn., has had the joy of seeing more than seven hundred accessions to his church during the past year or two.

A fortnight's mission services at Wardington, Banbury, conducted by Mr. Walter Mellers, has been followed with most blessed results.

Over 350 persons attended the last service in connection with Rev. Thomas Cook's mission at Leicester, for the purpose of being directed to suitable classes.

During a fortnight's mission at Chesterton, in the Audley Circuit, amongst the sixty persons who came forward as penitents, were several remarkable cases.

About fifty adults, as well as many younger people, professed to receive spiritual benefit during a mission in Burbank-street Chapel, West Hartlepool, conducted by Rev. J. T. Oliver.

A mission has been conducted at New Brumby and Crosby in the Winterton Circuit. Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have had the joy of seeing great numbers give themselves to Christ.

To relieve the great distress among the miners and shipyard men at Scotswood-on-Tyne, a bi-weekly distribution of soup and bread has been organised by Rev. H. Hope, and also a Sunday morning free breakfast for 300 children.

Captain Warner Dennis' eleven days' mission at the Victoria-street Chapel, Littleborough, Manchester, has been greatly blessed. Sixty-six names of inquirers were taken. Large numbers of those who seldom attend any

A considerable increase in the membership, is re ported from Liverpool, Newcastle, Woking, Sout Shields, King-street, Plymouth, and churches in th Clapham Circuit.

A Christian Workers' Association has been formed i connection with Methodist New Connexion Church a Gloucester, where six young men have visited betwee 600 and 700 families.

There have been "showers of blessing" in the cours of a mission at Victoria, Manchester, conducted b Rev. W. H. Tindall. At the close almost the enti congregation arose in token of consecration to Christ.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. William Noble has visited Hull. During the mission, over 1300 persons signed the pledge.

Sir Charles Warren has issued stringent orders to prevent drinking by the police whilst on duty.

The Scottish Band of Hope Union reports a year of progress. The societies affiliated have increased from 528 to 560.

The British Temperance League has held a successful conference, &c., at Nottingham. Mr. James Barlow, J.P. (president), Rev. Charles Garrett, and others took part.

At the annual meeting of the Midland (Branch) Railway Temperance Union, held recently at Derby, Mr. Noble, chairman, said the Society had caused a reformation in many parts of the line.

FOREIGN.

There is a "Home for Intemperate Women" in Boston, which has seventy-one inmates.

A Baptist missionary, South Africa, writes, "The call for temperance work here is loud and long-continued."

A statue of the Queen, with a drinking-fountain, is to be erected as a Jubilee memorial at Hyderabad, India.

Count Tolstoi, the noted Russian author, has published a warning to his countrymen on the ravages of alcohol.

New Rugby, the American colony founded by Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., is said to be prospering; it has no public-houses.

In Ontario Province, Canada, West, a more effective temperance measure was recently promised in a "speech from the Throne."

In The Hygienic Movement, a magazine published at Brussels, Dr. Moeller favourably reviews temperance work in England.

The American missionaries at Cairo use for sacramental purposes water in which raisins have been soaked and pressed.

Even with violations of the liquor-laws the drink trade in Atlanta, Ga., is only 300 dollars a day, against, in former times, 4500.

Rev. J. G. Gregson says brandy and champagne are the favourite beverages of the Indian nobles and rajahs, with very evil results.

A Washington correspondent reports a great improvement in the matter of temperance amongst members of the American Congress.

In a recent address, Mr. H. M. Stanley said many deaths of Europeans in Africa attributed to the climate were really due to drink.

The Chief Justice of Cyprus laments "the most venial form of crime" in the island is "the reckless use of the knife while under the influence of drink."

Mr. J. C. Harding, Grand Chief Templar, New Zealand, writes it "is as impossible to regulate the drink-traffic as a south-western hurricane or an earthquake."

A law has been passed in Switzerland making the sale of liquors a State monopoly, one-tenth of the profits of all sales are to be devoted to the temperance cause.

The Kansas legislature has changed the name of "St. John County" to "Logan County." It had been named after ex-Governor St. John, a noted prohibitionist.

The Excise Commissioners, New York, state, notwithstanding the present excessive number of drink saloons in the city, the pressure for new licenses "is well nigh intolerable."

The W.C.T.U., of Ottawa, Canada, have petitioned the city council for the erection of three drinking fountains in that city, in celebration of Queen Victoria's Jubilee Year.

Professor Price, Zion Institute, N.C., the coloured orator, has been addressing large meetings in the Northern States on behalf of temperance work amongst the freemen in the South.

Rev. A. O. Williams, C.M.S. missionary at Whangawui (New Zealand), says, "The temperance work is progressing steadily and satisfactorily. The total number of Maori abstainers in my district is now 500."

The Indian Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. Roberts, has made known his desire that all temperance societies in the army should be recognised as regimental institutions, and, in every way, encouraged by the officers.

A strong scientific temperance instruction Bill passed the Minnesota legislature, March 1. This makes twenty-six States and Territories that have provided for the instruction of their youth upon this important subject.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt soon finishes her labours in Japan, and will then go to India, and from thence to Africa. This brave apostle of temperance is making the W.C.T.U. known and appreciated in every land and by all people.

In Paris there are more than 20,000 places for the sale of intoxicating drinks—that is one to four houses, one for twenty-five men. There was, last year, an addition of 107 to the Abstainers' Union, 43 having signed to encourage and help the weak.

The Paris section of the "Blue Cross" gives an account of its position at the close of its second year of existence. Although drunkenness is not so prevalent in France as in some other countries, yet there is abundant room to fight against the dire effects of alcohol.

A paragraph from Stuttgart, Germany, states that not to go in a wirthshaus and not to smoke, is nearly incomprehensible to the German mind. As soon as a boy has been confirmed, which usually takes place at fourteen, it is expected that he will do this as a matter of course.

The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs stated in the House, recently, that five of the six Governments concerned had accepted the decision of the Conference, held at the Hague, on the North Sea liquor traffic, and the Convention would shortly be Gospel temperance meetings have been held lately in Cuba.

"Paul's Law of Charity as an Argument for Total Abstinence" is the title of an able article by Dr. Cuyler in The Homiletic Review.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has been devoting a considerable amount of time and energy to temperance work amongst the Maoris, and with good results.

Mr. C. S. Salmon, in The Scotsman, says, that owing to the abominable drink supplied them, two of the four races inhabiting the Gaboon district, Africa, are rapidly dying out.

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY (Commenced 1863).

President :—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

THE COTTAGE HOMES AT FARNINGHAM

Are for 300 Little Boys, homeless or in danger of falling into crime. They are clothed, fed, educated, and taught a trade, and then provided with outfit and placed in situations, while they are looked after as "Old Boys."

THE ORPHAN HOMES AT SWANLEY

Are for 200 Orphan or Fatherless Boys, who are wholly maintained and educated, and receive technical instruction in lithography, telegraphy, photography, chemistry, and other subjects, to fit them for a working life.

BASIS :—"The Institution is Scriptural, but Unsectarian; and the boys are educated in the fear of God and in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 500 Boys now in the Homes. Over 1000 have already been sent out into the world.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Congregational Collections, and Bequests are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary,

AFTER EIGHTY-FIVE YEARS

Of glorious service for Christ, conferring incalculable benefits on the poorest children of Southwark,

CASTLE YARD MISSION

stands in urgent need of help to restore the venerable building, that the invaluable work may be maintained.

One of the very first Sabbath-schools established in London, and the reputed birthplace of the great Ragged School Movement, Castle Yard has a pre-eminent claim upon all Christian people in its present hour of need.

The prompt and generous aid of every reader of THE CHRISTIAN is most earnestly solicited, and will be gratefully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; Treasurer, Rev. ROBERT TUCK, B.A., 23, Thornford-road, Lewisham-park, S.E.; Bankers, London & Westminster, St. James's-square, S.W. "It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life"—Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions when all the mists have rolled away."
Baptist Messenger.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan are well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

AN EXCELLENT TEXT-BOOK for BIBLE CLASSES.—Sabbath School Magazine.

The Number "SEVEN" in Scripture.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Readers of history, and observers of nature alike, have often remarked on the frequency with which the number SEVEN occurs, and on the peculiar significance which, in all times, has attached to this number. Readers of the Bible, too, cannot well have failed to notice how frequently this particular number occurs in Holy Scripture; but many of them will be astonished to find the extent to which that number enters into the structure of God's Word, when they read a little book by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, C.B., entitled 'The Number SEVEN in Scripture.' This gives a complete and exhaustive record of all the passages in which the number appears, quoting about three hundred instances in the Old Testament, and one hundred in the New Testament. It will be found to run through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day, or Sabbath in Eden, and concluding with the various series of 'sevens' in the Apocalypse. The variety may be gathered from the following:—

Seven Utterances of God in Eden.
Seven Sayings of Christ on the Cross.
Seven Weepings of Joseph.
Seven Excuses of Moses when commissioned to deliver Israel.
Seven Prayers of Jesus recorded by Luke.
Seven Miracles recorded by John.
Seven Resurrections mentioned in Scripture.
Seven 'Walks' described in the Epistle to the Ephesians.
Seven Beatitudes in the Revelation.

"As the Author observes, 'We must surely acknowledge that a Divine design has caused this particular number to be so frequently employed, and to enter into the composition of the books of the Bible—books written by so many hands, and at such various periods. Whatever other object the Divine Author of the Bible may have had in view in making such frequent use of the number, it seems to be generally believed, for one thing at least, that it was intended to convey the idea of completeness or perfection. Its first employment on the occasion of the completed work of creation is strongly in favour of this presumption.'"—The Quiver.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

"It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. A more perfect knowledge of such a life cannot fail to strengthen the faith of some and to inspire the zeal of others. The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures, which are not easily forgotten."

"The name of the writer is sufficient to secure for this pretty book a cordial welcome. Percival, an amateur artist, beguiles the long hours of his dying illness by representing on canvas fancies and legends connected with our Saviour's life on earth. The tiny thread of narrative is used to string together these parabolic scenes."—The Record.

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist sketching his pictures and telling his wonderful stories is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get-up of the volume is a credit to the Publishers. It will make a fine gift-book, fit for any recipient."—The Christian Commonwealth.

"Percival's Picture Gallery is a prettily illustrated book, containing a collection of fanciful legends, which equally merit the name of parables, since they convey many spiritual lessons in the form of a story. The familiar letters A. L. O. E. will be sufficient guarantee for the devoutness of tone and originality of style which mark this volume."—The Literary World.

"The volume is most beautifully got up, printed on fine paper with large margin; and most artistically illustrated. It will prove a very acceptable present to one who loves the beautiful, and who can appreciate A. L. O. E.'s tender and touching words."

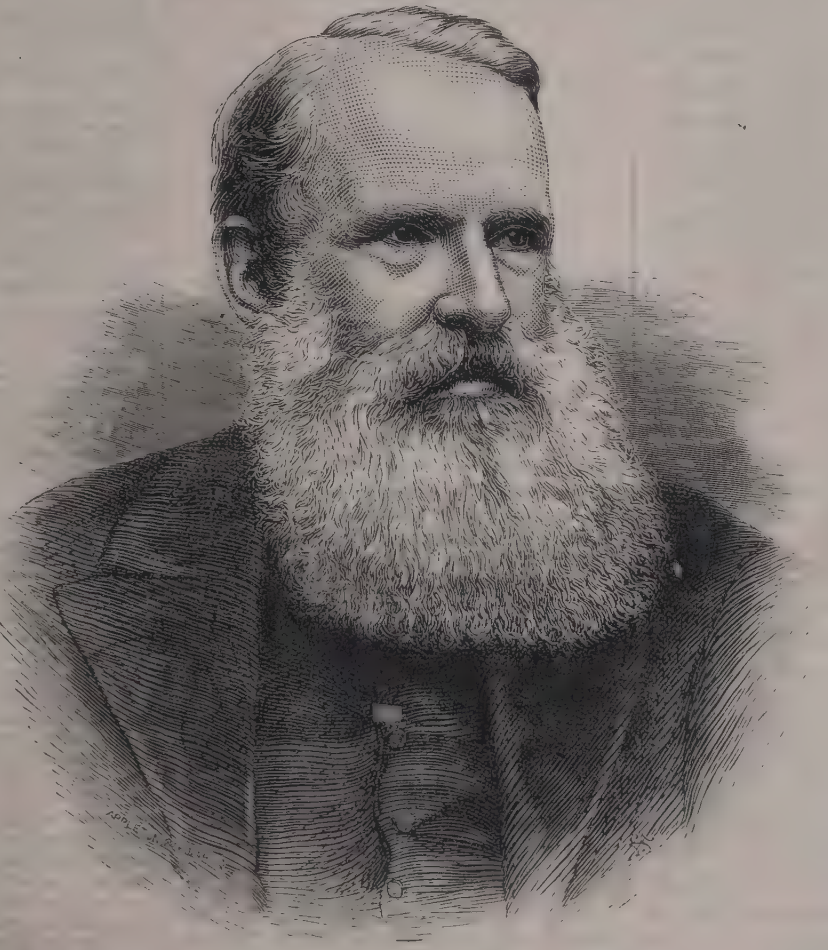
REV. CHARLES GARRETT.

ON the principle that "life is fruitful in the ratio in which it is laid out in noble action," the life of CHARLES GARRETT has been fruitful indeed. For nearly fifty years he has laboured for the temporal, moral, and spiritual welfare of his fellows, with an enthusiasm which can only be inspired and sustained by such principles as those to which he has so consistently adhered. His career is full of inspiration to the vast multitude of young men, who, like him, have no other capital with which to begin life than a good stock of common sense, manly independence, and earnestness of purpose.

Mr. Garrett was born at Shaftesbury in 1825, and is therefore in his sixty-second year. He embraced the principles of total abstinence when only fifteen years of age, and for forty-seven years he has been an enthusiastic and successful exponent of these principles. Standing at the present time in the front rank of temperance reformers, his espousal of the temperance movement originated in the visit of John Cassell, a Manchester carpenter, who afterwards became the founder of the celebrated publishing firm, still known by his name. John Cassell came to Shaftesbury on Nov. 24, 1840, to lecture on teetotalism. Mr. Garrett says:—"I have the bill announcing the lecture at home now; it is one of the most sacred things I have; but when I saw it I had no idea whether teetotalism related to things spiritual, scientific, or political. I inquired of a good many, and found them in the same position. I spoke to a young companion who attended the Independent chapel, and from the minister he obtained the required information." Finding that it was a proposal to abstain from all intoxicating beverages, he went to the town-hall, heard John Cassell, and signed the pledge.



(From Photograph by Messrs. Appleton & Co., Bradford.)

It is highly amusing to hear of the treatment he received from his class-leader on making him acquainted with the step he had taken. He said, "You don't know what you have been doing!" "Well," said this young abstainer, "I have only promised never to touch anything that will make people drunk." "That's not it," said the leader, "it's a Manchester trick to upset the throne. Depend upon it it's a scheme of those Radicals; you don't know what these men are up to; you had better have nothing to do with it." Happily for the world, young Garrett did not share his leader's fears, and, having more of the spirit of Luther than Erasmus, he determined to maintain the position he had taken at all hazards.

He made his first public speech when but a lad of fourteen, wearing a short jacket. From teaching a class in the Sunday school, Charles was elevated to the position of a local preacher, and shortly afterwards he determined to devote his life to the ministry of the Gospel. He was accepted by the Conference, and in 1847 entered the Theological Institution at Richmond. Commencing his ministry at Mildenhall, in Suffolk, he rapidly won his way to the large centres of population, and in 1860 was appointed to Preston, having previously laboured in the Rochdale circuit. The three years spent in Preston will ever be associated with scenes of the most heartrending character. They were the years of the cotton famine which raged with such terrible fury from 1861 to 1863. The price of cotton in Liverpool had risen to the almost incredible sum of 2s. 9½d. per lb., and as a consequence the Lancashire mills were idle, and hundreds of thousands of operatives famishing. In December, 1862, the distress was so great that half-a-million of them were living either on charity or the parish, the loss of wages being £168,000 a week. Among these starving cotton-spinners Mr. Garrett's benevolent, compassionate spirit found abundant room for exercise, and with a diligence never faltering he laboured hard to mitigate their bodily sufferings, and to direct their subdued and chastened spirits to the source of all consolation. He acquired such a wealth of gratitude and affection among these people, that when his term of service expired, his departure was made the occasion of a public farewell, and the handsome testimonial which was presented to him was a tangible proof of their undying attachment.

After spending three years in Hull, Mr. Garrett returned to Lancashire, and took up his residence in Manchester. Here he laboured with remarkable success for six years. During this period he travelled over 100,000 miles, preached more than 2000 times, and wrote 20,000 letters in addition to his other work. So highly was Mr. Garrett esteemed by all sections of the Christian Church, that on leaving he was presented with a cheque for 1000 guineas in the Free Trade Hall, to which the Bishop of Manchester had liberally subscribed.

A story is told about this cheque which shows how little regard Mr. Garrett had for money. A friend who knew how indifferent he was about acquiring wealth of this kind, asked him shortly after the presentation what he had done with the cheque which had been handed to him. With a hearty laugh, Mr. Garrett searched all his pockets, and then said, "I haven't the slightest idea." The cheque was found at last among the loose papers on the table. It is said that the stewards, whose business it is to pay their ministers, transact all money matters with Mrs. Garrett, who allows her husband pocket-money, which, however, he gives away as quickly as he gets it.

From Manchester Mr. Garrett removed to Liverpool, where he has laboured for upwards of fourteen years. Mr. Moody's visit to "the black spot on the Mersey" occasioned this prolonged residence in Liverpool. At the expiration of the allotted term of three years, during which time Mr. Garrett had laboured with characteristic enthusiasm for the moral and spiritual elevation of the people, he had arranged to go to Bradford. The Convention held by Mr. Moody caused all his plans to be disarranged, and led to the retention of Mr. Garrett's services in Liverpool. At this Convention the question considered was:—"How to reach the Masses—the Corner-men and Labourers," and Mr. Garrett was asked to speak. In the course of his remarks he said "that the Christian people of Liverpool had themselves to blame for the condition of the masses in the town, for no places were open to them but those of temptation." These remarks created so much enthusiasm that Mr. Moody rose to move that Mr. Garrett be heard for ten minutes longer, so as to have time to further develop his argument, in which he suggested the idea of cocoa-rooms. This proposal commended itself so fully to the judgment of those present, that there and then a Company was formed, a number of well-known gentlemen offering liberal support, and people in all parts of the hall promising to take shares in the Company.

The late Mr. Alexander Balfour, hearing that Mr. Garrett was shortly to leave for Bradford, said, "Oh, we are not going to form this Company if Mr. Garrett is to leave us!" So it was decided to memorialise the Wesleyan Conference, asking for his re-appointment in Liverpool. To this request the Conference wisely agreed, and a mission was established for reaching the lowest quarters of the city, at the head of which Mr. Garrett was placed. Then the Cocoa-room Company was started, to afford comfort and accommodation in competition with public-houses. The success of this Company has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the promoters—no fewer than 30,000 persons partaking of refreshments and using these rooms daily.

Pitt-street Chapel, which is the head-quarters of the operations of the Mission, was burdened, when Mr. Garrett was appointed to it, with a debt of £3500, and had neither schoolrooms nor vestry. By great exertion Mr. Garrett raised £7000, paying off the debt, renovating the chapel, and There are now four mission-halls beside Pitt-street Chapel, and Mr. Garrett is assisted by a minister and five lay missionaries, whose labours are crowned by most gratifying and permanent success.

The strain was so great in carrying out these much-needed alterations, that Mr. Garrett's health gave way, and his life was even despaired of. With his usual thoughtfulness and kindness, the late Mr. Alexander Balfour placed his house at Mr. Garrett's disposal, and, after some months of rest, he regained his strength. While resting in this beautiful home, Mr. Garrett devised a scheme for providing over-worked ministers with similar advantages. Knowing that there were many whose circumstances would not allow of the needed change of scene, he successfully carried out a scheme for building a House of Rest at Colwyn Bay, and establishing a fund by means of which many a valuable life will be prolonged, and many a minister enabled to render better service to the cause of Christ.

Mr. Garrett is so popular, both as a preacher and temperance advocate, that applications for his services reach him from all parts of the country, on an average of ten a day. He possesses a marvellous power of moving and influencing men. Like a true patriot, he lives and labours for the emancipation of England from the curse of intemperance, and both in the pulpit and on the platform he speaks with an intensity, eloquence, and plainness, on this subject, which is well worthy of imitation. Mr. Garrett's book, entitled, "Loving Counsels," which has been recently published, contains many of his speeches and sermons, the perusal of which cannot fail to benefit both intellect and heart.

Mr. Garrett has recently initiated an enterprise for presenting to the Queen a memorial from the Women of England, calling Her Majesty's attention to the evil effects arising from the Sunday traffic in intoxicating drink, and praying that her Jubilee may be rendered a year of rejoicing to the people, by the passing of a national Sunday Closing Bill. Mr. Garrett believes that if the women take this enterprise up with the enthusiasm it deserves, millions of signatures may be obtained.

In proof of the esteem in which Mr. Garrett is held in the Wesleyan Church, it may be stated, that in 1882 he received the highest honour that Methodism can bestow upon its ministers, being made President of the Conference. The wisdom of this choice was evinced by a marked increase of spiritual life throughout the Connexion during the Presidental year, and in a large

IN A SNOW-STORM.

By Rev. GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D.D.

I was taking my usual "constitutional" after breakfast. It was snowing heavily; but the walk through the "feathery fall," and in the crisp winter air, was delightful. I had had a sharp spin of about three miles, and was nearing my place of abode in the town of N—— where I was holding special meetings. My body was in a tingle of delight from my walk, and my thoughts were busily engaged with the subject-matter of the Bible-reading which I was then preparing for the afternoon service. I was anxious to get to my room and to "my type-writer," in order that I might fasten down some of the delicious "thoughts of God" which were pouring into my heart from his Word. Thus absorbed with thought, and partially blinded by the fast-falling snow, I was very nearly run over by a sleigh, which was at the moment crossing the street at right angles with my own course. A sharp cry of the driver of the sleigh brought me to a standstill just as he succeeded in reining up his horse. We looked at each other for a moment and then I lifted my hat and signified to him to "drive on." At the same time he courteously waved his hand to me, as much as to say:—"Go on, sir; I will wait until you have crossed." I crossed the street, and he drove on in his direction; but immediately after turned his sleigh in the same direction that I was going. In a moment I heard my name called out:—

"Is this Dr. Pentecost?"

Looking behind me I saw that the man had drawn his sleigh up to the side of the street pavement, and was evidently desirous of speaking with me. I immediately replied:—

"Yes; I am Dr. Pentecost. Did you wish to speak to me?"

"I don't know that I ought to detain you, especially in this storm; but if you could spare me a minute of time, I would be very grateful to you."

"Certainly," I replied, "with pleasure;" and immediately stepped out into the street and extended my hand to the man. I then discovered that he was the driver of the "grocery waggon," and was on his morning rounds delivering goods. After a common greeting I put my usual question to him:—

"Are you a Christian?" To which he replied:—

"No, sir, but I have been in to several of your meetings with my wife; and last night I wanted to get up out of my seat and go forward with the rest and 'confess Christ' as you explained it; but something seemed to hold me back, and I could not get off my seat to save my life; and my wife is very much distressed in her mind also; and I don't think she slept an hour last night, she was that worked up about her sins."

This was most interesting, and I got a little nearer to the man, by putting my foot on the step of his sleigh, and again grasped him by the hand.

"Well, my friend," I continued, "I am very glad, indeed, to hear that you are interested about your soul; but why don't you accept Christ at once? Nothing in earth or hell can prevent you from accepting Christ, if you desire Him and are ready to take Him and yield yourself wholly up to Him. You may do it right here, as you sit in your sleigh."

To this challenge he made answer:—

"I could not do that, you know. I have been a very hard case; I have not been to church for years, and I am a very ignorant man; but I do want to know how to be saved, and if you could say anything that would help me, I would be very grateful. It is asking a good deal of you to stand here in the snow and talk to a man like me, for I am very ignorant, and do not know anything about it; only since I have been going to those meetings everything seems different to me and to my wife too, and I am sorry for the way I have lived all these years, and mean to be a Christian, and try and bring up my children

“Well, my friend,” I replied, “you may be a Christian right here, if you will. Christ came into the world, not to save learned people or good people, but ignorant people and sinners—just such men as you and I are; and to save us by grace—that is, without any merit of our own, but just as we are, and just now, immediately, without any further ado about it. It will be time enough for you to acquire knowledge after you are saved, but you have not the time now (nor the power, if you had ever so much time) to overcome either your ignorance or your sin; and if you could do either, you would be no nearer salvation than you are now; for if you were the wisest and the best man living you would still have to accept Jesus Christ as your Saviour, coming to him as a sinner. Let us see if we can't get at the matter in a few words.”

“If you can tell me anything that will make it plain to me, so that I can get hold of it, I will thank you very much; and you will excuse me for stopping you in the snow, won't you, sir, for I am really distressed in my mind.”

“Certainly, my friend, don't think about me or the snow-storm, for I assure you you could not have done me a greater favour than to have stopped me as you did, and for the reason you did; for the next greatest joy after being saved one's self is to be the means of saving someone else. Now let us see how much we do know. Will you answer me a few questions just as frankly as you can?”

“Yes; I will answer any question you are of a mind to put to me.”

“Well, then, first: Are you a sinner?”

“I be; and a great one. I tell you I have been a hard case.”

I did not know exactly what he meant by saying he was a hard case, but did not inquire into his meaning. I pushed on, and inquired:—

“How do you know that you are a sinner?”

“Well, I suppose every man knows what kind of a man he is, and I just know that I am a sinner.”

“But, my friend, you must have known this all your life, though it does not seem ever to have troubled or disturbed you. What is the reason you are troubled about the matter now?”

“That is one of the things that bothers me. The last two or three days, since I have been going to those meetings, I have been trying to be better, but I seem to have been a worse man ever since I tried to be a better man; and then your preaching makes everything seem different to me. Every time you preach and tell how Jesus Christ died to save sinners, it just seems to me as if I was the greatest sinner that ever lived; every word you preach seems to come right over my way, and I keep on saying to myself ‘that fits you,’ and it does; in fact, I never saw things just as I do now; the Bible seems to be just like a live book talking to you about your sins and about Jesus Christ.”

This seemed a very clear statement of the case to me, and to illustrate in a singularly clear way the exact truth about conviction of sin. He had always known that he was a sinner, but had never been convicted of his sin; but now that he hearkened to God's Word and believed God's testimony concerning sin, and especially as sin is revealed in the face of Jesus Christ, it became a dreadful thing to him. So I said to him:—

“Yes, my friend, we are all sinners, and we all know it; but when God reveals it to us by his Word and Spirit, and declares that we are condemned on account of it, then it becomes a serious matter. Do you accept this testimony of God against yourself as a sinner without question?”

“Yes, sir; there is no question about it, and now it seems to me that God is just saying that to me all the time; ‘you are a sinner, and unless you are saved you will lose your soul.’”

“But God tells us something more than that we are sinners. The same Bible tells us that ‘God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.’ Do you not believe that?”

“Oh, yes, sir; but I am a hard case, and I am

“My friend, don't you see that your ignorance and your sinfulness are the very reason why God sent his Son into the world to die for us? If you were wise and good you would not need a Saviour, but since you are ignorant and sinful you do need one. Now, for whom did Christ die?”

“Why, for sinners, of course.”

“Yes, you are quite right; ‘for the Son of man came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance.’ And ‘this is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.’ Now this being true, do you believe that, great sinner as you believe yourself to be, Jesus Christ is able to save you?”

“Yes; I believe He is able to save me.”

“Do you believe that He is willing to save you?”

“Yes; He must be willing, or He would not have come, and that is what you keep saying to us every night, and you read it out of the Bible. Yes; I believe He is willing to save me.”

“When do you think He is able and willing to save you?”

After a moment's hesitation, in which, with downcast eyes, he seemed to be pondering this question, he looked up and said:—

“Why, if He died for me, and ‘put away my sin,’ and is able to save me, He must be willing to do it right away—now—if I am willing to give up to Him.”

“Well, my friend, are you not willing to give up to Him? Could you have a more loving and gentle Master than one who has died for you, and who is now in heaven, ‘living to make intercession for you’? Ought you not at once to surrender your whole spirit, soul, and body to Him, and do it at once?”

His hand tightened over mine, for all this time I had been standing there by his side, with my foot on the step of his sleigh, much like Philip sitting by the eunuch's side in his chariot, preaching Jesus unto him, and I thought the surrender was to be made there and then. However, he hesitated just long enough to give the devil his chance with him again, and then fell back again upon the declaration that he was “too ignorant,” and had been “too hard a case;” and how could God accept and save a man who had lived in neglect of his law all his life, without he first showed that he was “worthy,” and so forth. I urged the truth of the “grace of God” upon him, and tried to show, from many scripture texts, that “Christ was the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth,” and that his ignorance and sinfulness were no bar to his acceptance with God, but both were strong reasons why he should take hold on the outstretched hand of God's grace and mercy at once. Little by little he came back again to see how Jesus had “put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself,” and that it was “in Him” he had “redemption, through his blood and forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.”

These truths all seemed clear and plain to him, beside many others which I showed him out of God's Word, though I could but repeat them to him, not having my Bible with me (nor could I have used it if I had had it, in the fast-falling snow); but one more difficulty, and an old and common one, suggested itself to him, as a last refuge for his will to intrench itself behind.

“But how shall I know that I am saved?”

“My dear friend, had you done me an injury, and I had forgiven it you, how would you know that I had so forgiven it?”

“Why, I suppose if you should tell me so, or send me word that you had forgiven me, I would know it that way.”

“Exactly. Then how do you suppose God makes us know that He forgives us?”

“I suppose when He forgives us we feel it.”

“But why should you accept my word for the forgiveness of an injury, and refuse to accept God's Word. You accept God's Word for the fact that Jesus came into the world and died for our sins, and was raised again from the dead for our justification; you have been telling me that it is God's Word that keeps telling you what a until God's Word made it so clear to you that it was a guilty and condemned thing; now, why not take God's Word for his love, grace, and forgiveness?”

Then I repeated to him several passages of Scripture in which the forgiveness of sins is freely proclaimed to sinners, especially Acts xiii. 38, in which we read: “Be it known unto you, men and brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins.” And 2 Cor. v. 19: “Namely, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them [i.e. forgiving them] ...For He hath made Him (Jesus) to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.”

This seemed to clear up his difficulties, or, at least, it showed him that we must know God's mind toward us by what He has done for us in Christ, and by what He says to us in his Word. In other words, he saw that he was saved by the work of Christ, and must be assured by the word of Christ. He asked just one more question, which I was eager and ready to answer.

“How am I to take Jesus Christ for my Saviour? If I will come to-night, will you tell me how?”

“My friend, you need not wait till to-night, and for the meeting; you may take Him here and now, just where we are under God's heavens, in the midst of this snow-storm, which seems to be saying to you, ‘Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.’ Listen to what God says to you, written in Rom. x. 9, ‘But what saith it? (the Gospel). The word is nigh thee, even in thy heart, and in thy mouth: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.’ It only remains for you to decide for Christ, and confess Him as your Saviour here and now. Will you have Him? Will you confess Him?”

The blessed tears came into his eyes; his chin quivered (how well I know these signs of a surrendering heart!), and then, looking me full in the face, and tightening his grip of my hand again, he said:—

“I confess Jesus Christ as my Saviour, and I take Him with all my heart.”

“Thank God, my brother,” I replied, and then lifted my hat and bade him bow his head with me; and there, in the snow-storm, we lifted our hearts up to God in thanksgiving, as I prayed aloud for him, that God would keep him steadfast. His distinct and firm “Amen” testified that “the great transaction” was completed on his part, as it has been on God's part “from before the foundation of the world.” I bade him good-bye, with a promise from him that he would be present with his wife that night, and publicly confess Jesus before men.

I looked over the great audience for him that night, but did not see him, and was a little disappointed. Toward the close of my sermon I related in brief this interview, and then said:—

“It may be that my friend with whom I talked in the snow-storm this morning is here; if he is, I am sure he will want to confess his Lord before men.”

I had hardly gotten the words out of my mouth before he arose in his seat, and, lifting his hand, said:—

“I confess Jesus Christ as my Saviour.”

Moreover, his wife was at his side, and she also confessed Christ; then, without any stopping of the meeting, some twenty others followed with confessions. I was interested to notice that the man (he was a driver) had put on his Sunday clothes with which to come to the House of God and make confession. It was a beautiful testimony; and my prayer for many of my readers, those of them who are not the Lord's by confession, is, take God at his word, confess Jesus Christ, and become of purpose his disciples.

THE WITNESSING CHURCH.—2.

A MISSIONARY SERMON

By the late Rev. JOHN HARRIS, D.D.

"Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God."—Isa. xliii. 12.

First, then, I would illustrate the great truth that the Church of God is expressly designed, in its relative capacity, and as the depositary of the knowledge of salvation, to be his witness to the world.

Passing by all the interesting illustrations of this truth which might be drawn from antediluvian and patriarchal history, let us confine our attention to the Jewish and Christian churches. And here, on viewing these churches together, as parts of a great whole, we are instantly struck with the different ways in which they concur to answer their design as witnesses for God. The Jewish Church was a local stationary witness; and the duty of the world was to come and receive its testimony: the Christian Church is not local and stationary, but is to go to the world. The Jewish Church was an oracle, and the world was expected to come and inquire at its shrine: the Christian Church is an oracle also, but instead of waiting for the world to come to it, it is commanded to go into all the world, and to testify the Gospel of the grace of God to every creature.

In accordance with this representation of the Jewish Church, we find that it contained every pre-requisite for answering its end as a stationary witness for God; nothing was omitted calculated to promote this object; its early history was a history of miracles, to excite the attention, and draw to itself the eyes of the wonder-loving world; its ritual was splendid and unique; its members were distinguished in character from those of every other community on the face of the earth; its creed, or testimony, was eminently adapted to the existing state of the world, for it proclaimed a God, and promised a Saviour; its members possessed a personal interest in the truth of the testimony they gave; and, what was especially important, its geographical position was central. That large portion of the earth, whose waters flow into the Mediterranean, is the grand historical portion of the world as known to the ancients. Judea was situated in the midst of it, like the sun in the centre of the solar system. Placed at the top of the Mediterranean, it was, during each successive monarchy, always within sight of the nations; and its temple-fires, like the Pharos of the world, were always flinging their warning light across the gross darkness of heathenism—protesting against idolatry, witnessing for the one living and true God, inviting the nations to come and worship before Him, and foretelling the advent of One whose light should enlighten the world.

Thus studiously adapted, and divinely qualified to act as a stationary witness for God to the world, the Jewish Church is called on in the text to appear in this its official capacity, and the idolatrous nations are summoned to Judea to receive its testimony. Ages had elapsed since that Church had been called into existence, but still the worship of idols prevailed. Now, therefore, God is sublimely represented as determined to bring the great question to a close; his voice is heard issuing his mandate to all the nations of the earth, to all the idols and their votaries, to appear in Judea; and then calling forth the Israelites to give evidence in his behalf. "Bring forth deaf that have ears—the senseless idolaters; let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: what god among them can show us former things? Let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified; or, if they cannot do it, let them hear Me, and acknowledge that what I say is truth. Ye people of Israel are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I, even I, am God, and beside Me there is no Saviour."

As if the Almighty had said, "It is high time to bring this great controversy to a final decision; let all my rivals come." And we are to suppose them assembling. Moloch, "besmeared with infant blood," and all the cruel gods of the Ammonites; Rimmon, Ashtaroth, and all the licentious idols of Syria; Baal, Dagon, Tammuz, and all the false deities of Phœnicia; Apis, and all the monster-deities of Egypt. "Let them come from their fabled resorts in Ida, from the heights of Olympus, from the shrines of Delphos and Dodona, from their temple, groves, and hills—the whole Pantheon—the thirty thousand gods of heathen mythology, with all their retinue of priests and worshippers. And now," saith Jehovah, "having assembled, let them produce their witnesses to justify their conduct in receiving worship; and for this end: let them prove that one of their pretended prophecies was ever fulfilled. I am content to rest my claims on that single proof. Are they silent? Then let my witnesses stand forth; let the nation of Israel appear. Descendants of the patriarchs, children of the prophets, ye are my witnesses. Testify in my behalf before this assembled and idolatrous world. Read in their hearing the history of my conduct towards you, from the day that I brought you out of Egypt to the present moment, and they will be constrained to admit the fact of my existence, and the doctrine of my superintending providence.

"Tell them of all the miracles I have wrought in your behalf—and thus you will be witnesses to my almighty power. Inform them of all your apostasies from me, and rebellions against me, and of the way in which I have borne with and pardoned you—and thus you will be witnesses to my infinite patience. Tell them of all the predictions which I have caused my prophets to utter, and of the literal fulfilment they have received—and thus you will testify to my omniscience. Take them, in solemn procession, to Sinai, and repeat the laws which I there proclaimed when the mountain trembled—and thus you will attest my unspotted holiness and inflexible justice. Conduct them to my temple on Sion, lift up the veil of my sanctuary, let them see for themselves that no image stands in my shrine, no human sacrifice bleeds on my altar, no licentious rites pollute my worship—and thus you will be attesting the unity and spirituality of my essence, the purity and mercifulness of my character. Forget not to assure them that I am no respecter of persons—that there is mercy for them—that, as I live, I will not the death of a sinner. Lead them to the altar of sacrifice, and, as the victim bleeds, say to them, 'Behold, in a type, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.' Tell them that to Him have all my prophets given witness, and let them hear the glorious things which they have witnessed. Let my servant Isaiah stand forth and declare, that upon that sacrifice I have laid the iniquities of mankind; that He is wounded for their transgressions, tisement of their peace is upon Him, and that with his stripes they may be healed; that He shall see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied, for He shall save out of all nations a multitude which no man can number. Thus will you be my witnesses that I am God, and that beside Me there is no Saviour."

Now, such was the honourable office and the lofty intention of the Jewish Church; it was a stationary witness for God to the world; and the sublime scene described in connection with the text is only the figurative realisation of that idea. Through each successive age of that Church this Divine mandate may be said to have been issued to the world, directing it to repair to God's witnesses in Judea. But the world heeded it not. Individuals, indeed, resorted thither from far distant lands; but, in all the regions whence they came, idolatry still reigned. The leading nations had, each in succession, come into contact with God's witnesses; but, so far from receiving their testimony, they went on worshipping their idol-gods, and even essayed to enshrine them in the very Temple of Jehovah. Even the Jews themselves had lost the high and spiritual import of their own testimony. All things proclaimed that, if the world is to be enlightened and saved through the instrumentality of the Church, another Church must be set up, and another mode of witnessing be employed.

When the fulness of time was come, that Church was set up. You know its heavenly origin, its aggressive constitution, and its early apostolic history—all combining to prove that it was a new thing in the earth, a fresh witness for God. In another, and a nobler sense than before, God became his own witness. The Son of God, in person, assumed the office. In this capacity He had been predicted: "I have given Him," said God, "for a witness to the people." In this capacity He came; and, having traversed Judea in every direction, and found it hemmed in on all sides by the grossest idolatry—having found that He could nowhere step over its frontiers without entering the territory of an idol-god; having taken an ample survey of the world—what was his estimate of its moral condition? He lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said—for He found that He could obtain no fit audience on earth—"O, righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee!" And what, under these circumstances, was the course which He pursued? "To this end was I born," said He, "and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth," to the full manifestation of God. And, accordingly, his acts demonstrated the existence of God, his humanity embodied the spirituality of God, his character illustrated the perfections of God. He was the true "tabernacle of witness." The glorious train of the Divine perfections came down and filled the temple of his humanity. God was manifest in the flesh. His character left no attribute of the Divine nature unillustrated; his teaching left no part of the Divine will unrevealed; his kindness left no fear in the human heart unsoothed; his meritorious death left no amount of human guilt unatoned for. Wherever He went, and however He was employed, He was still winning for Himself that title which He wears in heaven—"The Faithful and True Witness." But, chiefly, Calvary was the place of testimony. There, when He could say no more for God, He bade the cross begin to speak. There, when his lips had uttered their testimony, He opened his summing up of all the promises, and of all the character of God; and the total was—universal and infinite love.

And now, if his first object had been thus to witness for God, his second was to arrange for the boundless diffusion of the testimony. No sooner has He worked out the great truth that God is love, than He provides that the world shall resound with the report. As if He had been sitting on the circle of the heavens, and surveying all the possibilities and events that could occur down to the close of the time, He answers the objections to this design before they are uttered, anticipates wants before they arise, and provides against dangers before they threaten. Was it necessary, for instance, that He should first distinctly legislate on the subject? "Go," said He—and He was standing but one step from the throne of heaven—"Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Plain as this command might at first appear, the duty which it enjoins is so novel, and the project which it contemplates so vast, that doubts are likely to arise as to its import and obligation; He repeats it, therefore, again and again—repeats it in other forms, as an old prediction that must be fulfilled, and as a new promise: "Then opened He their understandings, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things."

But peculiar qualifications will be necessary: "Ye shall receive power from on high, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." But peculiar dangers will assail them: "All power is mine," said He, "Go, and you shall move under the shield of Omnipotence; lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Thus, making the most comprehensive provision, and taking the whole responsibility of success on Himself, his last word to his witnesses was, "Go,"—his last act was to bless and dismiss them to their work,—and the last impression He left on their minds was, that his Church was to be essentially missionary, or aggressive.

And as this was the last indication of his will on earth, you know how his first act in heaven corresponded with it. Let the scenes of Pentecost attest. The eternal Spirit himself came down—came expressly to testify of Christ—came to be the great missionary Spirit of the Church, to "convince the world of sin." You know how the witnesses began at Jerusalem, when three thousand souls received their testimony. You know how their hesitation to quit Jerusalem and Judea was gradually overcome—how a Paul was added, like a new missionary element infused into their spirit—and you can conceive how they must have felt, in the terms of his new commission to be a witness to the Gentiles, as if their own original commission had been renewed and reinforced. You know how they were divinely allured further and further from Jerusalem—how vision after vision drew them on to invade the neighbouring territories of idolatry—and how, at length, when even a Paul evinced a reluctance to pass the last limit of Jewish restriction—even when he scrupled to leave regions of idolatry—the emblem of Europe—in the person of the Macedonian suppliant, saying, "Come over and help us." Bursting that last enclosure, the uttermost circle of restriction, he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision; and the Church found itself fully committed to its lofty office of traversing the world.

But was there no danger lest the Church should yet, under the influence of its old attachments, cast back a lingering look to Judea, lest it should debase and localise religion by regarding Jerusalem as its rallying point, and the Temple as its home? Judaism, and the place where for ages it has dwelt, are forthwith swept away; henceforth but two parties are to be left on the earth—the missionary witnessing Church of Christ, and the listening world. Thus Judea, which had been the goal of the old religion, the resting-place after its wanderings, now became the starting point of the Christian Church for the race of the world. The old economy had expected the world to be missionary, and to send to it. The new economy requires the Church to be missionary, and to send to the world. And if the waiting and stationary character of that Church had been emblematically represented by the bending cherubim on the mercy seat, the new missionary Church was henceforth to be represented by another mighty angel, flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, that dwell on the earth.

And, now, we might have thought, the Saviour has surely made it sufficiently apparent that his people are to be his witnesses to the world. Nothing more can be necessary to show that this great object enters into the very design and principle of his Church. But not so thought the Saviour Himself. Once more does He come forth and reiterate the truth. When we might have supposed that his voice would be heard no more, once again does He come forth, and break the silence of the Church; and the subject on which He speaks is the missionary character of his Church. Not that his Church had lost sight of its office. His witnesses were carrying their testimony in all directions. But, as if the angel having the everlasting Gospel did not yet speed on his way fast enough to satisfy the yearnings of infinite compassion, or as if He feared that angel would stop ere the whole earth, the last creature, had heard the Gospel testimony, He came forth, personally, and announced, "The Spirit and the bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst, come; and whosoever will, let him come, and take the water of life freely."

Oh! where is the tongue that can do justice to the boundless benevolence of this final declaration of Christ? What is the comparison which can adequately illustrate it? Picture to your minds a large company of travellers, destitute of water, while crossing one of the vast deserts of the East. For days previous they have had barely sufficient to moisten their parched lips; but now their stock is quite exhausted. Onwards they toil for a time, in the hope of finding a refreshing spring. But the unclouded sun above, and the burning sands beneath, rendering some of them unable to proceed, they lie down never to rise again. The rest agree to separate, and to take different directions, in the hope of multiplying their chances of discovering water. After long wander-stream. Slaking his raging thirst, he immediately thinks of his fellow travellers. Looking around and perceiving one in the distance, he lifts up his voice, and shouts to him, with all his returning strength, to come. He communicates the reviving signal to another still further off, and he to a third, till the very extremities of the desert ring with the cheering call to come.

That desert is the moral waste of the world; those perishing travellers, perishing by millions, are our fellow-men; that living spring is the redemption of Christ: the first that drank of it was his Church; that Church, every member of it, directly or indirectly, is to lift up his voice to the world, with the Divine invitation to come; while the Spirit of Christ, speaking through them, gives the call effect. Every one that hears the call is to transmit it further still, till it has reached the very last of human kind, and the world echoes with the welcome sound.

Such is the Scripture theory of the Christian Church. Its members are witnesses for Christ to the world. Every place to which their instrumentality reaches is meant to be a centre for extending it to a point further still. Every individual added to it is meant to be an additional agent for propagating the salvation onwards, till a chain of living voices has been carried around the globe, and from pole to pole, and the earth grows vocal with the voice of the Church witnessing for Christ.

OUR COUNTRYMEN IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers interested in the tea planters in various parts of India, will be glad to learn that Rev. Isaac F. Row, who has been for years a "winner of souls," European and native, in Southern India, has been spending several months, with much encouragement, among the tea planters of Upper Assam. Rev. H. Rylands Brown has been revisiting the planters in the Darjeeling district, welcomed, and blest in many places where no minister has been before except himself in former years. The directors desire to extend the work among the tea, coffee, and cinchona planters of India, as well as along the railway lines. Rev. H. G. de St. Dalmas is again in India doing "the work of an evangelist," as well as superintending the work of others, and planning for more to follow.

Rev. P. R. Mackay lately passed through London on his way to Mussoorie, where he is to supply, during the hot season, the place in the Union Church left vacant by the return of Rev. J. Gelson Gregson. Next winter he will do evangelistic work in the plains. He has left his congregation and home, in Scotland, for a year; and I would ask for him the prayers of your readers.—Yours faithfully, John Fordyce.

THE INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL SOCIETY is making every effort to extend the important work of Medical Missions among the women of India. Several thoroughly trained ladies are ready for the work.

MISS READE'S WORK IN INDIA.—Some explanation has been asked for regarding the name "South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission." It has been chosen by Miss Reade as denoting two special branches of her work. Her present Mission House, at Trivady, is situated on the highway from Cuddalon to Madras, and a congregation can at any time be gathered at the gate; the hedges denote the dwellings of Mussulmen thus carefully guarded for the seclusion of the women confined therein. Miss Clara M. S. Lowe has for some time past undertaken to supply information to friends interested in the Mission. She wishes it to be known that her address is now changed from

THE NIGHT-SCHOOL AT MILDMAY.

TWO PICTURES.

Another winter's work, in connection with this night-school, which occupies a position absolutely unique, was brought to a close on Wednesday evening last week. The event is, in all its features, one of the brightest and happiest with which we are acquainted. The scene at the tea-tables is always invested with peculiar charm. At the head of each sits the teacher, between whom and the members of her class there is a real affection. All over the room a brisk and animated conversation is kept up, and flowers contribute not a little to the fair prospect before us.

Soon the men are assembled in the large hall above. Their appearance would justify the thought that they are representatives of a class above the labourers and bricklayers, and many other of the one hundred and sixty occupations, to which, as Mr. Badenoch by and by tells us, one thousand and more men on the books belong. We further learn now that there has been an average attendance of 360 on the sixty-eight nights on which the school has been open, and that the men have been divided into forty-seven classes, with fifty teachers. The amount contributed by the men themselves for school material and the library was just over £21. As to the results of the session's work, Mr. Badenoch goes on to state that they are of three kinds. The intellectual improvement is seen in the positions taken in all the classes, and Mr. Tinnear's examination list bears witness to the success attained in the various subjects, 324 men having won certificates. Of the 212 who went in for the Scripture examination, only twenty failed. Eighty men were also entitled to receive a Bible or book for not having missed attendance more than three times. As to the moral results, the very atmosphere of the school must have a powerful effect on the daily life of the men in their work and in their homes. Then sixty have joined the ranks of the temperance army, and if that should seem a small number out of so many, it must be remembered that the great majority of the scholars were total abstainers already. As to the spiritual results, an exact statement is, of course, impossible. But it is not surprising, with the talents of the teachers consecrated to God, and then given to the men for his sake, and the prayer constantly offered by them before school opens, and by the men themselves every night, that there is cause for rejoicing in many conversions. For all this there was a thanksgiving meeting on the last night of the session.

Hearty was the cheering that greeted this report, as well as that given to the teachers—all ladies,—to the Countess of Suffolk and Berkshire, who distributed the prizes, and to Gen. Sir Robert Phayre, who presided.

Mr. Mathieson, in a brief statement, also pointed out that this school is a wonderful blessing to the neighbourhood.

The second picture, that we will leave our readers themselves to fill in from the outlines sketched above, is that of the school on a school night. In every class there is an open Bible for twenty minutes or half an hour, during which, with a gentleness and loving earnestness that cannot fail to impress, the teacher dwells upon some truth in the Scripture story they have read together. Then the regular lessons are patiently and carefully taught. At the close there is a brief Gospel address and prayer, and after the regular school many of the men join with their teachers in fervent prayer for a blessing on the different classes, and on the members of the school. As we fill in the details of this picture, and think of the glowing colours in which at length it shall be presented before our wondering eyes, we feel more than ever how great is the privilege of Christian work, how grand and glorious its far-reaching results.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE. — Rev. T. de Witt Talmage, D.D., on Sunday morning, March 6, received

A FRUITFUL WORK.

During the winter months, on successive Sabbath evenings, many a straggler along the Edgware-road has been attracted by sounds such as do not on week-nights issue from the Metropolitan Music Hall. A pause for a few moments only tends to deepen curiosity, until one after another steps inside, and enjoys the Gospel songs, choruses, and anthems rendered by Mr. Charles Cook's harmonious choir. The value of good singing is amply proved on these occasions, until some 2000 persons are assembled to listen to the stirring preaching of Mr. Cook.

For nearly seventeen years this evangelist has been lifting up Christ in this neighbourhood, beginning in the expansive area of Hyde-park, where as many as 4000 persons have been gathered together at a time. The seed thus sown during the first few summers brought forth fruit which necessitated the establishment of a permanent mission, and a hall was accordingly secured, and appropriately named the Hyde-park Hall.

Here the Lord continued to bless his word, until a strong band of earnest converts was formed for evangelistic work. But soon these quarters became too confined for the Sunday evening services, and the Music Hall was hired to meet this need at a cost of £5 per evening.

Each of these three spots has now become hallowed in the history of many who have proved the faithfulness of God to his promise in causing his word to accomplish that which He pleased, and to prosper in the thing whereto He sent it. Pastors, missionaries, and evangelists may be now found labouring, not only in Great Britain, but also in America, Jamaica, Australia, and the Cape of Good Hope, who have gone forth from this corner of the vineyard to declare unto others the Gospel which they learnt there.

One of the most encouraging of recent cases is that of a comedian, converted in the Music Hall, who is now preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ with much acceptance in the provinces. A well-known evangelist told us last week that one of the most solemn impressions made on his heart before his conversion was whilst listening half drunk to one of Mr. Cook's addresses in Hyde-park.

The audience at the Music Hall is thoroughly representative of the middle classes. The labourer, the artisan, the small and the more important shop-keepers, are side by side, whilst a good number of well-to-do persons are distinguishable—some critical, some anxious, and many, thank God, convinced that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to those who believe.

As a preacher Mr. Cook is bright and forcible, impressing his hearers with the feeling that he speaks what he believes, and means what he says. He has travelled a good deal, and his experience in visiting English and Continental prisons lends additional interest to his discourses.

If any of our readers can assist in this work their co-operation would be heartily welcomed, whilst others perhaps may feel disposed to help defray the expenses attendant upon the hire of the Music Hall.

An interesting little booklet entitled "Striking Conversions, or Fruit abounding from Hyde Park," gives a good idea of what the Lord has wrought. It may be obtained from Mr. Cook, at Hyde Park Hall, Stourcliffe-street, Edgware-road, W.

THE MISSIONARY CHURCH OF BELGIUM.—At the annual synod to be held in Brussels in July, this Church, composed almost entirely of those who formerly were Roman Catholics, will commemorate its jubilee. In this period, twenty-seven churches and stations have been established, all of which are centres from which the light of Gospel truth spreads its rays far around. In eighty-three different places the Gospel is regularly preached, and in about sixty others the work is carried on by means of occasional meetings, open-air preaching, &c. Colportage work also plays a considerable part in the circulation of the Scriptures. Most of the churches are very active, and the pastors and evangelists are helped in their

HOUSE of REST for WORKERS.

In the opening paragraph of her annual report Miss Mason asks, "What can one have to say year after year about a work which seems to contain so little that would 'tell' upon paper?" Yet in page after page the reader finds an ever-increasing charm, and in closing the pamphlet feels that here is a record of work which illustrates in a wonderful way the power and beauty of Christian love.

We pass from the necessity for the work in the weariness and exhaustion which follow sustained labour amongst the poor and outcast, to the simple narrative, glowing with interest, of the blessing which flows therefrom to those who have found, either at Kilburn or Eastbourne, a sweet season of refreshing for soul and body. Over two hundred at the former place, and nearly four hundred at the seaside branch, had thus been blessed during the twelve months covered by the report. Then every heart will be overflowing with thankfulness as the narrative sets forth how the work has been sustained, and how graciously the Lord has manifested his presence in many a time of waiting upon Him for guidance, and counsel, and help. All communications should be addressed to Miss Mason, 7, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

NEWCASTLE CITY MISSION.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held in the hall of the Y.W.C.A., Saville-place, on Monday, March 28. Dr. Bruce, chairman, stated that the work of the Mission had been more successful during the past than in any previous year. Addresses were given by Rev. H. E. Fox, Durham, and Revs. W. Lenwood and R. Leitch, Newcastle. In the evening a largely-attended meeting was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Blackett-street. Messrs. Menmuir and Fairfull, city missionaries, gave impressive accounts of arduous yet successful work.

THE WELCOME MISSION.—The report of this Mission, presented at the annual meeting last week, gave a very satisfactory account of the work carried on at Harrow Green. The average attendance at the schools has been good, as has been at at the Bible-classes for young men and women. Besides various agencies for promoting the welfare of the people, a young men's Christian band is doing good work. Rev. J. Elvey, in an earnest address, said he hoped that the meeting would stir them up to earnest work for Christ. So much depends on the children, that to train them aright is an incalculable benefit to society. The proposition to erect a larger school building, the present one being quite inadequate for the number desirous of attending, was warmly supported, £100 being promised on behalf of the Ragged School Union.

SAILORS' REST, DEVONPORT.—Miss Weston has now been enabled to buy the three public-houses between the Sailors' Rest and the Royal Dockyard, and they are now closed, and the last barrel of beer rolled out. The building and furnishing of the block that will shortly occupy their site will cost £7000, and £1550 remains due on the purchase of the Dock Gates Inn. Mr. John Cory has promised £200, and a lady has sent £100. It is no small mercy that these houses should thus have been purchased for God. A seaman, once a warrant-officer, but reduced to the ranks through drink, said that he would give a fortune to the work if he had it; for at the "Dock Gates Inn" he drank the first glass that launched him on the drunkard's course; he is now a tetotaler, and a Christian. In the Royal Naval Hospital, a poor fellow said to Miss Weston, between his gasps, "God bless you, and give you those grog shops; I'm praying day and night for it; they were my ruin."

STRANGERS' REST.—At the monthly meeting for workers and friends, on Friday last, Mr. J. T. Isaac described some of the various and blessed work carried on by his devoted band of fellow-workers, including a new effort to reach poor street lads. An additional interest was given to the meeting by the presence of five out of the seven missionaries who this week sail for the land of Sinim, in connection with the "China Inland Mission." We can imagine nothing more calculated to refresh and encourage Christian workers than to listen to these young sisters, as in simple but graphic story they tell, one after the other, how, since the day when they gave themselves to Christ as Lord and Master, He had led them step by step, removing first one obstacle, then another. The meeting closed with an address by Mr. Frank White, pecu-

HOMES AND HAUNTS OF JESUS.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS

BY MISS L. M. VON FINKÈLSTEIN.

(Concluded from last week.)

The hand mill is indispensable in a country house in Palestine. Every family grinds its own corn twice a day. If this were to stop, it would be a signal that some terrible calamity had befallen them. Jeremiah speaks of the Babylonish captivity as a time when the sound of the millstones shall cease, and in the Revelation we read, in connection with the doom of the mystic Babylon that "the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee." To a dweller in Palestine that would mean that every woman in the land was stricken down or had died. As sure as the sun rises, so sure are you to hear at regular hours the grinding of the millstone in every village.

The women of our country wear long loose sleeves, and when one of them is about to grind corn she throws the sleeves right back and ties the ends together, so that they are out of the way. In doing this she bares her arms and displays the armlets and bracelets that she wears. You will sometimes see the arms literally covered with these ornaments. They are a woman's dowry in the East. She will sit down before her door right in the sunshine in front of her mill, and there she grinds away, turning the handle of the upper millstone till a sufficient quantity has been ground. At the same time, the husband, if an artisan, say a carpenter, sits on the ground doing his work, and as they work they sing together.

We read in Deuteronomy that no man was to take the upper or the nether millstone in pledge, because that would be equal to taking the bread out of the people's mouths. This humane law is still in force. I have known of some instances where a creditor took these stones in pledge; but, if they had not been redeemed before the hour for grinding, they have been taken back, with the remark, "God forgive you, but I will not be guilty of taking the bread out of the mouths of your family."

The women bake their bread twice a day, morning and evening. The bakehouse is situated outside, in front of the cottage or hut, and is built in a conical shape. It is only large enough for two women to sit in a squatting position. In the centre is a circular mound of pebbles and yellow clay. You will remember that Christ speaks about the "grass of the field" being cast into the oven. This grass is not like the grass in this country. It is a little low shrub, that grows plentifully, with beautiful little flowers on it, sometimes pink, white, or blue, but mostly yellow. The shrub contains a great deal of rosin, and it is used because of this combustible element in it. You will see the women going out every morning searching among the hills for this shrub, and coming back with large bunches of it on their heads. They allow it to lie for a day to "wilt," and then, when they throw it on the oven, it blazes up and gives a fine heat to the pebble stones on which the bread is baked. In using this beautiful illustration, our Saviour very probably saw the women at their daily occupation, and made use of it, as He often made use of the home life of the people, to teach some lesson. He wanted to teach them of the daily watchful care of his Father, and He said: "If God so clothe this beautiful grass of the field that you are going to burn up in the oven, how much more will He care for you, oh ye of little faith!" They could see the force of the illustration, and appreciate it.

The mistress of the house generally does the baking; but, if she is not there, the eldest daughter attends to it. The heat in the oven is so great that the young women often get inflammation in the eyes. We read that Leah was tender eyed; that simply meant attended to the baking, and the heat of the oven had caused this little inflammation of the eyelids. They do not, as a rule, allow the daughters to see to the baking, unless the mother is dead, for fear they should spoil their eyes before they get married; they do not mind so much about it afterwards!!

Every well-to-do family keeps some sheep or goats, and the younger members of the family take charge of the flocks. When the shepherd is attending to the flock he walks ahead and calls them. Strange to say, no matter what is the size of the flock every sheep has its name, and answers when called by the shepherd. You recollect how our Saviour used this illustration when speaking about those who were his followers:—"My sheep hear my voice, and follow Me; but a stranger will they not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers." This is true of the flocks in Palestine to-day. If a stranger speaks to them, the sheep will stop and listen. They know it is not the voice of their shepherd. They look at each other in a frightened, troubled kind of way, and then they scatter all over the hills. When my brother and myself were children, our parents used to stay in the country towns and villages in the summer, and in that way we became well acquainted with the farming life in Palestine. We used to go with the shepherds and shepherdesses. We would sometimes want to take the place of the shepherd, and would walk ahead and call the sheep. We would speak to them very fluently, but they would never obey our call.

The sheep and the goats are pastured together, but when they go to the fold the shepherd parts them. They divide off just like a regiment, the black goats going to one side and the white sheep to the other. The reason of that is that if they are put in the fold together, the goats begin to annoy the sheep. How well that explains the saying of our Lord about the judgment, when God "shall separate the one from the other, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." The people to whom He spoke were perfectly familiar with this, and so they understood what He meant.

There is a general impression that in our country all the women veil their faces. That is a mistake. The Bedouin women and the farming women do not do this, only the city women. If a woman is passing along, and sees a number of men staring at her, she will cover her face with a veil. We read that Rebekah veiled her face when she saw Isaac coming. The veils that our women use are not at all like the small ones used in this country. We read that Boaz put six measures of barley into Ruth's veil. The holiday veil which I am now wearing is a large one, as you see, but the working veil is even larger. It is made of strong linen, and very flexible. The women still use their veils for carrying wheat or barley that they may have gleaned, or you will see them coming home from market, carrying their veils, on the top of their heads, filled with the things they have bought.

You all know the parable of the woman and the ten pieces of silver, one of which she lost; how she looked for it till she found it, and then her neighbours rejoiced with her; and how our Lord said there is like joy in heaven over a sinner that repenteth. Of course when I read that I understood it perfectly, because I was brought up in the land, and knew the manners and customs of the people. My attention was not specially drawn to it till I went to the United States, where I heard an infidel lecturer refer to it. He was throwing ridicule on Christ's words, and asked if anyone supposed it possible that a woman would make such a fuss, and take so much trouble, over a miserable little silver coin, and that she would rejoice over finding it as much as the angels would rejoice over a repenting sinner. Of course the poor man did not know anything about what he was criticising, or he would not have been so foolish. The piece of silver that the woman lost was one of the ten pieces on the necklace that she wears and which shows that she is a married woman. In Palestine the husband does not give his wife a plain gold ring as in this land, but he gives her a silver necklace, such as the one I have got. takes the most anxious care of it, so that none of the pieces may be lost, which would be counted a great disgrace, as showing carelessness on her part. People would look at her with suspicion and perhaps disdain, and her husband would scorn her for being so negligent. It is not the value of the coin, but the fact that her husband gave it to her.

Now you can understand the meaning of the illustration used by our Lord. Sometimes one of these pieces of silver will get loose, and will drop off. The woman discovers this, and as she had been in the house all the time she knows she must have lost it there. She goes to the door of the house and tells her neighbours, who may be sitting outside mending garments or engaged in some other way. She tells them of her loss, and they are full of sympathy with her. "Oh, neighbours," she says, "come and help me to look for the lost piece of silver; what will my husband say?" She lights her little oil lamp, and takes a broom, and carefully looks in every nook and corner of the house, some of the neighbours assisting her in the search. By and by she finds it; then she goes again to the door, and calls out, "Oh, neighbours, I have found the piece that was lost." The neighbours come round and help her to replace it in her necklace, and there is general rejoicing among them because they know that she can go abroad without fear or shame. They lift up their hands, and they cry:—"We thank and praise Thee, oh God, that Thou hast permitted her to find her lost piece of silver. The Lord be with you; your husband will not now scorn you. Praise the Lord." Was not that a beautiful illustration for our Saviour to take when He said that in like manner there is joy in the presence of the angels over one sinner that repenteth?

THAT CASTLE OF MINE.

BY F. LANGBRIDGE.

An Englishman's home is his castle—
Though only a poor little hut,
'Tis safe from intruder as palace of Tudor,
When once its front door has been shut.
Now, mine is the smallest of castles—
Its state-room is twelve feet by nine—
But woe to the raider or daring invader
Who threatens that castle of mine.
I'll tell you some enemies, fierce and malign,
I mean to keep out of that castle of mine.

The first of my foes is Bad Temper—
He's bad as the worst of the lot;
By little and little he'll spoil your good victual,
And poison the tea in your pot.
He's even been known, in his tantrums,
To smash half the dishes and plates:
I've a stick for his noddle will soon make him toddle,
If ever he darkens my gates.
He's as sour as a sloe and as bitter as brine,
And I'll draw him right out of that castle of mine.

The next of my foes is Unthrift, sirs:
Once let him set foot in the house,
You'll find he makes haste, sirs, your substance to waste, sirs,
And leave you as poor as a mouse.
He'll pawn every stick in the dwelling—
You'll scarce keep a shoe to your feet,
And, not to mince matters, he'll leave you in tatters
To loaf at the end of the street.
Come, comrades and brothers, we'll band and combine
To keep the rogue out of your castle and mine.

The last of my foes is Strong Liquor—
A villain ferocious and grim!
He'll set your head aching, he'll set your hand shaking,
He'll dry up the strength of each limb.
Your poor little children he'll beggar;
He'll rob you of peace and good name,
Of health and enjoyment, of purse and employment,
And sink you in ruin and shame.
Strong drink is a mocker! Come, lads, let us sign,
And banish the fiend from your castle and mine.
